Richmond, Va.—The service of consecration of St. Stephen's Church, Westhampton, took place at 4:30 o'clock on the afternoon of Thursday, May 25. The impressive rites were conducted by the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, Bishop of Virginia and the Presiding Bishop of the Church. He was assisted by the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, bishop-coadjutor, and the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, suffragan bishop, of the Diocese of Virginia, together with the Rev. Dr. Giles B. Palmer, rector of St. Stephen's, and the Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D. The Rev. John Page Williams served as marshal. The date of this service fell on the last day of the annual meeting in Richmond of the Diocesan Council and a special invitation was extended to all the clergy of the diocese in attendance. Bishop Tucker was received at the entrance by the church wardens and vestry, followed by a procession of the bishops and clergy, to the chancel. Special music was rendered by St. Stephen's choir under the leadership of the director, Miss Myrtis Harris, and the organist, Hilton Rufty.

St. Stephen's congregation was established in 1911 when St. Stephen's Chapel was erected on Grove Avenue and the Three Chopt Road, and the first rector was the Rev. Zebulon S. Farland; resigning in 1914, he was succeeded by the Rev. Thomas Hubert-Jones for two years and then by the Rev. James D. Gibson, who served as minister for the next five years. The present rector, the Rev. Giles Buckner Palmer, D. D., began his ministry at St. Stephen's in 1921. Under his kindly and most capable leadership this young parish has grown to be one of the largest congregations in the diocese. St. Stephen's Church, a handsome stone Gothic edifice, was erected in 1927-28 and the architect was the late Mr. Frank R. Watson, of Philadelphia. Other buildings on the extensive church grounds include the rectory, erected in 1913, and the parish house which was completed in 1939. The liquidation of all parish indebtedness, which is a prerequisite to consecration, has been made possible by generous contributions to the building fund over the years and recently by many advance payments of pledges. The committee in charge of the consecration service included Mr. James M. Ball, Jr., chairman, Dr. Douglass Vanderhoof, senior warden; Capt. Charles E. Moore, junior warden; Mrs. Thomas W. Purcell, Mrs. Thomas W. Murrell, and Messrs. W. Welby Beverley, Robert E. Peyton, Jr., and Lewis C. Williams, of the vestry.

The consecration of St. Stephen's by Bishop Tucker is one of his last official acts before he retires on June 1st as Bishop of Virginia, and is especially appropriate in view of the fact that Bishop Tucker holds his membership in St. Stephen's Church, together with Mrs. Tucker and their two sons.

MISSIONARY IN CANAL ZONE HOLDS 8 SUNDAY SERVICES

New York, N. Y.—A newly appointed missionary in the Panama Canal Zone finds plenty to do, according to a report received by the Overseas Department of the National Council from the Rev. George Packard, who went to the Canal Zone recently to be rector of Christ Church, Colon. Bishop Harry Beal hopes that eventually he may be able to send Mr. Packard to begin work in the Colombia section of the District.

Mr. Packard writes:

"Each Sunday I have seven services, as I take both Christ Church and St. Mary's (Silver City) work. So far I am able to do all that two men formerly did save one thing. That is on Sunday nights I just can't seem to be able to be in both churches for the evening service at 7:30 P. M. I am working on that though, so don't be surprised if I find a way to do it. I work the midweek services out also by having Saints days here at 6 and at St. Mary's at 7 A. M.; then regularly on Wednesday here and Thursday there, the same for the midweek night services. So I'm glad to report that as far as services, hospital, and sick calling, I am doing both men's work and not finding it too difficult, save not enough time left over to do what I am doing now, writing letters—have a big backlog of them to answer. Have time to do some new calling and confirmation recruiting on the side.

"I didn't give you my Sunday schedule; just in case you are interested: 6, Christ Church Low Mass; 7 A. M., St. Mary's Sung Eucharist and Sermon; 9 A. M., Sung Eucharist and Sermon Christ Church; 10:30 A. M., Church School, Christ Church; 2:30 P. M., Baptisms St. Mary's; 3 P. M., Church School, St. Mary's; 4 P. M., Baptisms Christ Church; 7:30 P. M., Evensong and Sermon, Christ Church. And believe me every Sunday save a rare one indeed, I have baptisms at both places. Had to schedule a definite time for baptisms to keep from going around in a baptism whirl. Counting 'em over find there are eight, but I don't really count the 10:30 Church school, as all I do is teach a class or take the closing exercises, as I don't get through breakfast in time to open the Church school."

SPECIAL REVIEW HELD IN RECTOR'S HONOR

Shreveport, La.—An honor rarely accorded a civilian was given to the Rev. James M. Owens, rector of St. Mark's Church, when several hundred soldiers from Barksdale Field paraded before him in a special review held in his honor. Dr. Owens was so honored because of the many services to military personnel he had rendered in his capacity as rector of St. Mark's, and he was presented with a certificate of appreciation by Col. William B. Wright, Commanding officer at the Field.

"This certificate," read the award, "is presented in appreciation of special services rendered the personnel of Barksdale Field. Your efforts in providing clean recreational activities are considered of great value in improving morale of the men stationed here. Your fine spiritual influence has been inestimable." Dr. Owens was officially conducted from Shreveport by a military guard of honor, and stood beside Colonel Wright at the review, held at retreat on May 9. He was further escorted by a civilian committee of honor consisting of six of the vestrymen of his Parish.

Conference Organized

By Persons Interested in Use of Motion Pictures in Religious Education

New York, N. Y.—Twelve clergymen and Churchwomen who are particularly interested in the use of motion pictures in Christian education, met with officers of the National Council's Division of Christian Education and Department of Promotion for a two-days' study of visual methods of education.

From the National Council: the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor, the Rev. Dr. Vernon McMaster, Mr. Robert D. Jordan, the Rev. Dr. G. Warfield Hobbs, Miss Frances Young, Miss Charlotte Tompkins.

From the dioceses: the Rev. Messrs. Kenneth W. Mann, Yonkers, N. Y.; Matthew Warren, St. Louis; Stanley E. Ashton, Arlington, Va.; Richard H. Baker, Baltimore; W. F. Allison, Belvidere, N. J.; E. B. Jewell, Kansas City; R. J. Murphy, Howe, Ind.; Edward Theopold, New York; J. K. Friedrich, Hollywood; Mrs. Joseph L. White, Montclair, N. J.; Miss L. M. Boyd, Boston; Miss Irene Scudds, Southern Ohio.

The conference was organized because of frequent and persistent requests from religious educators within the Church, urging that the National Council take steps "to explore the needs for teaching aids in Visual Education and give direction for the development of them for use in the church; to work for the unification of the scattered efforts and accomplishments in the field of Visual Education so that there will not be overlapping of efforts or useless expenditure of money; to discover ways to keep the Church's educational methods and techniques abreast of the contemporary ones employed in secular education and of the training methods employed in industry and in the armed forces."

Plans agreed upon contemplate a continued study of use of visual methods in parishes; establishment of film libraries; preparation of a pamphlet on suggested methods of using films in Christian education; appointment of a film board of review to approve films offered by film libraries.

Rev. Laurence Butler Ridgeley
The Rev. Canon Laurence Butler

Ridgeley, S. T. D., former missionary in China, died on May 8, in San Francisco. Services and burial took place at Grace Cathedral, San Francisco. Dr. Ridgeley was an honorary canon, and acting sacrist at Grace Cathedral.

He was born in Philadelphia in 1863. Graduated from University of Pennsylvania, and the West Philadephia Divinity School. He was ordained in 1887. His first ministry was as assistant at All Souls' Church, New York; he then became rector of St. Stephen's, Philadelphia, and still later, was vicar of St. Paul's, Salt Lake City.

Volunteering for missionary service, Dr. Ridgeley went to Wuchang, China, in 1903. He was Dean of Boone Divinity School in 1906; Dean of the Theological School of the China Mission in 1913; acting Dean Central Theological School of the Chung Hua Sheng Kung Hui from 1922 to 1928. He served as professor of Church History at the Divinity School of the Pacific, after his return from China in 1928. He was the author of a number of books on religious subjects. Mrs. Ridgeley survives.

BISHOP'S FUND

Third of United Youth Offering Goes to China

New York, N. Y.—One-third of the United Youth Offering received on Youth Sunday, October 31, 1943, has been given to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief, designated for INDUSCO . . . the Chinese Industrial Cooperative Movement. The amount given is $1,537.96, and it will be used in the Bailie Schools in Lanchow and Shuangshihpu, China. These schools are for the technical training of cooperative workers, and the schools themselves are run on a cooperative basis, with their own consumers' cooperatives. Episcopal missionary John Foster worked with INDUSCO in China for a time before he was loaned to the Chinese Government for special service.

In acknowledging the gift, Presiding Bishop Tucker said: "Will you please express to everyone who had a share in this giving, the gratitude of our Church and my personal appreciation for what this money will mean to the youth of China. Machines are the sinews of the Chinese Cooperative Movement, and through your gifts the Bailie School will be enabled to give more boys the opportunity of technical training in the whole process of metal work, leather tanning, and the building of textile machines."

Another gift to the Presiding Bishop's Fund came from the Rt. Rev. Fred Ingley, Bishop of Colorado, who sent $63.02, representing the offering taken at the annual meeting of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese. The Auxiliary designated the offering for War Prisoners' Relief.

BISHOP STONEY'S DIOCESE LARGER THAN PROVINCES I AND II COMBINED

El Paso, Texas—Preaching in a movie house in El Paso, Bishop James M. Stoney wondered whether the advertising displayed all over the front of the house referred to him. "A hair-raising screen shocker," the signs said.

On a semi-annual visitation to the Texas part of his jurisdiction, the bishop was seventeen days on the road, driving, with Mrs. Stoney, 1,850 miles in their car, confirming forty-nine people in nine services and attending many other meetings. It is this Texas area, as large as the state of Maine, which gives Bishop Stoney's jurisdiction such a long name, "Missionary District of New Mexico and Southwest Texas."

They are thinking of changing the name to "Rio Grande" as that river plays a leading part in the geography of the region. Other jurisdictions have been named for rivers, the Niobrara, the Platte. New Mexico says "Reeo Grandy," Texas says "Rye-o Grand." The jurisdiction is larger than the first and second provinces combined. Opposite corners are as far apart as New York and Chicago, but without similar transportation facilities. Brewster County, the largest in Texas, has 6,000 square miles, 1,000 more than Connecticut. The county has 6,000 people, of whom 4,000 live in Alpine, the county seat. One man was thirty-eight miles from his mail box until the building of a road brought it to within four miles. Another rancher said to the bishop, "We have only a small place, twenty sections." Only 12,800 acres. Their nearest neighbor is more than four miles away.

"It is lovely country," Bishop Stoney says. "The canyon of the Rio Grande is amazingly beautiful, though but slightly known. The plains are fascinating in the spring, though I think we got as much thrill from the antelope and cactus as we did from the plains or the mountains."

The Bishop has a new honor, a Navajo baby named for him, James Stoney Piento. Answering a query, the bishop says, "What we need is hospital equipment—blankets, sheets, soap—or money to help pay upkeep and travel, but that is not a 'romantic' appeal."

CONSECRATION OF BISHOP OF IOWA MAY 31

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop H. St. George Tucker has taken order for the consecration of the Very Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, bishop-elect of the Diocese of Iowa. The ceremony will take place at 10 A. M., May 31, in Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, Iowa, with Bishop Tucker as consecrator.

Co-consecrators will be the Rt. Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter of Alabama, and the Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, of Louisiana. The bishop-elect will be presented by the Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman, of Kentucky, and the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker, of Nebraska. The attending presbyters will be the Rev. Messrs. J. Reginald Ballett, Baltimore, and Frederic G. Williams, Clinton, Iowa. The sermon will be preached by the Rt. Rev. Stephen E. Keeler, of Minnesota, and Bishop Brinker will read the Litany. The Rev. James Wilson Hunter, of Louisville, will serve as Deputy Registrar.

ST. JAMES CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA, LA., CELEBRATES ITS CENTENNIAL

Alexandria, La.—This Church celebrated its 100th Anniversary May 5, 6, and 7, 1944.

St. James Mission was started in 1839 by the Rt. Rev. Leonidas Polk, bishop of Arkansas and the Southwest. The Rev. John Burk was placed in charge of this mission, and served it from 1842-1844. St. James was received as a parish, in union with the diocese June 15, 1844. The Rev. Amos Dunnam McCoy became its first rector. The first church was consecrated by Bishop Polk, June 13, 1854; it was destroyed by fire several years later. The cornerstone of the present beautiful edifice was laid on January 27, 1926, by the Rt. Rev. Davis Sessums, D. D., bishop of Louisiana, and the first service was held in it on October 18, 1926. The Rev. W. S. Slack, D. D., was then rector and the building was erected under his supervision and direction.

The Centennial was opened by a short service and an organ recital, May 5. An historical pageant was presented by the children of Church School, under the direction of Miss Estelle Warren on the following afternoon. Sunday night, May 7, the Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, D. D., bishop of Louisiana, delivered the sermon and confirmed a class of fifty, presented by the Rev. J. Hodge Alves, rector. A large congregation and many visitors, approximately 500, took part in the service.

LARGEST MITE BOX OFFERING FOR 36TH TIME

Albany, N. Y.—The Church School of St. Paul's Parish achieved a unique record on May 6; at the annual Presentation Service held at the Cathedral of All Saints, when they presented a Mite Box Lenten Offering totalling $1,000. This was the largest offering made in the diocese; and it is the 36th time that this Church School has won the annual award for the largest Mite Box Offering. Every year since 1908, with the exception of 1923, when St. Paul's won second place, this record has been kept intact.

In recognition of this unusual achievement the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. H. St. George Tucker, D. D., and the bishop of Albany, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., have written letters of felicitation to the pupils and teachers. Photostatic copies of these letters have been made and placed in the parish archives. The rector of the parish is the Rev. George A. Taylor and the Rev. Harry G. Campbell is the assistant.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR WRITING LETTERS TO PRISONERS

New York, N. Y.—Instructions for writing letters to prisoners of war have been issued by the Provost Marshal General of Headquarters Army Service Forces.

Air mail letter sheets are now available at all Post Offices. Letters written on this special form, with a six cent air mail stamp attached, are, after censorship flown to Lisbon. From there they are transmitted by German plane to a central point for German censorship and thence dispatched to the various prison camps in Germany.

The use of the special letter sheet is not compulsory, but the Prisoner of War Information Bureau, Office of the Provost Marshal, strongly urges all persons to use it in corresponding with prisoners of war. Its use facilitates censorship both in the United States and in enemy territory, by providing a standard size, unsealed letter.

The official announcement of the letter forms said also that the use of the form in corresponding with American prisoners in Japan is recommended. Letters to such prisoners should be limited to 24 words. Mail for the Orient, after censorship, is flown to Teheran, Iran, by army transport plane. From that point it goes by surface routes through Russia into Manchukuo where it is delivered to the Japanese authorities.

CLASS OF FIFTY-FIVE CONFIRMED

Miami, Fla.—A class of fifty-five twenty-two males and thirty-three females, from ten to sixty-nine years of age, was confirmed at the Church of the Holy Cross, Sunday, May 14, by the Rt. Rev. Arthur C. Thomson, D. D., acting for the diocesan bishop, the Rt. Rev. John D. Wing, D. D.

The class was instructed by the rector, the Rev. G. W. Gasque, once every week beginning the first of last October and twice a week beginning the first of Lent on the life of Christ, Church symbolism, the ways and teachings of the Church, the catechism, the use of the Prayer Book, and the Church sacraments. Constant emphasis was placed on right living as becomes a Christian, regular and frequent communions, active participation in some form of Church work, and systematic giving for the support of the Church's program at home and abroad.

Annual Convention—Bishop Tsu Speaker at Fellowship Dinner

Washington, D. C.—The Annual Convention of the Diocese of Washington met in St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, on Wednesday, May 10. The Bishop's Charge to the diocese was delivered in the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, in accordance with previous custom. Bishop Dun, in his remarks, stated that, of course, being newly consecrated to this office he was in no position to deliver what might be called an address based upon the needs and opportunities of the diocese. He, therefore, desired to present for the consideration of the clergy, delegates, members of diocesan organizations and others who may be present the consideration of the Church's relationship to the world at this time. He outlined the relationships existing in the membership of the Church, speaking of the family, society in general, the racial groups to which each one of us might belong and the economic order that governs them all. He mentioned that it might be of interest if a Gallup Poll might be taken to discover which one of these interests comes first in our thoughts, and hazarded the suggestion that we might be surprised to find how little interest we took in the Church.

Assessments and Pledges Paid in Full

It is gratifying to mention that for the first time, it is believed, in the history of the diocese every parish and mission met its Convention Assessment for Diocesan Expenses in full before the date of the Convention, and every parish and mission paid its pledge to the Church's Program for 1943 in full.

Bishop Dun presided and, probably, in consequence of his direction the Convention concluded its work in one day instead of requiring two as usual.

Fellowship Dinner

The Fellowship Dinner which followed the business session of the Convention was a happy occasion and afforded the delegates and others present an opportunity for becoming better acquainted with their newly elected Bishop. After addressing those who were present, Bishop Dun introduced as the speaker the Rt. Rev. Andrew Y. Y. Tsu, Bishop of Kunming, China, who expressed his thankfulness at being present and also his conviction that he now felt he was adopted by the Diocese of Washington, because of his participation in the Consecration Service of Bishop Dun. He expressed his gratification that the General Convention in Cleveland had arranged it so that the Church of China could have a Council of its own. This was a great step forward, Bishop Tsu said.

After bringing to a close his facetious remarks with an observation of his travels for several days with two of the American bishops of the Church, he stated he felt they were one because while the American bishops cracked jokes the China bishop enjoyed them. The Bishop then proceeded in a serious vein to speak of the close relationship existing between China and America, pointing out that American soldiers were fighting and suffering for China, and he became daily aware of the difficulties which were being encountered by his nation in seeking to become part of the democratic world. He touchingly referred to the death of an American pilot who was a member of the Church and attended regularly the services in the little Church of St. John, where he made himself useful and became so a part of the Bishop's family as to be present whenever possible. Bishop Tsu was happy to state that he called upon the family of this American boy when he came to the United States, and he felt a close bond of sympathy as soon as he crossed their threshold. There in China, the Bishop stated, was being worked out in very vivid form the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man.

JUSTICE OWEN ROBERTS RECEIVES ANNUAL AWARD

Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts received on May 8th the 1944 Annual Award for outstanding work by a District layman at the 24th annual meeting of the Washington Federation of Churches.

Justice Roberts, who is Senior Warden of St. John's Church, Lafayette Square, was the chairman of the Committee on Arrangements for the Consecration of Dr. Angus Dun, Bishop-elect of Washington.

In presenting the award, Dr. Oscar F. Blackwelder, chairman of the Committee on the Annual Award, read the citation to the more than 1,000 persons present.

CHAPLAINS

Appointments, Promotions, Separations

The latest list of U. S. Army appointments, Promotions and Separations affects twelve Episcopal Chaplains, according to a statement released by the Army and Navy Commission. The Rev. Edmund Lucian Malone, St. George's, Clarksdale, Miss., and the Rev. Ralph Markey, St. Peter's, Oriskany, N. Y., have been appointed Chaplains. Promoted from First Lieutenant to Captain are: Chaplains Walter McDade Bennett, St. Stephen's, Huntsville, Texas; Gustave H. Caution, Church of the Redeemer, Oklahoma City, Okla.; Max W. Foresman, St. Paul's Mankato, Minn.; John S. Letherman, St. Augustine's, Rhinelander, Wis.; William D. Pollock, Nelson Parish, Virginia; Ernest W. S. Scully, St. Ann's, Morrison, Ill.; Paul D. Wilbur, St. Stephen's and Incarnation, Washington, D. C.; William T. Young, St. John's, Fayetteville, N. C.

The "separations," that is, men relieved from duty, are the Rev. Messrs. Herbert W. Frick, St. Mary's-By-the-Sea, Point Pleasant, N. J., and St. Julian A. Simpkins, St. Stephen's, Charleston, S. C.

Second List in Week

As an indication of the growth of the Chaplains' corps in Army and Navy, the Army and Navy Commission, Boston, Mass., has issued its second list of appointments, separations and promotions within a week. Appointments reported are the Rev. William P. Barrett, Pikesville, Ky., and Norman S. Howell, Cheshire, Conn. Chaplain St. Julian A. Simpkins, Jr., has been honorably discharged on account of physical disability. Chaplains Edward H. Harrison, John T. Knight, and Robert T. Becker have been promoted from First Lieutenant to Captain; Chaplains William B. Sharp and May W. Foresman, from Captain to Major, and Chaplain Hamilton H. Kellogg from Lieutenant Colonel to Colonel.

ORDINATION

Deacon

Ramao Hilario Gomez, for some years a catechist in charge of the Church of the Nativity, D. Pedrito, Porto Alegre, Brazil, was ordained to the diaconate on April 23, by the Rt. Rev. William M. M. Thomas, Bishop of Southern Brazil. The ordination took place during the meeting of the district council, so that 25 of the clergy were in the chancel. Mr. Gomez was presented by the Rev. Egmont Machado Krischke, and the sermon was preached by the Rev. Sirio Moraes.

Mr. Gomez is 51 years old, is married and has two children. He was ordained under the provisions of Canon 31, "Admission to Holy Orders in Special Cases," and Bishop Thomas explained that Mr. Gomez's admission gives him "an ordained man who can take charge of one of our churches in a small place at very little added expense."

DEATHS

Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray

The Rt. Rev. Campbell Gray, since 1925 bishop of Northern Indiana, died May 16 in St. Joseph's Hospital, Mishawaka, Ind. He was 65 years old.

Bishop Gray was president of the Province of the Midwest. He was born at Bolivar, Tenn., January 6, 1879, the son of the Rt. Rev. William Crane Gray, first bishop of the diocese of Southern Florida. He was graduated from the University of the South in 1901, and took his Master's degree from the same University in 1902. He was a student of theology, also at Sewanee in 1901 and 1902, and a graduate of the General Theological Seminary in 1904. He was married to Virginia Neal Morgan of Nashville in 1905. He was ordained priest in 1905. He was a missionary in Florida from 1904 to 1914; vicar of St. Augustine's Church, Rhinelander, Wis., 1914-22; rector of St. Paul's Church, Peoria, Ill., 1922-1925.

He was elected bishop coadjutor of the Diocese of Northern Indiana in 1925, but on account of the death of the Rt. Rev. John Hazen White, then bishop of that diocese, he did not become coadjutor, but was consecrated bishop of the diocese on May 1, 1925. He selected Mishawaka as the See city of the diocese and St. Paul's Church became St. Paul's Cathedral.

The Bishop is survived by Mrs. Gray, three sons and a daughter.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"God trusts me beyond what I now am. I trust Him beyond what I now see."

"Every person has two educations—one which he receives from others, and one which he gives himself."—Gibbon.

"It never was loving that emptied a heart,
Nor giving that emptied a purse."

Break in upon our darkened souls
And shed afar Thy boundless light;
For Thine the dayspring from on high,
And Thine the beam that ends the night.
—E. H. Blakeney.

In the love of God through whom all things work together for good, the weakest of us is a conqueror.

"Christ is the most important fact in the life of a Christian. Why not say so? We need not enter religious arguments. But a simple profession of our faith is bound to find its mark."

On a sundial in Brighton, England, are these words: "It is always morning somewhere in the world."

Life is won or lost by its ruling motive.—George W. Truett.

If you treat religion as an illusion and God as a superstition you will then go on to treat man as a robot and society as a mechanism.—Raven.

Steady our hand to hold the cup of trembling
And guard us when joy's brimming bowl we boast;
Be with us, Lord, when we forget we need Thee
For truly then our vain hearts need Thee most.
A. S. Guthrie.

God is One, but He manifests Himself in three ways, and in each He is wholly God. Probably the credal "Light of Light" or "Light out of Light" is the best analogy our little brains can find to express—the Flame, the Light, and the Heat, but one Lamp, One God.
—Douglas Bruce.

Talk to Him in your own words as the Spirit gives you utterance; talk simply and without reserve, as a man talks to His friend, of all that is in your heart;; talk and listen. "Speak, Lord, for Thy servant heareth." When He does speak, we know what it can mean—He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.—Adopted.

EPISCOPAL REPRESENTATIVES AT NATIONAL CONFERENCE

To Editors:

The National Conference on the Ministry of the Church to Returning Service Men and Women, held in Baltimore May 17 and 18, was reported by RNS and the story is to be released through that agency.

The meeting was sponsored by the General Commission on Army and Navy Chaplains, the Commission on Religion and Health, the Service Men's Christian League, and the Christian Commission for Camps and Defense Communities.

Teh Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the Division of Christian Social Relations of the National Council believes that the only addition to the RNS story which you will need is the list of Episcopal Church representatives attending. They were:

Dr. Pepper, representing the Division of Christian Social Relations.

Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work.

Rev. Felix Kloman, Philadelphia, and

Rev. Frederick W. Blatz, representing Army and Navy Commission.

Rev. Howard Melish, Jr., Brooklyn, Christian Social Relations.

Rev. Howard P. Kellett, Boston, Christian Social Relations.

Rev. William Owings Stone, Baltimore, Christian Social Relations.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

WHEN I FIRST heard about it and read about it no one could tempt me to see it. There wasn't the slightest degree of interest. And yet those who saw it were impressed—some one way and some another. People whose judgment I respected told me it was worth seeing. At last I succumbed and took my wife to see a moving picture that had still not aroused my interest but had stirred that feeling of fear I'd miss something if I did not go. So we went to see Lifeboat. It was an absorbing experience. I had thought it was impossible for such a small area of action to produce such terrific results. Hitchcock and Steinback did an excellent job. But why should I be presumptuous enough to take one of our five precious minutes to tell you I went to a movie and had a good time? So what? Just this. Almost everyone to whom I suggest having a daily meditation reacts in much the same manner as I did to the movie, "Lifeboat." They feel that such a limited subject will be a bit boring and at first the incentive is not sufficient to make them try it. But when persons whom they respect and admire and trust tell them again and again how valuable it is and how intensely absorbing and revealing, they are brought to give it a trial for themselves with varying results. A few catch on at once and thrill to the inspiration of their new found converse with the unlimited horizons of God. Others miss the point and wander far afield and wind up in the chilly waters of wishful thinking. Some draw a blank because their imagination is still unused. Steinback and Hitchcock took a lifeboat and packed into it the far and near threads of life in most of its criss-crossed patterns, as well as treating in brilliant fashion the clashing idealogies of those who war together today. This is not a review of the picture, but I must add that, so far as I was impressed, the philosophy of decent, Christian, other-regarding people won hands down over the cold, calculating, pagan, self-regarding "super-race". I believe Dorothy Thompson in her judgment was wrong. I cannot understand how the picture could be good Nazi propaganda unless our natures responded to their kind of thinking and acting. Steinback, in "Lifeboat," as in "The Moon is Down," depicts in graphic detail the arid wastes of a mind isolated within the narrow confines of an idea contrary to the laws of life as God created it to be lived.

BUT I BEGAN with the idea of bringing a bit of pressure to bear upon those who do not have a moment of quiet meditation each day to drain off the essence of direction from some word of God. God may give us a theme from His Book or from a movie; from a lesson learned in yesterday's battle with temptation or from an observation of human conduct. Whatever the theme, if our intention is to uncover a message from God to us in it, we shall not be disappointed; and even though the scope of the idea seems as limited as living in a telephone booth, under the touch of His Spirit presence we expand and traverse the roadways of the world. When I first thought of trying to hold my attention on one little word or one short phrase, I just could not believe it was possible. At first only a few thoughts came. But with practice, I was able to unravel more and more. Now I seem to find an endless stream of content pouring through as narrow an opening as a three letter word like "our" or "sin". Try to pry open the secrets of "our" this morning. Jot down all the implications of the Christian meaning of the word. Remember it as Jesus used it in the prayer He taught the disciples. Let it unfold the true and larger meaning of "one world".

God gave great power to our minds—imagination, insight, understanding. Therefore, let us use them and give God a hand in this business of growing up to the spiritual maturity of wisdom and truth, which means for us full dawn.

BISHOP TUCKER'S GREATNESS

(Editorial in The Richmond Times-Dispatch

ALL WHO KNOW Bishop Henry St. George Tucker will endorse unhesitatingly the words of admiration and love spoken of and to him at the diocesan ceremonies here.

He is the first Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States to be given plenary powers, but although he has been vested with these powers, he has never abused them, and the Church has thriven, grown and expanded under his wise and farseeing guidance.

Bishop Tucker's leadership has been notable not so much for the material accomplishments of his administration as Presiding Bishop, although he has such accomplishments to his credit, as for the spiritual quality with which he has infused the Church. He has endeared himself, furthermore, to all elements within the denomination, the "high" churchmen as well as the "low" churchmen.

Very much the same situation exists in the Federal Council of Churches, of which he is president. Dr. Samuel M. Cavert, of New York, spoke eloquently at the recent ceremonies of the fact that the various denominations united in the council hold an affection "impossible to exaggerate for the Bishop which has made him, we feel, bishop of the whole Church of Christ in America."

HIS RESIGNATION as bishop of the diocese of Virginia, in order to continue as presiding officer of the whole Church, deprives this State of his official ministrations, but the diocese is fortunate in having the capable and godly Bishop Frederick Deane Goodwin as his successor. And while Bishop Tucker will cease after June 1 to preside over the affairs of this jurisdiction, he will continue to maintain his residence in Richmond.

Here is one of the truly extraordinary personalities in the long annals of Virginia. His greatness resides not so much in the brilliance of his intellect or the loftiness of his character, both of which attributes he possesses to an unusual degree, but rather in his simplicity and his goodness, his winsomeness and his loving kindness. Those who know him find it easy to believe the famous story of how, as a missionary, he brought food to famished Japanese in a remote region of that country, and how years later, when another missionary spoke to them of Jesus, they replied: "We know of Him. He was with us during the famine, and fed us."

D-DAY

(Editorial in The Chronicle)

SO DESIGNATED is the time and also the place where Allied armed forces of all sorts and kinds will invade the fortressed western front of the Axis powers. Thousands of planes of every known variety will fill the sky to fight and shield. Tens of thousands of combat units will swarm beach-heads anywhere from Norway to the Bay of Biscay, carrying with them a vast variety of the most destructive instruments of war that English and American engineers, inventors and scientists have been able to create. On the sea, and under the sea, ships of war of infinite variety will join in the most mortal combat of all times. This will happen when the signal to go forward is flashed.

"D-Day"—what does it mean? No synonym has been given. Will it be "Doom's Day" for the Axis powers and their gangster leaders? Will it be "Deliverance Day" for the ravaged and enslaved nations of the world? Or, perhaps, "The Day of Days" in the history of modern civilization,—a redemption that may foreshadow a long period of international peace, progress and promise of a better world for men to live in.

In Germany, if German army officers happened to be in the social group, the evening toast given by the officers was usually "Der Tag", quietly but knowingly offered.

It meant "the day when the navy would sail and the army march to destroy England and the British Empire" and begin the conquest of the world to the tune of "Deutschland uber alles."

"D-Day" may mean any time, night or day. Invasion plans are definite, but the secret is well guarded.

So conscious are we of the inevitable proportions and possibilities of this invasion in which the armed forces of the United States must bear the major responsibility, and so conscious are we that our cause is just and its aims right that the Federal Council of Churches, the Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Dr. Henry St. George Tucker, Governor Thomas E. Dewey, Governor of the State of New York, and the Mayors of several western cities request Church members to go to their respective Churches when the flash signals notify us that the invasion has begun and pray for the victory of the Allies over the Axis forces—that the enemy tyranny may be overthrown; that its slavery be abolished; that the criminal leaders be punished; that the cruel militarism be crushed; that unconditional surrender shall follow victory; that all nations may enjoy a long peace and the blessings thereof.

KING AND QUEEN LEAD "INVASION EVE" PRAYERS

London, April 24.—The King and Queen led millions of British subjects yesterday in special "invasion eve" prayers in observance of St. George's Day.

In a solemn dedication the Archbishop of Canterbury prayed:

"Make us so worthy of our cause, so steadfast in Thy strength, that no weakness may delay victory of our arms."

St. George's Day was observed in churches throughout the nation by people who recalled the past threat of invasion to their own land.

Christian Education and the Doctrine of Man

By FRANCIS J. BLOODGOOD

THERE IS UNEASINESS today about education. I talked recently with a man coming here from England, and I took the occasion to compliment him on the brilliant record made by his children in our American schools. He replied that it wasn't so much to the credit of his children as to the credit of the good schooling they had had. He was too polite to go on and say that the American high school is inferior in its teaching to the English public school.

We know that the English public school is, in fact, a private school, and it would be fairer to compare our boarding schools, as we call them, with the English public school. At the same time, the English system of education, itself, is uneasy and is undergoing considerable overhauling, especially in the primary and secondary schools.

The fact is that education is becoming an issue. We have poured millions of dollars into education; we could not ask for more in the way of buildings and equipment, yet we are again uneasy when we observe that in the majority of what we call institutions of higher learning, the school of education is looked upon as the least effective department within the University. Courses in education are regarded as soft.

This past year, some of the uneasiness about education has been very ably expressed in four books that prompt us to a rethinking of education. The authors of these four books, Mark Van Doren, Robert Hutchins, Alexander Meikeljohn, Jacques Maritain, are all notable for intellectual vigor and initiative. Furthermore, when we talk with men who are responsible for the military courses in orientation or indoctrination, we are told that the young men who are fighting in this worldwide war, which has so many idealogical aspects, are themselves of good will, but, in the vast majority of cases, of confused minds on the issues.

THE WARS OF 1866 and 1870, it has been said, were victories for the Prussian schoolmasters, and aroused Western Europe to the national importance of popular education. This is not history, this is a problem of our own generation. The effect of the Prussian schoolmasters in forming the mind of a child has been dramatized in the play, "Tomorrow the World". When conferences are held on postwar planning, the subject of the reeducation of German and Japanese youth always comes up. We are puzzled and uneasy about our own way of education. Here at home, there probably never was a time when more care and thought was given to working out the best methods of teaching particular subjects and all that concerns the organization and material equipment of education. Furthermore, the example of German education, based on the understanding of man, as set forth in Hitler's "Mein Kampf", has made the world wonder.

In the field of education, the Episcopal Church, in relation to its colleges, adopted a policy of appeasement toward secular education so long ago that today the number of our Church colleges can be counted on the fingers of one hand. Although it is customary in speaking to divide the subject into three parts, I intend to deal with four aspects of the Christian understanding of man and education.

First, there is the assumption in education, that has become so common as to be acted upon unconsciously, that education will make a man moral, whereas, it is important that the uneducated should be religious. Second, there is the divorce between religious feeling and religious thinking. Third, the everpresent pressure of earning a living has caused man to become obsessed with the idea of technical training; and, finally, there is the notion that Christianity can be summed up in the old adage, "Be good, sweet girl, and let who can be clever."

The common assumption that education will make a man moral, whereas it is important that the uneducated should be religious, is based on a mistaken understanding of human nature. It really goes back to the idea taught in Greek philosophy that people only do wrong by reason of ignorance. It is also based on a perfectionist idea of man which comes from the liberal, and here I use the word "liberal" in the philosophical and not the political sense of the word; it comes, I say, from the liberal idea which finds its logical expression in what we have come to know as progressive education. The liberal or progressive educator goes ahead on the simple notion that self-expression is the beginning and the end of education. The Christian educator, on the other hand, knows, from his own training in self-examination, that education is not a matter of drawing out the ego, but finding ways to overcome our natural self-love. The Christian educator builds his ideas of training and education on the Christian doctrine of man. The Christian doctrine of man asserts, first, man is a creature and shares with other creatures on earth certain limitations. Secondly, man is a particular kind of creature made in the image of God. There is an element in man which is spiritual. Thirdly, in his actual existence, man is a sinful, or, if you would rather have me say it less bluntly, a wilful creature living neither in accord with his earthly limitations nor in accord with the supremacy of the spirit within him.

THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE of man has been clearly stated by St. Paul: "The good that I would do, I do not do, and the evil that I would not, that I do; oh, wretched man that I am, who should deliver me from the body of this death." Another way of stating the Christian doctrine of man is to say that while we are obviously animals, we are spiritual in our motivation. There is in man a principle of self-sacrifice, but, and here comes in the diabolic element in human nature which the liberal ignores and the Christian faces: man will as readily sacrifice himself for something that is bad as for something that is good. Consequently, education in itself may only make a man a clever devil.

My second point is that we have divorced religious feeling from religious thinking. Religion has become almost entirely a sentimental matter for that great group of people whom we properly call nominal Christians. They are, indeed, Christians in name only: they do not think as Christians, and therefore do not act as Christians. They like to sing the old hymns, but they are not concerned with the religious education of their children. They are full of generous feelings at Christmas, but many of them do not even know the Christmas story. You remember, in the 8th Chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, when Philip met the man from Ethiopia who was sitting in his chariot and reading the Prophet Isaiah, Philip went to him and said, "Understandest thou what thou readest?" And he said, "How can I except some man should guide me?"

He did not say, "I am too stupid and I could never learn at school," nor "I can never remember anything I am told," nor did he say "this book is too highbrow." This is a plain example of what our Lord meant when He said, We should love God with our minds as well as with our hearts.

The Christian religion is built on reason and definite knowledge. As Christians, our minds must be trained in the Bible because the Bible is the great mine of religious experience, and I say mine, because what we get from the Bible comes to us in such a way that it has to be processed and made available for our practical use. The precious ore that we get from any earthly mine is subjected to treatment before it is useful in the markets of the world. So, too, that which is infinitely precious which we get from the Bible has to be formed in our own minds. We are assisted by this in the intellectual ordering of religious experience as we find it in the historic creeds and as we find it from generation after generation in the great teacher, the Church. Furthermore, this doctrine, this teaching, is transmitted to us through the sacraments and pastoral office of the Church, and made plain to us in the fruits of Christian living in the lives of the Saints.

RELIGION IS TREATED today as though it were a matter of taste. Consequently, it is placed outside of education. Can we wonder, then, that it is looked upon as an amiable indulgence? The result of the absence of religious education, of the teaching of Church history and the neglect of Christian philosophy in our schools and colleges can be found in a group that I heard of recently who had taken the name of the Congenial Couples' Club. They liked to get together Sunday evenings, and one of the things they enjoyed doing was singing old hymns which they remembered from their Sunday School days. But, they had all dropped away from Church during their time in college, and they took no interest in giving their children Christian training.

I can give you a personal illustration of the attitude which has developed in secular education. A certain young man in a University, had a personal problem, and it was suggested to him that he consult me. This he did. He, afterwards, remarked to a college friend of his who, of course, reported the remark to me with great glee, "That clergyman seems to have had a pretty good education, but, of course, he is an atheist!" I must admit I was a little surprised myself to be called an atheist. My college friend assured me it was intended as a compliment, because the undergraduate felt that any man who was educated was bound to be an atheist.

We hear much today about vocational training. St. Paul was trained to be a tentmaker, and he boasted of his skill. At the same time, St. Paul teaches us that we are called to be saints.

In a broadcast of March 26, 1944, Winston Churchill said, "I do not think we can maintain our position in the postwar world unless we are an exceptionally well educated people." We have seen what the Prussian schoolmaster can do, and we remember our Lord's warning that "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of the light." Yet, we need not be discouraged. For, if we are honest and earnest in teaching Christianity, we will find that it needs no special education to be a Christian, because Christianity is an education itself. Think of John Bunyan, who was not a college man, but who could write "Pilgrim's Progress," and thereby give us a classic in Christian education.

BOOK NOTES

By F. J. Warnecke

THE PROMISES OF CHRIST. Frank E. Wilson. Morehouse-Gorham. New York City. 174 pages. $2.

The recent untimely death of Bishop Wilson makes us rejoice that we have this last volume from his pen. For Bishop Wilson had an exceptionally happy gift of writing persuasively and well for the layman. These sermons were designed by the Bishop to be used by lay readers. They will find them interesting and helpful though they seldom reach the depths of great sermons.

DEVOTIONS FOR YOUTH. Clark R. Gilbert. Association Press, New York City. 144 pages. $1.75.

This book is planned for use by young people's groups. Surely such groups sadly need devotional guidance. The average "worship" at a young people's Sunday evening meeting is rather pitiful. This book may help such groups with suggestions. However, the author seems totally unacquainted with the riches of liturgical worship. The suggestions tend to the moral and ethical, and in this there is over-simplification. For example, this prayer: "Dear Christ, we ask that all of us spend our time in the best possible way. We know that this means we must leave out gambling. Amen."

FREDERICK BOHN FISHER, WORLD CITIZEN. Welthy Honsinger Fisher. Macmillan, New York. 257 pp. $2.50.

This is a grand biography of a great Methodist Bishop! It is seldom that a man's wife possesses the talents of Mrs. Fisher, and can, therefore, portray a life known intimately without either sentimentality or false adulation. Frederick Fisher had a meteoric career. He was a Hoosier lad who went to India as a missionary shortly after his ordination. Returning to a notable ministry in Boston he was elected Bishop of India by the Methodist Church. There after ten years, during which he tried to make the Church indigenous, he startled his Church by resigning as Bishop to make way for a native Indian Bishop. Upon his return to America he began a new and greatly successful ministry in Michigan, first at Ann Arbor and then at Detroit. During these years he was interested in the ecumenical movement and in all liberal, Christian causes. It was appropriate that he entered into Paradise on Good Friday, for his life was one that was sacrificially offered to the Lord and His gospel.

The story is fascinatingly related by Mrs. Fisher. It is good for us Episcopalians to read the biography of a great leader in another Church. Our vision is enlarged thereby. We note the way in which God's Holy Spirit uses all of us in His work. In our search for Christian unity we might well apply Fisher's words spoken in India of non-Christian religions: "Victory is not won by destroying other religions!"

BUT CHRIST DID RISE. Edited by Paul Z. Strodach. Muhlenberg Press, Philadelphia, Pa. 200 pp. $2.

This is the annual series of Lenten sermons by ministers of the United Lutheran Church for each of the Sundays of Lent, pre-Lent and for Holy Week. The authors include Paul Scherer, of New York; Oscar Blackwelder, of Washington, and Professor H. Baughman, of the Gettysburg Seminary. As homiletical material, they are Biblical and personal in character. One is rather troubled, however, by the lack of reference to the world crisis in which we find ourselves. The crisis of Christianity nineteen hundred years ago is never applied to the present day, except in an individual sense.

Trinity Sunday

For fear some reader may think we are about to launch upon a theological discussion of the Trinity, we hasten to assure them, that that is not our purpose. We are not qualified as a theologian to assay such a task. By way of parenthesis we recommend to both clergy and laity the reading of Leonard Hodgson's new book, "The Doctrine of the Trinity," published by Scribners. It is practical and readable.

What we specifically wish to mention in relation to Trinity Sunday is a phrase from the Collect for the day. In that prayer we petition God, that in the power of His Divine Majesty we may learn to worship the Unity. Theologically speaking this means the "oneness" of God. Its clear implication is that, through the oneness of God, we may see our many diversities united. Quite practically, that we might work for the unity of a divided Christendom; that we might work for a united world—for one world. For a Christendom that expresses itself in many different ways but finds itself at one with God through Christ Jesus. For a world made up of many diverse races and nationalities, but a world that finds itself one in a spirit of true Christian brotherliness. That is the faith of the Trinity in the glory and majesty of the One God, whom all the children of men are created to worship.

The Y. M. C. A. Centennial

It is a far cry from that day June 6th, 1844, when a twenty-two year old dry goods clerk, George Williams, gathered a group of eleven of his associates, and formed an organization for the improvement of the spiritual condition of young men engaged in the drapery and other trades, by the introduction of religious services among them, to the 10,000 Y. M. C. A.'s now scattered throughout the world. But that is the story in brief of the humble origin of this great organization and its growth during the last one hundred years.

The Triangle of the Y. M. C. A. is a familiar symbol to millions of men and boys. Body, mind and spirit developed under Christian leadership, has been and is the goal of the Y. M. C. A. Like any large institution it has made its mistakes. Its motives have often been misunderstood. At one time it appeared to some on the outside that the Y had lost its religious emphasis. Consequently they thought of the Y, as one has expressed it, simply as "a chain of economical hotels" or, at best, glorified athletic clubs. The Y has never lost its religious emphasis. It has always stood for the Christian ideal of a sound body, an elert mind, and a spirit of fellowship in Christ, regardless of race, creed, or nationality.

The Southern Churchman congratulates the Y. M. C. A. on its one hundredth birthday. May the Y continue to serve the men and youth of this nation and of the world; not merely for another hundred years, but for hundreds of years.

Commencements

June is the month of commencements. We have great sympathy for the men and women who will address graduating classes or preach baccalaureate sermons. Their task will not be an easy one. One thing we trust they all will do, and that is strike a note of radiant hopefulness. Admittedly the present scene is dark. But this old world has looked into the face of troublous times more than once. We charge the speaker, who presents only a pessimistic outlook to young graduates, with being derelict of his responsibility. We do not mean that he should tell them they are going to have an easy time. But they can be conquerers of evil and builders of a new order, as they become valiant soldiers of the Cross. Calvary saw its dawn. So will this young generation see "the morning break".

We have great sympathy for the young graduates, and at the same time we envy them. Most of them are probably thinking of graduation as being the end of a certain task. It is, but it is the commencement of larger opportunities. Those larger opportunities will unfold as the young graduate reaches out into life's highway for privileges to serve.

The night seems so near. The day seems far distant. But both are only relative. Strong and hopeful young hearts can turn the night into day. This was done once in the history of mankind, by an insignificant little group. They had received the good news from God. That good news came to them out of the darkness of Calvary. They gave the good news to the world. It is still the only good news in this chaotic present scene. "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, to the end that all that believe in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

That is the message to give our young people. When properly challenged by it ,they will accept its challenge, and under the aegis of God a new world order will be built.

Bishop Tucker Is Honored

Special Assemblage of Diocese of Virginia Gathers to Express Esteem and Affection

Richmond, Va.—Clergy and laity of the Diocese of Virginia at the 149th annual council—the last over which Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker will preside—gathered in a special assemblage at Hotel Jefferson auditorium to honor Bishop Tucker and presented to him three gifts, tokens of their esteem and affection.

The 149th council of the diocese was meeting in two-day session at All Saints' Church.

Bishop Tucker, who was elected Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church of the United States in 1937, resigns June 1 as bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, a post which he has held since 1927, to continue in the office of Presiding Bishop. He also is president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

Presented Gifts

Mr. John B. Minor, Richmond layman and member of the standing committee of the diocese, presented Bishop Tucker with two inscribed silver bowls. A resolution offered by Mr. Minor and adopted by the council read in part:

"The people of the diocese have gladly followed his inspirational leadership and have learned to love the man beneath the robes of office with a reality that will not be affected by the termination of an official relationship."

A $1,000 check to be used for the painting of a portrait of Bishop Tucker was presented by the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, D. D., bishop suffragan.

A second check for $2,500, the nucleus of a fund to be used at Bishop Tucker's discretion for the rehabilitation of the church in the Orient, was presented by the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., bishop coadjutor, who will become bishop of the Diocese of Virginia on June 1.

25 Years in Orient

Bishop Goodwin pointed to this gift as the one of the three most likely to please Bishop Tucker, who spent 25 years in missionary service in the Orient, from 1912 to 1923, as Bishop of Koyta, Japan.

Bishop Goodwin presented four speakers who paid tribute to numerous aspects of Bishop Tucker's life and service in the church: the Rev. Joseph B. Dunn, D. D., retired, of Richmond; the Rev. G. McLaren Brydon, D. D., historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia; the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin, D. D., rector of Epiphany Church, Washington, D. C., and the Rev. Samuel M. Cavert, D. D., of New York City.

The speaker paid tribute to the godliness and humbleness, the simplicity, the serenity and the radiance of the spirit of the man they honored.

Dr. Cavert told the gathering that all of the numerous denominations under the Federal Council of Churches, of which Bishop Tucker is president, are "happily agreed on an affectionate feeling impossible to exaggerate for the bishop which has made him, we feel, bishop of the whole church of Christ in America".

He pointed to his serenity of spirit "which creates an atmosphere of trust and good will in which Christian unity seems not impossible of accomplishment, but already here."

Held in Esteem

The speaker said that while Bishop Tucker is characterized by some as "comfortable to live with and unpretentious as an old shoe", he is, at the same time held in great esteem in high places—in the State Department and the White House.

As a missionary in Japan, Bishop Tucker became so beloved by the natives whom he fed during a famine there, Dr. Sheerin reminded the assemblage, that in later years when missionaries visited Japan telling of Jesus, natives nodded wisely and said, "Oh, yes. We know of him. He was with us during the famine and fed us."

Dr. Dunn told the group of the well-known Tucker tradition in which Tuckers have been teachers, physicians, and "ambassadors of Christ" since early days and "lent color and form to this pleasant spot of earth we call Virginia."

Dr. Brydon reminisced of Bishop Tucker's years as a seminary student and as a leader of the diocese.

Afternoon Session

After hearing Dean A. C. Zabriskie, of the Virginia Theological Seminary, in Alexandria, urge that "actions looking toward church unity be encouraged and promoted", the council approved the proposal of the Board of Christian Education that a training school for young women about to enter church work be established in connection with the Presbyterian Training School.

Dean Zabriskie urged church unity, in connection with the discussed union of the Episcopal Church with the Northern Presbyterian, as well as close cooperation with any other church groups.

The proposal that the Episcopals join in establishing a church school for young women in cooperation with the Presbyterian Training School was made by the Rev. James W. Kennedy, of All Saints' Church, host for the annual council.

Budget Increased

A budget providing for an increase of approximately $7,000 was approved by the council, with increases listed

Alden Kelly Becomes Dean

Resigns Position on National Council—To Go to Seabury-Western Seminary

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Alden Drew Kelley, D. D., executive secretary of the National Council's Division of College Work has resigned that office to become Dean of Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Ill. His resignation is to be effective July 31. Announcement is made by the Presiding Bishop, and by the Bishop of Chicago, Bishop Conkling being ex officio chairman of the Seminary Board of Trustees.

Since 1930 the Rt. Rev Frank A. McElwain, retired Bishop of Minnesota, has been Dean and Professor of Pastoral Theology.

Dr. Kelley came to the National Council in 1939. He had formerly been student chaplain at the University of Wisconsin, and head of the Church Student Center there, St. Francis' House. He was also chairman of the college commission of the Fifth Province.

Dr. Kelley was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., February 22, 1903. He attended Tufts College, Boston University, and the New York School of Social Work. He received his degree of Master of Arts from the University of Wisconsin, and his degree of Doctor in Divinity from Kenyon College, and the same degree from Hobart. He was graduated from the General Theological Seminary in 1930.

While still a deacon, Dr. Kelley was curate at Christ Church, Oyster Bay, N. Y., and in 1930 went to Nashotah House as an instructor in the college department. In June, 1931, he took up his work at the University of Wisconsin, remaining there until called to the service of the general Church early in 1939.

SURPRISE TO VIRGINIA CHURCHMEN

New York and Richmond join in a "Sunday Mass", according to the London Church Times, a fact which might surprise some Virginia Churchmen.

The story is that at St. Mark's, in London, one of the Chaplains of the American forces takes part in the 8:30 celebration of the Holy Communion, and himself celebrates once a month, and all Episcopal Church members in the American army are welcomed at the service.

The Times comments: "This is the first step in a project to cement the friendship between the Church in America and the Church in England at this time . . . St. Mark's has arranged that two churches in America shall have as an intention the friendship and understanding of the two countries at a complementary Sunday Mass once a month. These two churches are St. Mark's-in-the-Bouwerie, New York City, and St. Luke's, Richmond, Va." The Episcopal Chaplain promoting the idea is the Rev. John J. Weaver, formerly of Trinity Church, Troy, Ohio, and later Chaplain at the great Halloran Hospital on Staten Island.

UNUSUAL CONFIRMATION SERVICE IN PRISON CHAPEL

Jackson, Mich.—A most unusual service of Confirmation was held on May 16 by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of Michigan. The service took place in the chapel of the Prison of Southern Michigan, at Jackson, and 24 inmates, prepared by the Rev. Howard V. Harper, rector of St. Paul's Church, received the Apostolic Rite of the Laying on of Hands. The members of the class wore gowns over their prison garb, and also in attendance were the Warden of the Prison, the psychiatric physician on the staff, and about 150 inmates. A choir of inmates furnished the music for the service.

Later on the same afternoon, Bishop Creighton attended a Victory Dinner in St. Timothy's Mission, Jackson, marking the successful close of a campaign to wipe off the debt on the parish property. At this dinner the mortgage was burned and the congregation presented an application for admission as an Organized Mission of the diocese. St. Timothy's has been a parochial mission of St. Paul's, for nearly 25 years.

Bishop Creighton completed this interesting day by confirming a class of candidates in St. Timothy's in the evening.

RHODE ISLAND
154th Annual Convention

Providence—The 154th annual session of the Rhode Island Convention met in the Cathedral of St. John on May 16. The Convention opened with a Service of Holy Communion and the business session started with Bishop Perry in the chair.

By unanimous consent the Convention voted to ask the House of Bishops to postpone consideration of Bishop Perry's resignation, on account of reaching the age of 72, until the meeting of the Bishops in General Convention in 1946.

The Convention also went on record as favoring the immediate formation of a "Central Council of the United Nations" as an organ for cooperative action in this war and the peace to follow.

In an afternoon address Colonel Christopher D. Peirce, Commanding Officer of the Army Harbor Defences of Narragansett Bay, said that "there is no such thing as isolationism for the Church. The Church must make itself felt in crystalizing public opinion." Colonel Peirce said that the Church should make plans now for receiving the veterans at the end of the war, to help them acclimatize themselves to peace conditions. He said, "The Army stages an invasion of troops in combat, while the Church stages an invasion of ideas and philosophy against the insidious propaganda of the enemy."

Bishop Perry in his address to the Convention deprecated the luxurious life of many in this country in this time of war and privation for others. And he added, "If there be hope of peace for a war-torn world, let it be proved first on the home ground of the family, the parish, and the community."

Forward In Service Conferences

"281" Executives Meet with Leaders of Seventh Province

Birmingham, Ala.—Twelve bishops and 125 clergy and laymen, representing the fifteen dioceses of the Province of Sewanee, and all the executive officers of "281" met on May 23 and 24 at the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, and discussed the National Council—Forward in Service Plan of Action for 1944-45. This was the first conference of its kind to be held, and it will undoubtedly set the pattern for future meetings between our National Departmental Heads and Provincial leaders. The Rt. Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, D. D., bishop of Alabama and host, celebrated the Holy Communion Tuesday morning and welcomed the assembly to his diocese. The Rev. John C. Turner, rector of the Advent, was the Celebrant on Wednesday morning, and offered special intercessions for the dioceses of the Fourth Province by name.

The Forward in Service theme for the ensuing year, "The Christian Fellowship: International and Interracial Understanding", was highlighted in the opening address by the Rev. C. Avery Mason. Dr. Mason spoke of the changes that have taken place in American life in the past few years—the disintegration of society, the loss of the knowledge of the Christian Faith, the chaos of rampant individualism and "the work of the great disintegrator known to many a century ago as the devil", and stated that the Church must face this situation "with the radiance of Christ's Gospel, purifying and cleansing the human life of our age". Dr. Mason set forth the Forward in Service program as the blueprint for sound organization and aggressive evangelism, with (1) the National Plan of Action stressing a common theme and objective throughout the Church, and (2) each diocese drawing up its plan of action with the same emphasis as the National Plan, and (3) each parish drawing up its Parish plan of action to meet parochial needs. This coordinated plan for the whole Church, stressing the truth that "In Christ we are members, one of another", Dr. Mason offered as the answer to the four distintegrating factors now present in American life. "When the Presiding Bishop at General Convention asked us to emphasize Fellowship for the Triennium," said Dr. Mason, "he was undoubtedly taking into account the terrific pressure under which mankind is now operating. He may have had in mind that it is high time we of the Episcopal Church recognized the fact that we are a fellowship; that we considered most carefully those great truths and factors which literally bind us together in Christ . . . Christian fellowship which alone can bring about international and interracial understanding comes from God . . . Christian fellowship, therefore comes by worship, through education and in service. These are the divisions of the Plan of Action." Dr. Mason called attention to materials on next year's theme which will soon be available: Under Worship, two booklets—"The Fellowship of the Prayer Book" and "Fellowship in Prayer"; under Education, a pamphlet on "The Christian Fellowship in Action", a packet on "The Christian Doctrine of God" and study materials on Indian Americans, Southeast Asia, Christian World Missions and A Just and Durable Peace; under Service, a methods booklet and chart on "Our Church Goes Forward", another on "Interracial Understanding" and pamphlets on "We Study Our Community Social Forces" and "Our Parish Takes An Inventory".

Tuesday afternoon was given over to conferences in which the national executive of each Department met with the heads of corresponding departments of each diocese to determine how best to integrate their program around the theme of "Christian Fellowship". How fruitful these meetings were came out in the reports the next day. Outstanding recommendations were that (1) the theme of Fellowship be accepted as expressing one of the great aims of the missionary work of the Church, (2) a town and country conference be scheduled for 1945, (3) sermons, Church School teaching, Lenten and Birthday Thank Offerings and other educational means be used to emphasize the theme of international and interracial understanding, (4) the Church study other races and nations appreciatively, (5) diocesan departments be interracial and that the Southern dioceses relate their programs to the Southern Regional Council, Inc. (formerly the Commission on Interracial Cooperation) in Atlanta, (6) parishes and missions adopt plans now to help returning Service personnel readjust and rehabilitate themselves, (7) Forward in Service chairmen be made members of their respective diocesan executive boards and that Provincial meetings of Forward in Service chairmen be continued, and (8) more attention be given to the participation of the laymen, laywomen and young people in Forward in Service.

Mr. Robert D. Jordan, new director of the Department of Promotion, announced that a field staff is being formed to bring the whole National Council program to the entire Church. He spoke Wednesday afternoon on "Fellowship in Action" and stressed the necessity of translating the plans and recommendations of the conference into definite activity. "The eyes of the whole Church are upon us," said Mr. Jordan.

In answer to Mr. Jordan's challenge every bishop present called the delegates from his diocese into conference in order to draw up a tentative plan of action and to indicate how the work of the parishes is to be assisted. The assembly reconvened and heard reports from each diocese. General agreement with the program as presented by the national officers was expressed by the diocesan representatives and specific plans were set forth by them for executive council meetings, regional meetings of clergy and laity, Woman's Auxiliary institutes and youth gatherings and special editions of diocesan magazines in order to acquaint the people of this area with the Plan of Action for 1944-45. "This is the best Forward in Service Conference I have ever attended," said Bishop Dandridge. "I surely am glad that bunch in New York has hit on something that has universal appeal."

dress at the luncheon which ended the conference, likened the Episcopal Church before the beginning of the Forward Movement to the lepers outside the besieged city of Samaria, whose story is told in II Kings. They could not go back into the city because of famine, and they hesitated to go forward for fear of the enemy. But they said, "Why sit we here until we die?" They went forward into what seemed to be certain danger toward the camp of the Syrians only to find it deserted, and they found food and clothing and money and were saved. Then they said, "This day is a day of good tidings . . . now, therefore, come, that we may go and tell the king's household", and they went back into the city with the good news of deliverance. "Only Christians who have found the Christ," said Bishop Carpenter, "can say to all people today, 'This day is the day of good tidings. We have found what the world needs, and we cannot afford to sit down and enjoy it selfishly. We must Go Forward with a sense of urgency, now, to carry the Good News of Christ to the hungry people of the world."

WEST VIRGINIA

67th Council Points to Advance in Many Fields

Morgantown, W. Va.—Opening another war-time Council, the Diocese 67th, in Trinity Church on May 10, Bishop Strider urged, as invasion day appears, "that our Churches will be open constantly for prayer and meditation because our spiritual preparation for victory must be no less zealous and intense than our military and naval preparation". He hoped that the clergy would make themselves available for those "who need spiritual guidance and consolation more than ever before".

"Owing partly to prevailing conditions and partly to a heightening of the devotion of our people, the finances of the diocese are in excellent condition," the Bishop stated.

Missionary Work

Bishop Strider spoke encouragingly of the missionary work in the diocese and commended those missions which assumed more of the incumbent's salary.

He pointed especially to the work being done at All Saints' Mission, Clarksburg; the student work at Trinity Hall, Morgantown; St. Paul's, Elm Grove; Good Shepherd, Hansford; St. Thomas', White Sulphur Springs; the inauguration of a boy's camp; the children's home at St. Andrew's-on-the-Mount; the possibilities at Dunbar, near Charleston.

Though the decline in enrollment in Church schools, and public schools, too, is a general condition, he urged that such facts should not be a consolation for the decline, but should be a challenge to be met and greater emphasis brought to bear.

Peterkin Memorial

The Rev. George Cleaveland, chairman of a committee appointed by the Bishop to study and present a plan proposed that a Diocesan Conference Center be established in memory of Bishop Peterkin and Mrs. Peterkin, the Conference Center to be located in the center of the Diocese and be available for all the Church groups. With considerable interest and enthusiasm this was passed and the Executive Board authorized to proceed with plans to procure land and to raise the amount of $50,000.00.

The Bishop stated that there were 55 fewer confirmations in the Diocese in '43 as compared with '42; however, at present there are 100 more in '44 as compared with the same time in '43.

A report on the Church Pension Fund revealed that $7,688.00 is being paid to individuals in the Diocese as opposed to $6,300.00 paid out from the Diocese.

Reports at W. Va. Annual Meeting Show Progress

Charles Town, W. Va.—The 52nd annual meeting of the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary convened in Zion Church on May 2. Mrs. John E. Hill, of Philadelphia, president of the Province of Washington, member of the National Executive Board of Woman's Auxiliary, and representative on the National Council, was the speaker.

Speaking of the necessity for Christian public opinion, Christian racial understanding, and Christian family life, she stressed the place of women in life today and tomorrow, saying, "This is a day to give great service".

Bishop Strider's address tied in with the general theme of the meeting, that of the important place of the women toward a Christian world.

Mrs. Kyle announced the proposed plan for a memorial to Bishop Peterkin in the form of a Diocesan conference center. The women heartily endorsed it and voted the offering received at the services as the first contribution.

Reports from the Convocations and Departments showed a decided advance in every field of endeavor.

Approximately 100 women attended the sessions. The invitation from St. Paul's Church, Weston, for the next meeting was accepted.

SOUTHERN VIRGINIA

The 52nd Annual Council

Norfolk, Va.—Although no drastic action was taken by the 52nd Annual Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, which met in St. Paul's, Newport News, Va., May 9-10, it was a decidedly constructive Council, leaving every one with the impression that the diocese is steadily going forward.

In his address the Rt. Rev. Wm. A. Brown, D. D., commented on the steady growth of the diocese as evidenced by the increase in the number of Communicants, by increased giving for all purposes and by the reduction of the total parish indebtedness to a remarkably low level. The Bishop deplored the falling off in membership in the Church Schools and noted that this is concurrent with the increase in Juvenile delinquency. This, he said, is due, among other factors, to war dislocations, and to the fact that so many entire families are so absorbed in seeking material gains, that the religious life of the family is neglected. Bishop Brown urged that the laity see to it that the clergy are adequately paid. He stated that 14 1-2% of the clergy of Southern Virginia are now chaplains in the armed forces. The colored work in Southern Virginia is progressing and the Negroes are assuming more responsibility. Last year they paid assessments to the diocese and pledges to the Church's Program 100%.

In closing, Bishop Brown referred to the distress of war conditions and stated that faith in God and a hope that is built upon that faith and an awareness of God in human life, gives us the power to be patient and calm.

That part of the Bishop's address referring to Church Schools was referred to the Department of Christian Education to investigate, study and report. Constitutional changes were proposed which, if adopted at the next session, will make possible an increase in the number of Colored Lay Delegates to Council. There are ten Colored cures in Southern Virginia. Council merged the unorganized parish of St. Luke's, in Southampton County, with the Nottoway Parish in the same County. A committee was appointed to consider the advisability of affiliating the diocese with the Virginia Council of Churches. Church Program Askings for 1945, representing an increase of approximately $6,000.00, were approved. Approved in principle the report of the committee on the program and organization of the Province of Washington. To avoid future legal complications, resolved that hereafter no church shall be erected upon land, the title to which has not been approved by the bishop and the Standing Committee. All financial reports reflected good conditions in the diocese.

On Tuesday night a comforting service was held in St. Paul's Church. The Rev. Moultrie Guerry gave an address of consolation to those who were anxious because of the war. All hymns and prayers were selected with a thought for those who are in war service.

City Mission's 100th Anniversary Marked

Boston, Mass—The one hundredth anniversary of incorporation of the Episcopal City Mission was marked on May 21 by a festival service in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill preached the anniversary sermon, and Bishop Raymond A. Heron conducted the service, assisted by Dean Edwin Jan van Etten; the Rev. Frederic C. Lawrence, member of the executive board; and the Rev. Frank M. Rathbone, senior member of the Mission's staff.

Honor was paid to the memory of the men who have directed this great social welfare organization of the diocese; the Rev. E. M. P. Wells, the Rev. Frederic B. Allen, and the Rev. Ernest I. Dennen, each of whom pioneered in the social work exemplified today as Bishop Heron, the present superintendent of the Mission listed them, by two great institutions, Seamen's Club of Boston and Morville House, a home for elderly women; camping privileges for boys and girls through six camps; summer day-camps and vacation schools for city-bound children; a recreation center for women; mission parishes in four crowded city areas; support of chaplains in sixteen city hospitals; and a small but intensive work with the blind.

One of the assets of the Episcopal City Mission has been its adaptability to changing civic conditions and the natural changes in the type of people to whom it ministers. When a work becomes unnecessary, it is abandoned or else given over to the agency which supersedes it; but the same pioneering spirit is evident, for the Episcopal City Mission aims to be in the van of social progress.

Memorial to Miss Eva Corey in the Making

Boston, Mass.—A memorial to Miss Eva Downing Corey is in the making through subscriptions, large or small, from the men and women, and young people, too, whose lives she has touched or influenced throughout the Church. It takes the form of a "Special Thanksgiving Offering," the income of which—listed separately and not accredited to any one diocese, is to be added annually to the United Thank Offering of the entire Church. In this way, the Eva Downing Corey Memorial will cover all phases of the work near to the heart of the one it commemorates and which she helped so signally during her lifetime. The memorial is sponsored by the Women's Division of the Massachusetts Church Service League, the treasurer being Mrs. Parker K. Ellis, 45 Claremont Street, Newton 58, Massachusetts. Miss Laura Revere Little is chairman of the committee.

U. T. O. Presentation

Boston, Mass.—Presentation of the United Thank Offering on May 17 in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul was made by the women of the diocese, with the result for the past year totaling $11,905.40. Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill was the celebrant at the service of Holy Communion in the morning, and the Very Rev. Charles L. Taylor, Jr., dean of the Episcopal Theological School, preached. In the afternoon, Miss Gertrude Baker, diocesan U. T. O. treasurer, presided at a meeting in the Cathedral Crypt, when the guest speaker was Mrs. James S. Allen, chairman of the American Section of the Governing Board of the Women's Christian College, Madras, India. Also speaking was Miss Helen Turnbull, hitherto the field worker with Episcopal students in women's colleges in New England and now about to begin her new work as director of Windham House.

DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON

Admiral King, Speaker at Massing of Colors Service

Stating that over-confidence at home is an injustice to our men going into battle, Admiral Earnest J. King addressed an audience of 12,000 assembled in the amphitheater on the grounds of the Washington Cathedral Sunday afternoon.

This colorful service, held every year for the past sixteen years to commemorate the honored dead, is sponsored by the Military Order of the World Wars and the Cathedral.

Brigadier-General Albert L. Cox, National Commander; Major-General Walter C. Baker, and Colonel Edwin S. Bettleheim, Adjutant of the District Chapter of the Military Order of the World Wars, were in charge, together with the Cathedral staff.

The Commander-in-chief of the United States Fleet was presented to the audience by the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington.

Reviewing the past conditions attendant upon the entrance of the country into the war, the Admiral contrasted the size and operations of the United States Navy before and after Pearl Harbor. He reminded his auditors of the necessity of realizing the enormity of the task before victory can be fully assured, and enumerated the sacrifices that have already been made, not only in the casualties of our armed forces, but in the disturbance of the lives of their families, who had been deprived of their loved ones through service in the forces engaged.

"To remember our dead is to have our love of country lifted to a new level. 'To Him we must commit our dead, ourselves, and our country.' Our colors can only be blessed when we honor Him."

The Presiding Bishop Appeals For the Seminaries

"The fees paid by students are never sufficient to cover the cost of higher education. Not only is the income derived from endowments inadequate to make up the discrepancy, but if Seminaries are to be kept in touch with the needs of our time, it does seem to me important that the living members of the Church should feel a deep responsibility for the training of men for the ministry."

civic groups took part in the brilliant procession through the Cathedral grounds to the assembly in the large amphitheatre to the north of the Cathedral.

The service was preceded by a concert by the United States Marine Band.

YOUTH MASS MEETING

The Washington Cathedral was the scene of the massing of the youth of the Diocese of Washington at a service beginning at 7:30 P. M. on May 14, 1944. This is the annual service for the Council of Youth Organizations of the Diocese and was attended by members of the Young People's Fellowship; Junior Daughters of the King; Junior Woman's Auxiliary; Brotherhood of St. Andrew; Girls' Friendly Society;; Canterbury Clubs and the Servants of Christ the King, and Order of St. Vincent.

In greeting the young people assembled before him Bishop Dun stated that he wanted to lay emphasis on the theme of Growing Up and Out. This he defined as not only growing in stature but growing in the right relationships with people about us.

The Young People's message was delivered by the Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, Maryland. The Rev. Mr. Doll used the story of David and Goliath as the basis of his remarks to show how David used what he had at hand, pointing out that the same might be done by the youth of today, who all had varying abilities and talents which they might use in the service of God, for Christ and His Church.

Following the service a reception was held in the Bishop's Garden, adjoining the Cathedral, with Bishop and Mrs. Dun and the Clerical Members of the Council of Youth Organizations receiving. Refreshments were provided and served by the Girls' Friendly Society. The Rev. Charles W. Wood, rector of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek, is chairman of the Council of Youth Organizations under whom the service was conducted.

COUNCIL DIOCESE OF VIRGINIA

for lay workers in Virginia, for missionary work outside the State, for appropriations to the American Bible Society, the Board of Christian Education and the Board of Christian Social Relations.

A total of $40,000 was voted for lay workers in the State, an increase of $3,000 over the present budget, and $78,000 for the Diocesan missionary work, an increase of approximately $8,000 over the present budget figure.

Veterans' Aid Planned

Bishop Tucker pointed to the plans being made for aid to men now in the armed services upon their return as "one of the real problems the church must face".

He referred to the fact that on June 1 he will cease to be the Bishop of the Diocese and expressed his confidence in the continued growth of the diocesan work under the direction of Bishop Goodwin and the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, the Suffragan Bishop.

Bishop Goodwin, in his pastoral address, referred to the trend toward a "liberalization" of the canon on holy matrimony, explaining that "the church is not satisfied with the present canon". He asked that clergy and laity alike study the subject "in order that the mind of God's people may be guided into the way of His truth".

Last Day of Council

St. Paul's Church of Richmond was named as host for the 150th annual Council of the Episcopal Diocese of Virginia next May at the closing session of the 149th annual council meeting at All Saints' Church yesterday afternoon.

A resolution was adopted calling for a "fitting observance" of the occasion of the 150th annual council meeting in 1945.

Supports Marriage Tie

During the morning session the council went on record as believing that the Protestant Episcopal Church should exert its influence to support the sanctity of the marriage tie.

The council also advocated the repeal of lenient divorce laws, regarding the present trend in divorces as a threat to civilization.

ORDINATIONS

Priest

The Rev. Harry R. Morgan, this year's graduate of Nashotah House, and ordained to the priesthood May 19 by Bishop Wallace E. Conkling, of Chicago, has b e e n appointed for missionary service in the Panama Canal Zone, according to announcement by the National Council's Overseas Department.

Mr. Morgan is 30 years old, a member of Christ Church, Streator, Ill. He studied at the University of Wisconsin and later at Carroll College, from which he received his B. A. degree.

The Rev. Benedict H. Hanson, Jr., was advanced to the priesthood on May 16, in Old St. Paul's Church, Baltimore, where he was baptized, confirmed and ordained deacon.

The Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving, D. D., rector emeritus of the Church, who baptized Mr. Hanson, presented him for confirmation and for ordination to the diaconate, also presented him for ordination to the priesthood.

The Rt. Rev. Noble C. Powell, D. D., bishop of Maryland, ordained, and the Rt. Rev. Edward T. Helfenstein, D. D., read the litany.

Since his ordination to the diaconate last May, Mr. Hanson has been serving at Curate at St. Bartholomew's, Ten Hills, Baltimore.

The Rev. Donald Fraser Forrester, S. T. D., professor and secretary of the faculty of the General Theological Seminary, New York City, preached the sermon.

Deacons

Sidney Swain Rood was ordained to the diaconate on Sunday morning, May 14 by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of Michigan, in Grace Church, Port Huron, Mr. Rood's home parish, which lasted for two hours and was attended by 700 people. The service of ordination actually followed a service of confirmation at which 66 were confirmed.

Mr. Rood was presented for ordination by the Rev. A. E. DuPlan, rector of Grace Church. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Percy Norwood, Ph. D., a member of the faculty of the Seabury-Western Seminary, from which Mr. Rood is soon to graduate. The Litany and Epistle were read by the Rev. C. F. Butts, of Harvard, Illinois, in whose parish Mr. Rood has been assisting during his term at the Seminary. Mr. Rood will probably begin his ministry in the mission field of the Diocese of Michigan.

Howard Russell Barker, of Newport; Andrew Royston Cochran, of Pawtucket, and Archibald Shrady Hill, of New York, were ordained to the diaconate on the morning of Ascension Day by the Rt. Rev. James DeWolf Perry, bishop of Rhode Island, in the Cathedral of St. John, Providence, R. I. The respective presenters were the Rev. Messrs. Nelson W. Bryant, of St. George's Church, Newport; the Rev. Harold L. Hutton, of St. Paul's, Pawtucket; and the Rev. Charles Townsend, of St. Stephen's in Providence. The preacher was the Rev. John V. Butler, Jr., rector of St. Martin's in Povidence. The Litanist was the Rev. Geoge P. Huntington, vicar of Holy Trinity Church, Tiverton, R. I.

The Rev. Mr. Barker will serve as assistant to the vicar of the Chapel of the Incarnation in New York City. The Rev. Mr. Cochran will be assistant at Christ Church, Cambridge, Mass. The Rev. Mr. Hill will become assistant at St. Andrew's Church, Ann Arbor, Michigan.

DEATHS

Rev. John F. Droste

The Rev. John Frederick Droste retired priest of the District of Puerto Rico, since 1936, died at his home near San Juan on May 13. He had reached his 80th birthday on May 7. Born in Holland, he first went to the Dutch East Indies as a missionary. Bad health there sent him to the United States and, after the Spanish-American war, was sent to Puerto Rico. He there came under the influence of the Church through the Rev. Harvey P. Walter and was made deacon by Bishop Van Buren, later in 1915, being advanced to the priesthood by Bishop Colmore. He served his whole time as priest at the Mission of the Resurrection in Manati which he established.

While in Java he was married by cable to Mary Keyser in Holland. She was his constant helper and an indefatigable worker for the Church. She died in 1939 and their adopted daughter, Ethel A. Stevens, in December, 1943. He has left his estate in Bishop Colmore's hands to be used for the advancement of the Church's work among the country people of Puerto Rico.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Those who give have all things; they who withhold, nothing.
—Hindoo Proverb.

The highest honor in the universe is to be God's servants; to worship Him is the noblest employment.
—John Wesley.

The Christian experience is not the same to any two persons, but it is alike to all in being an experience of salvation.

"Wherever His Spirit has come to dwell, there is the Kingdom, here and now."

Pride is the greater sin because it never admits its sinfulness.
—Sel.

When a mercy comes in the form of affliction, we often need time and grace to call it a mercy: happy they who need not time to do so.
—Robert C. Chapman.

It is partial service that makes painful service; it is half devotion that makes hard devotion.
—G. D. Watson.

Do not say, "Life is short". Christ's life was short; yet He finished the work that was given Him to do. He was never in a hurry. And if God has given us anything to do for Him, He will give time enough to finish it with a repose like our Master's.
—Selected.

Christianity is a life, toward God of filial trust and loyalty, in one's self of genuine goodness, and toward men of self-sacrificing helpfulness, the inner principle being fellowship with God, who loves that He may save.
—Clarke.

When we speak of liberty we speak of a social fact, and the question of liberty is a question of what men really are to one another, and in what manner they ought to live together. It is an inspiration to know that Jesus offers the solution of this social problem not primarily in the relation of men to one another, but in the relation of them all to God. This surely is the ideal way. The heavens rule. God, not man, is the key of life.

When God's children pray for the coming of God's Kingdom and the reign of His will, they pledge themselves to the bringing of His Kingdom and the doing of His will.

AN INVITATION TO THE ENTIRE OUTFIT

Drew, Mississippi, Box 133,
November 24, 1943.

S. Sgt. James A. Hight, 33090627,
Hdq. Co. 3rd Bn., 162nd. Inf.,
A. P. O. No. 41, Care Postmaster,
U. S. Army,
San Francisco, Calif.

Dear Sgt. Hight:

This letter is addressed to you but is meant for your entire outfit, especially those who have written such friendly and consoling letters to Mrs. Eubanks. Those letters have certainly helped her to bear and be brave.

I have contemplated writing you for some time but have hesitated because—not knowing what part of the states you hail from, I did not know just what your attitude toward the southern negro might be or how you would feel about a letter you might receive from one of them.

Well, I'm one and with all the respect I know how to offer I'm begging you not to regard my letter as a nuisance.

I have been with the Eubanks family since Pfc. "Bob" Eubanks was a little fellow wearing knee pants. He, his twin brother and myself were constant companions. The family took me in when I was homeless, hungry and destitute of friends. I was orphaned at the age of five and I had had some real tough breaks and at the time I came to the Eubanks I was very much discouraged.

From the very first, the twins seemed to take me on as their personal porperty.

From a deep sense of loyalty and gratitude on my part our attachment became more mutual and grew into a bond of friendship which even war and its terrible sacrifices can not sever.

Having known Pfc. Eubanks intimately since his early childhood, having had a chance to watch at close range his general tendencies, his outstanding characteristics and his natural reactions under ordinary as well as the most extremely trying circumstances, having shared and shared all these with him, and having devoted the very best that was in me to helping him, I was naturally proud to see him develop into such a fine young man, friendly, good-natured, clean in body and soul, a natural born leader.

Today I consider it a blessing and an outstanding privilege to have known him and am humbly grateful to have been accepted by him as a real friend.

Sgt., I'm only a negro doing domestic service; because of my age; and a physical handicap my usefulness at certain kinds of labor is limited; but I feel that I am honor bound to bear an equal share of responsibility for America's destiny. I am investing every dollar I can into war bonds and other drives to aid the war effort.

Even if I knew nothing of patriotism or had never heard of President Lincoln, I know when I have lost a friend and I know those who destroy my friends are my enemies. When they got Pfc. Eubanks they got a part of me; but not the fighting part, thank God. I am hoping and praying that something I have already contributed has paid the delivery charges on a final message to the Jap that got him; but just in case it was not the right one, I am going to keep on sending until there is not a dad-burned, left-footed, slant-eyed, buck-toothed, son-of-a-heathen left to get the word.

To me, Private Eubanks is not dead. He was tired and God, our Supreme Commander-in-Chief, allowed him to be transferred to a rest camp. His part of the job is done and may his noble spirit rest in peace. He has been posthumously awarded The Purple Heart for

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

SATURDAY COMES with its gleaming open maw, inviting us all to foolishness and dissipation, both of time, money and physical resources, and holding us in slavery over the free hours we possess. We need plenty of time in quiet this day to keep us straight and in constant preparation for the morrow. Curbstone Gullies and Foot Clicking Sallies tempt the very devil on this day at week's end. Spendthrift Willies and Greedy Frillies, like a head on a mug of beer, froth up, then quickly bubble away. There is more trouble per square inch gotten into on Saturday than on any other day of the week I am not sure what your Saturday weakness is. One of mine is laziness. I just want to be let alone and loll through the day. But only on rainy Saturdays is this possible now. There are chores to do and no one else to do them; there is Sunday and its double responsibilities I cannot escape. For me, I want Saturday to be a day of rest. For others the day is more often one of restlessness. 90% of the troubles which come on this day could be prevented if the day and the week-end were set according to God's plan at this very hour. How can we prevent double trouble from blowing the peace and joy right out of our lives?

AFTER HAVEN have a quiet time. Live out in your imagination the known plans for the day. Be honest. Examine the motives and the possible consequences—oh yes, we know both full well, probably from long experience. Would God approve or is there something else which should come first? Keep moving within this area until clear direction emerges to give up this, to shun that, to do these other things instead. Somehow the choice is seldom in doubt when we go at it this way. Of course, God cannot force us to take the right way. But in his presence we see the sham and foolishness and selfishness of that affair or friendly hour with the boys or that secret extravagance. Some will feel I would have them pass their holidays in isolated piousness with no fun at all. The point is the fun we think we are planning too often has a ton of brick poised over our heads for dealing out the headaches. All a Christian must do is to question the right and wrong of our proposed happy hours and weigh the cost of them. When our recreation is right there are only good consequences. When our recreation is wrong, the evils that beset us are almost without number. As we plan the day, keep the jar to that salve for the conscience tightly shut and be rather obvious:

Are my plans selfish? Am I being forgetful of the family, for example? Is there any possibility of regret in them? Am I deliberately exposing myself to temptation by my association with others at certain times and certain places? Are my expenditures according to the budget? Am I closing my eyes and refusing to count the income against the outgo?

Will what I plan to do help fit me for another week's living? Am I building up my bodily resources or tearing them down, am I planning to dissipate my energies through late hours and too much to drink?

Will I be worthy to appear in God's House tomorrow and give thanks for the happiness of this day? Am I planning to sleep through Church time and try to forget?

"But I didn't know it would end this way" is too often a post week-end lament. I maintain that at this hour of devotion we can be sure of our free hours and what they will bring if we submit them to God for direction and keep within the bounds of His will for them. I know from experience that whatever checks with His plan for us is of far greater joy than the cheap little moments we think up all tied up with our physical passions and desires, and earmarked for trouble.

THE COLLECT FOR THE FIRST SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

O God, the strength of all those who put their trust in thee; Mercifully accept our prayers; and because, through the weakness of our mortal nature, we can do no good thing without thee, grant us the help of thy grace, that in keeping thy commandments we may please thee, both in will and deed; through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Amen.

Some Sunshiny Rectories

An Old Parson, in the Churchman.

My wife waked up the other night and said, "What is all this about sweated rectories? I look back," she said, "to the nine years spent in a country rectory on five hundred dollars a year, as more full of sunshine and happiness than any time in my life."

The parson agreed with her. It is not only that particular rectory, but the homes of many faithful and hard-working clergy, even in these days of "the high cost of living," seem more full of sunshine and happiness than most homes.

The parson looks back with the tenderest feelings to that first rectory. It was not a pretentious building, but a little two-story frame house with four rooms, and a porch lacking a roof. The deacon and his bride, though she came from one of the stateliest homes in the land, felt, when they first saw it, that it was full of charm, because it was their home.

It was not extravagantly furnished. The sideboard, at first, was a bale box covered with a red cotton table cloth. Those, too, were days of high cost of living and of small incomes. They took possession of the rectory with two dollars and a half as their fund to start housekeeping on. But the store-room was well stocked with provisions by the poor but kind parishioners. It was not long before the funds had dwindled to two ten-cent paper notes. A wagon came with some belongings of the bride, and, in a generous mood, the deacon presented one ten-cent note as a tip to the driver. The wind from the open door blew the other into the fireplace, and the bride laughed and said, "Now it is all gone." So for awhile we were free from the responsibility of wealth.

Somehow or other, the days went by, and though there was plain living and an attempt at high thinking, the joy of the work, of preaching the gospel of love, of caring for the sick, rich and poor, the feeling that it was Christ's work, made our life so full of interest, of happiness and content, that there was little room to think of privation and of hardship.

Those were days when "things" did not seem to exercise any great tyranny in life. The parson's wife wore a dark calico dress in winter and a light one in summer. But most of the people were gowned in the same way. When the parson had to go to Council, his wife and a friend managed to turn his coat, which was rather faded and worn. It looked quite fresh and new when reversed, only the buttonholes and the buttons had changed sides, which may have made it seem peculiar to the city folk.

Then there came a day when God sent to the little rectory a gift that flooded it with sunshine, and made life seem richer and fuller than ever before. The deacon knelt by the bedside of his wife, and together they prayed, hand in hand and heart in heart, that God might take their first-born son and use him for that ministry which we had found so precious, so full of happiness and honor. The deacon had intended in his seminary days, to offer himself for the foreign field, but his health, at that time, had debarred him. Now it was in his heart that God might take his child and make him a messenger to the lands where there is no music of the gospel, no mission of the Christ. God answered the prayer and the thought, and today the child of the little rectory is preaching the glad tidings to those afar off.

ST. JOHN'S CHURCH, WARSAW, RICHMOND COUNTY, VIRGINIA

The Rt. Rev. Frederick Deane Goodwin, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, was the rector and elected bishop coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia from this charge.

The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., later Bishop of Southern Virginia, father of the Presiding Bishop, was the rector for nine years.

The news of the great event which happened in the little rectory got abroad, and soon there came a delegation to see the wonderful child, the grandfather, the grandmother, the uncle and the aunt. There was not much room, so the study was given up and the deacon slept surreptitiously in the hall, which was eight by six. He had to work in a small attic. He prepared a sermon on the resurrection of the body. As he thinks of it now, it was not a very marvelous masterpiece. It was written on the pages of an old ledger, in the absence of sermon paper, and on the top of a flour barrel for lack of a desk. But it made a wonderful impression on the visiting grandfather. He was often mistaken, by reason of his chivalry and kindness of heart, of his courage and tenderness, of his strength mingled with simplicity, for Colonel Newcome. When he heard that sermon he was greatly moved. He would say to his friends, statesmen and leaders of affairs: "I wish you could have heard that sermon. I have listened to the great preachers of England, of France and America, and I never heard anything like it—and it was written, sir, in a garret on the top of a flour barrel!"

Fortunately, the deacon's head was not turned by

THE RECTORY

The Rectory of St. John's Church, Warsaw, Virginia, about 1882, showing the then rector, the Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, and his family. The boy standing with the stick in his hand is now the Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

The baby in the carriage is the Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Ohio. The two bishops were born in the right hand corner room.

the kindly praise, and that sermon has long since been consigned to the flames.

And so the days and the years went by, and the little rectory, now enlarged, let in more and more sunshine, and echoed with the laughter and prattle of little children, until there were six. One of the girls herself afterwards married a clergyman and went back to this same rectory to live. The other boy, who had golden curls, is now himself in a sunshiny rectory. They all look back to the days when $500 a year (the salary did not increase with the children) seemed to bring content and happiness, when the pay of the ministry seemed to color all things in life.

There were other rectories all around. One neighboring pastor, friend and classmate, was rich in children, if in nothing else, but there was an atmosphere of happiness and peace in that sweet home. The two parsons would meet in each other's homes every week or so. They would play a great game of quoits, using horseshoes, and they seemed to enjoy it as much as some do golf, which is more costly, but not more satisfactory. They would smoke many pipes together, and read books, and talk of all things in heaven and earth, and try to bear one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ.

There was another rectory full of sunshine, though the salary was only $300 a year, and they had meat only twice a week. And another, where the parson, who had given up a good law practice for a rectory and five hundred dollars, radiated sunshine wherever he went and touched the lives of many for good.

It is strange, looking back through all the years, how the children from these simple rectories have made their way in life—many in the ministry, some in the professions, but nearly all, men and women, doing good service in the world, and keeping the impress of character which came from the rectory, where the presence of Christ was intuitively felt, where there were books and culture and refinement, in spite of poverty, and thoughts of high things which all went into the fashioning of manhood and womanhood.

It is my good fortune to visit many rectories today They are my chosen abiding places, where I feel at home. In spite of the inevitable struggle with the res angusta domi, there is in the average rectory an atmosphere of cheer and content, an absence of complaining which refreshes one. Father and mother and children, working together, all putting the parson's work in the chief place, seem to find in that work such rich compensations, such real happiness, that troubles seem light, and self-denials seem nothing beside the joy and privilege of seeing the Christ. I know many rectories, simple and plain, where there is sometimes lack, but I know of none whose owners would exchange them for more luxurious homes, if they had to leave behind the joy of the ministry of Christ.

For sunshine, the light that comes from afar, transfigures the lowliest homes and makes beautiful the humblest abode, if the benediction of the presence of Christ be in them, so that the heart sings for gladness.

By Way of Explanation

YEARS AGO the above story appeared in the Southern Churchman. It so impressed me that I cut it out. There were parts that reminded me of what my mother would tell us of life in the rectory, of the first church, in a small village, where our father, the Rev. Alexander W. Weddell, served his deaconate.

In view of current events in the Virginia Diocese with the Presiding Bishop, the Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, retiring as Bishop of Virginia, instead of holding the two offices and in order to give his full labors to the work of the former, it was felt that this revealing picture of his earliest years and that of his family would be of interest to church people everywhere.

The addition of the names of some of those mentioned in Sunshiney Rectories, the church and the rectory and their locations, are given with permission of Bishop Tucker.

It must be recalled that the War Between the States had completely wiped away the fortunes of Virginians, life in the South had been completely revolutionized. The younger clergy were veterans of the Confederate Army. About the period of which the "Old Parson" is writing, Virginia (as I once heard him say in a sermon) was devastated by war, its people poor, its churches despoiled and battered by shot and shell.

Bishop Tucker's bride who, he says, had come from one of the stateliest mansions in Virginia, was Maria Washington, born at Mount Vernon. A very remarkable woman. Outstanding for her forceful Christian character, her wise counsel was sought by many. Her humbleness, combined with a sense of humor, made her a delightful companion.

The first born son, for whom the parents prayed at his birth that he would give his life to the ministry, was Henry St. George Tucker. Few parents ever had their prayers more completely answered. The son went when a young man as a missionary to Japan, became President of St. Paul's College, Tokyo, Bishop of Kyoto. After twenty-five years he returned to America and became professor at the Virginia Theological Seminary. In 1926, was elected Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese of Virginia, later Bishop of Virginia and then honored by the whole church in electing him Presiding Bishop. His spiritual qualities and leadership have been recognized by other communions in his election as President of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

The church to which the young deacon went was historic old St. John's at Warsaw, in Richmond County. The congregation was small composed, among others of the Tayloes from Mt. Airy, the Wellfords from Sabin Hall, and the Brockenbroughs from Belle Ville, whose descendants still worship there.

THE LITTLE RECTORY had been purchased largely through the efforts of Mrs. Brockenbrough who raised the first money for the purpose. It is to her granddaughter, Miss Eliza Bland Lamb, that I am indebted for the accompanying pictures of the church and the rectory, the latter having been a cherished possession at Belle Ville for many years, but I believe has never been reproduced. St. John's and its rectory are linked in a unique degree with Bishops. The Right Rev. Frederick Deane Goodwin, D. D., who on June the first succeeded Bishop Tucker as Bishop of Virginia, lived here as rector for about eleven years, and when made Bishop Coadjutor continued for two years to make the rectory his home. Bishop Tucker, the Old Parson, a former rector, became Bishop of Southern Virginia. Beverley D. Tucker, Jr., the present Bishop of Ohio, like his older brother, was born here. It is to him that his father refers in Sunshiney Rectories as "the boy with the golden curls, who now has a rectory of his own." This reference has a very personal interest to me now, though I had never seen him when I first read this story, for before becoming Bishop "Dr." Tucker, as his congregation still call him affectionately, was my beloved rector at historic St. Paul's, Richmond, for fifteen years.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

him, in the Red Sea, where they were drowned. And then he led,—one might almost say, carried, that formless horde of men and women through the wild desert country to Horeb. And in a matter of years he had made of them a tough desert nation, unified, bold, ready to enter the Promised Land and to possess it! Moses always said, and those who followed him agreed, that one man could not have accomplished that without the aid of God! Fired with zeal from God, and upheld by God's strength, he accomplished the impossible!

MOSES BASED the Law and the Covenant which he gave to the Children of Israel on that promise, that it was God's power which had given them freedom! It was Freedom by the Gift of God! And by His gift alone! And that is the source of freedom to this day! God set the people free, not because they deserved it, but because He was gracious! As a matter of fact, they did not deserve freedom. They had done nothing to win it! If they had won it, for themselves, they would have owed God no moral debt. The fact that He set them free when they did not deserve it put them in His debt, put them under moral obligation to obey His Law. This is the genesis of the Covenant! The tremendous moral emphasis, which we find in the Hebrew prophets, goes back to Moses, and to the work he did for God! If there had been no Moses, men would never have realized the greatness of their debt to the Creator,—the Father of Human Freedom,—and there would have been no Hebrew Prophets,—and no Christian Gospel. Amen.

The Beginning of Liberation

June 6th, 1944 will probably go down in history, along with other memorable dates. The armies of Liberation are on the march. The way that lies ahead is not easy. It is no series of primrose paths. War is a grim and tragic business. Human flesh is weak; it is tender. It tears easily and may be quickly destroyed. It is human flesh that composes the armies of liberation. Trained as these men have been from Commander to lowly privates, mistakes will be made. Human bodies will be torn and wracked with pains. But their courage will not fail them. They will win freedom for themselves and for the oppressed peoples they have come to liberate.

One thinks almost immediately of the composition of these armies, that on this historic day invade the continent of Europe. Armies of United Nations. Here are men from the hamlets and villages; from the industrial cities, and the cities where cultural pursuits are held high. There are men from that tight little island, England. They are the descendants of long lines of warriors. They love and respect freedom. Here are men from a new continent. These lines go back to England, but their forbears also dared to build a new nation in the northern half of a vast continent. They too love and respect freedom. They are Canadians. Then there are the armies of a young giant, that in a brief span of years has become a powerful nation. Her armies are composed of men, whose forbears have come literally from every race and clime. They come from a nation that was conceived in liberty and dedicated to the great experiemnt that democracy will work when given a chance. They, too, have freedom and liberty. These are true armies of liberation.

Now throw all this approach against the background of our Christian heritage. First "God hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on the face of the earth." Surely this means that it is the will of God that His children and His potential children shall dwell together in peace and harmony. The armies of Liberation are going to do their part to see that the opportunity to give expression to this will of God is made possible for all men. You and I as individual Christians must do the part assigned to us. Prayer is one phase of that part. We trust that there was no parish in this Church to which we belong that was closed on Invasion Day. We cannot all, physically speaking, be at the "front." We can and should be there in our prayers.

Again from our Christian approach we should exhibit a courage and a radiant faith, that out of the cauldron of this dread hour, a new and living way will be created for those who will have paid with their lives. In that way and in that way only can we, as Christians, bring comfort to those who by this war have tasted the anguish of bereavement. If there was ever a time when the faith of the Resurrection morn was needed it is now. We believe it; so too may these sorrowing thousands believe it, if we, as Christians, express that faith nobly our lives.

Finally, we headed this editorial the Beginning of Liberation. True freedom cannot come for any of us until all our brethren made in the image of God are free. That means even our enemies. And as Christians we know that true liberty is only found where the spirit of Christ Jesus abounds. This is the beginning of liberation from the cruelties of evil men, who have in their vaunted boastfulness, attempted to banish God from His universe. The true Christian has always been aware that their plans were doomed to failure. At their point of failure we must take up the banner and prove our faith in God and our love for our fellow man by using all means at our disposal to see that true liberation is granted to all men every where.

The beginning and the end of true liberty is to be found in Christ Jesus our Lord.

MOSES

Freedom by the Gift of God

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

DEEP IN THE WILDERNESS OF SIN, in the desert, rise the grim cliffs of the mountain called Horeb, which is Sinai. So steeply does it lift its granite walls from the surrounding plain that in many places one can actually walk up to it on the desert sands and touch the mountain with his hand. On its summit huge clouds often gather and swirl like smoke about the crags, and fearful thunderstorms rate for hours, and sometimes for days together, filling the whole mountain with the fire of lightning, and with the voice of thunder, while the desert nearby is under an unclouded sun.

Almost in the shadow of this awful mountain two brothers met, one of them obviously a traveller from Egypt, but the other dressed in the costume of a desert herdsman. Neither man was young, yet both were strong and full of vigor, and in the eyes of the one in herdsman's dress could be seen wisdom, and the power to command.

Upon meeting they embraced, and then stood at arm's length, looking into each other's eyes. The one from Egypt spoke first,—"It has been a long time!"

"Yes, a long time," answered the herdsman. "I have not seen you for forty years, Aaron."

"We knew that you were alive, and in the wilderness, but little more," said Aaron. "I came as soon as I got your word appointing this mountain as a meeting-place. An awful journey! What a God-forsaken place you live in, Moses!"

"Not God-forsaken!" replied Moses. "I love this desert, Aaron. And I understand it. The desert is stern, but for one who understands it, it can also be kind. For me the desert spreads its table. I know the places where the Sweet Water lies scarcely hidden beneath the sands. I know the time of the flight of the wild birds across the wilderness. I know the the places where the fruit grows in the hidden valleys. And, as for God, He is here in this mountain. This is His home. I knew that a God lived here, for often have I seen His fire playing about these cliffs, and have heard His voice, talking in the thick darkness, and in the swirling smoke on the mountain-top; but I did not know that He was our God,—the God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob,—until He revealed Himself to me through the Voice that spoke from the Burning Bush."

"Your letter mentioned something of that sort," said Aaron, "but I did not understand it very clearly. You said something about a new name of God?"

"I will tell you about that," answered Moses. "You knew that you were coming to see me before you got my message?"

"Yes," replied Aaron. "I did. I kept dreaming about you, and it seemed that I heard a Voice in my dream, saying to me, 'Go; seek your brother Moses in the wilderness!' The thing was so real that it frightened me! And when your letter came appointing this meeting-place I set forth at once. The Egyptians have had copper mines in this desert for hundreds of years, and I knew that you fled here after it became known that you had killed that Egyptian task-master. What a stir that made! The adopted son of Pharoah's daughter kills an Egyptian officer for persecuting a Hebrew slave! Well, that was forty years ago, and they are all dead, every one. No one would recognize you now but your sister Miriam and me! This new Pharaoh is more bitter against our people than his father, from whom you fled. The sufferings of our people are tremendous. We labor under the task-master's whips to build his monuments and his treasure-cities, and to till his fields. Our people fall under the lash, and die where they fall, dragging the heavy stone, or they toil from daylight to dark digging the clay, and making it into brick. The Children of Israel eat the bread of poverty in labor and in tears in a house of bondage. In the days of our fathers the Pharaohs knew Joseph, and were kind to Jacob's children; but the house of those Pharaohs has fallen. This present Pharaoh, like his father before him, knows not Joseph; and the hope of Israel has departed, and the glory of his children is in the dust."

"Do not despair, Aaron," said Moses. "God still loves us! Our people are His people, and He remembers His promise which He sware unto Abraham, our father, that He should make us a mighty nation, and give us the land of Canaan, and that in us and in our seed should all the families of the earth be blessed. I know that this is true! God has revealed it to me, and has given me to know His new Name,—Jehovah, —I-AM-THE-ETERNAL-I-AM,—and He has entrusted me with the duty of leading His people out of bondage into the Promised Land. And I shall do it, through God who strengthens me! In spite of the power of Pharaoh, and of Egypt, and in spite of his armies, and of his hate, God will set His people free, and will bring them up out of that land of servitude, and I shall lead them to this mountain, and they shall worship God here, and God shall reveal His Holy Covenant to them; and they shall enter the promised land!"

And Moses lifted up his hand, and swept it in a gesture over the desert at the foot of the mountain. "They shall camp there!" he said. "All the hosts of Israel shall camp there, and God shall speak to them! And you shall see it, Aaron!"

Moses stood for a moment, his hand lifted, his head thrown back, and his keen eyes shining with inner fire. And Aaron felt a thrill go through him as the tremendous vigor and power of the man touched him. And he saw in that moment what all men have since seen, the inspired Prophet of God, the mighty Lawgiver, the Moral Genius whose leadership has transformed and uplifted the religion of more than half the world.

THAT IS THE STORY, as it has come down to us, of one of the most fateful meetings in the history of mankind. This was one of the determining moments in the story of human thought and conscience! Moses took his brother Aaron and went into Egypt, and through the power of God he set his people free.

Moses has been of especial interest to me. I wish I had space to tell you all the interesting things I have discovered about him through a careful matching of the Bible accounts with the history of Egypt, and of Palestine: through a comparison of archaeological reports, and through a survey of the geography of the peninsula of Sinai. It would take too long. I could write a book about it; and some day, if I ever get the time, I may. Let it suffice for me to say that the Bible accounts, while somewhat idealized by later editing, are essentially true,—except in one respect. It seems quite probable that the editors who put the Book of the Exodus into the form in which we have it today themselves made a mistake about the date of the Pharaoh of the Oppression. They suggest Rameses II. As a matter of fact the Pharaoh of the Oppression was Thut-mose III, perhaps the greatest king, and certainly the greatest warrior that Egypt ever produced. We have his mummy. It shows that he was a strongly built man, with a forehead almost as low as that of a gorilla. Yet he was a keen and able administrator, as well as a bold and able warrior. He inherited the throne when he was twelve years old, but his step-mother,—who was also his aunt,—was one of the ablest, and one of the most ambitious and domineering women who ever lived. She usurped the power, and thrust the young prince into the background, where he remained until her death. He hated her with a hatred almost beyond belief, and when she died he killed everybody that she had befriended, if he could lay his hands on them, and erased her name from every monument that she had erected. This was the "Pharaoh's Daughter," who drew Moses out of the Nile, and gave him his name. And it is certainly a coincidence, to say the least, that the name "Moses",—M-o-s-e-s, is exactly the same as the last half of the name of her step-son,—her husband's only son, by the way, and her nephew, since she and her husband were brother and sister,—Thut-mose.

This woman adopted the Hebrew child that she found floating in the ark of reeds in the Nile, and she raised him as a son of her own, for she had no son,—though she had two daughters,—but her husband had a son, by another woman. The name "Mose" was a family name in the 18th dynasty. Her husband was the fourth to bear it. His son was the fifth. But she gave it to her adopted son, whom she caused to be educated for the priesthood, intending to make him high priest of Amun-ra. No wonder Moses left Egypt in precipitate flight when his protectress died, and Thut-mose, who had been secretly strengthening himself for years, seized the throne!

Thut-mose reigned for thirty-three years after his step-mother's death. He had been in his grave seven years before Moses came back into Egypt to set his people free. In that great task the secrets of magic, and of sleight-of-hand, which were an acknowledged part of Egyptian priest-craft, and which he had learned as a part of his preparation to succeed to the high-priesthood of Amun-ra, stood him in good stead. He out-did the Egyptian priests at their own game, and frightened Thut-mose's successor, Amenophis II, into allowing the Hebrew people to go "three days' journey into the wilderness to sacrifice to their God." Three days' start was all that Moses needed. At any rate, it was all that he got.

HOW MUCH OF the pressure Moses brought upon Amenophis was Egyptian priest-magic, and how much was genuine miracle we have no way now of telling. But one thing is certain, Pharaoh's son died, at a time and in a way which Moses had predicted,—and that won the battle for Moses; and the unforgetable memory of it was enshrined in the Jewish Passover, and persists to this day.

Once in the wilderness the second half of Moses' education stood him in good stead. He knew the wilderness of Sinai as well as, and perhaps better, than you know the street where you live. God had prepared him for this moment, and for this task, from the moment of his birth. The Bible tells us of many wonderful things which happened in the deliverance of the children of Israel out of Egypt, and in their journey through the wilderness,—none of them are as much of a miracle as this man Moses himself. God may, and I think does, work earthly miracles when they are necessary to accomplish His purposes in the world. But I say, solemnly and with considered emphasis, that God's greatest wonders are worked in human nature.

Moses was, in many ways, a child of his time, even when he was rising above his time. He had no doubt that the pagan gods of Egypt were real, and that they were his enemies. But he gave his allegiance to the God his mother taught him to reverence when she was nursing him for the Egyptian queen. He had no compunction whatever in practicing the tricks of magic he had learned from his priestly studies in Egypt upon his own people, as well as upon the Egyptian king. They were a dull and stubborn nation, saved in spite of themselves,—you might almost say, against their will. He held them in line,—as he had held the Pharaoh in line,—by the force of fear. The striking of water from the rock, the fall of manna, seemingly from the skies, the predicting of the flight of birds almost to the day, seemed like miracles to these laborers and slaves from settled Egypt. Moses did not tell them that after forty years in the wilderness he knew the places where he might turn up water with his foot; and that the forming of the manna on the twigs of certain desert plants was known to him of old; and that he had marked in his mind the time of the yearly migration of the birds, from the north, almost to a day.

Yet he held them in line, and he gave them the Law which had come to him from God. And the verdict of the ages is with him! What he did was right. It was the will of God. In saving the Hebrew nation, he saved our kind of religion in the world. And more than that, by the act of saving the Hebrew nation, he helped to create our kind of religion in the world. The religion of the Hebrew prophets,—which is the heart of the Old Testament,—and out of which came the Christian Gospel,—goes back directly to the act of God in setting His people free from Egyptian bondage, through the instrumentality of His servant Moses! Moses never claimed to have freed those people by his own power. He always attributed his work to God, and in that he was right!

MOSES ACCOMPLISHED what, for one man, was patently impossible,—yet he did it. Egypt was at the height of its power. Thut-mose had carried his victorious standards all the way to the Euphrates. He had engaged in sixteen major campaigns in eighteen years, and had been victorious in all of them. His son, whom Moses bearded in his very palace, was the absolute ruler of the most powerful state in the world, with the world's most powerful army at his command. Moreover, he was a man of violent temper, who, that very year, had flayed seven kings alive, and had nailed their bodies to the palace wall to show what happened to those who crossed his will. Moses defied this man to his face; removed out of his kingdom more than three hundred thousand men, women and children, laborers, hewers of wood and drawers of water,—with their household goods, and their cattle,—and, be it also said, their neighbors' goods and cattle,—men and women, whom, incidentally, he had persuaded to follow him out. With but three days' start, he eluded pursuit, ingeniously trapped a detachment of veteran soldiers, sent out to take

India's General Council Meets

Feels Necessity for Increasing Number of Native-Born Bishops

The Anglican Church of India's General Council, which corresponds to the American Church's General Convention, was much occupied at its recent meeting by the necessity of increasing the number of bishops and of having a far higher proportion Indian-born. At present only one of the fifteen diocesans and two of the three assistants are Indian.

Reasons stated for increasing the number of bishops are: the need of smaller jurisdictions as the Church grows, each bishop wishing to be more closely in touch with his clergy and people; increased evangelistic stimulus as each diocesan could cover a smaller field more intensively; plans and methods of work can be better adapted to smaller areas that are more homogeneous than the present unwieldy dioceses. "Sound growth," writes the Bishop of Madras, "means more consultation and closer fellowship."

"And the new bishops must be Indian," adds a report of the Council. "Great disappointment has been caused by the slow growth of the indigenous episcopate." Recommendations made by a previously appointed committee and accepted by the Council include the following:

Each diocesan council is to consider whether division of the diocese is possible and desirable; where it is so, an area shall be marked to be committed to an assistant bishop; every endeavor shall be made to form this area, or any necessary modification of it, into a new diocese as soon as possible, the assistant becoming its diocesan.

Many of the dioceses had already been thinking along these lines. The Diocese of Calcutta, which is the mother or grandmother of all the Indian dioceses, is to set off still another, in East Bengal.

Lahore is to inaugurate two archdeaconries, both of which are later to become dioceses; one is Delhi, probably to come into being quite soon; the other is Sind, where plans are not yet complete.

Dornakal is to set off a diocese of Khammamett, under the present assistant bishop, Anthony Elliott.

Colombo, which is the diocesan name of Ceylon, is to be divided.

Lucknow is reviving an earlier plan to set off its northern area of the diocese of Meerut.

In 1940 Rangoon, the diocesan name of Burma, had nearly completed its plan for division, but this is delayed by the war.

BERKELEY DIVINITY SCHOOL CONFERS DEGREES

New Haven, Conn.—At the commencement exercises of the Berkeley Divinity School May 31 the Rt. Rev. Frederick G. Budlong, S. T. D., President of the School, conferred the honorary degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology on the Rev. Charles DuBois Broughton, Rector of the Church of the Ascension, Buffalo, N. Y.; Major Loyal Young Grahm, III, Chaplain U. S. A.; and the Rev. John Misao Yamazaki, a Japanese priest of the Episcopal Church. Students who received the degree of Bachelor of Sacred Theology in course were the Rev. Everett John Downes, now working in the Department of Youth of the Diocese of West Missouri; Frank Albert Frost, now in charge of a mission in Havana, Ill., and Robert Lawrence Johnson serving in St. Andrew's Church, Hartford. In addition, one student, Vincent Fischer, serving St. Luke's Parish, this city, received the diploma of graduation from the school after transferring from the Bangor Theological Seminary and completing requirements at Berkeley.

All candidates were presented by the Rev. Lawrence Rose, S. T. D., dean of the School. Dr. Gordon Keith Chalmers, President of Kenyon College, Gambier, Ohio, gave the commencement address.

Dr. Yamazaki, born in Matsumoto, Japan, attended the Berkeley Divinity School and graduated in the class of 1913, received his Bachelor of Sacred Theology degree in the following year after he had taken charge of St. Mary's Japanese Mission in Los Angeles, California, in the year of his graduation. He was vicar of St. Mary's Mission from that date until the outbreak of war with Japan in 1941, and became a recognized leader among the Christian Japanese in the city of Los Angeles and president of their Church Federation in addition to developing a well-organized and effective mission of the Episcopal Church in the city. At the time of the evacuation of the Japanese from the west coast, he was of considerable assistance to the government because of his influence among the Japanese. He himself was evacuated to Santa Anita Assembly Center and then to Camp Jerome, Arkansas, where he demonstrated his loyalty to this country so unmistakably that he was the victim of abuse and indignities at the hands of disloyal Japanese. In 1943 he was released from the camp and is now at Department of Domestic Missions of the National Council of the Episcopal Church, ministering to relocated Japanese in the Chicago area. He is highly regarded as a devoted Christian leader and scholar. He has four children; the eldest son, John, is also a priest of the Episcopal Church, now ministering to a Japanese congregation at the Gila Reservation in Arizona; two sons, Peter and James, are lieutenants in the U. S. Army, serving with the medical corps; a daughter, Louise, is a student at Carleton College, Minnesota.

Dr. Broughton graduated from Berkeley in 1898 and received his B. A. degree from Trinity College in 1895 and his M. A. degree from the same college in 1898. He was one of the last of the students of Bishop Williams—the founder of the Berkeley Divinity School, and since graduation has spent his entire ministry in New York State, where he was long president of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Western New York, secretary of the Board of Examining Chaplains, vice-president of the Executive Council; member of the Ecclesiastical Court; delegate to General Convention on many occasions; and is at present chaplain of the New York State Masonic Order and of the Buffalo Fire Department, and respected as one of the first citizens of Buffalo.

Dr. Graham graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1916 and from the Berkeley Divinity School in 1921. He was a long time member of the Standing Committee of the Diocese of Connecticut; Alumni Trustee of Berkeley from 1933 to 1942. He served with the Marines and was wounded in the first World War. Between the wars, he was chaplain with the rank of First Lieutenant of the 418th Infantry, 76th Division, U. S. Reserves. In this war he has been promoted to the rank of Major and has been assistant corps chaplain of the VIII Corps, serving with distinction. At the present time he is serving as transport chaplain.

UPPER SOUTH CAROLINA

Twenty-Second Annual Convention

Columbia, S. C.—The Twenty-Second Annual Convention of the Diocese of Upper South Carolina was held in Trinity Church, Columbia, May 4-5. The Annual Convention of the Woman's Auxiliary of the diocese was held at the same time. St. John's, St. Timothy's and the Church of the Good Shepherd in Columbia cooperated with Trinity as hostess parishes.

The fifth anniversary of the Consecration of the Rt. Rev. John J. Gravatt, second Bishop of the Diocese, was celebrated at the opening service, with Bishop Juhan, of Florida, as the preacher.

The Convention program opened with a reception at the Bishop's residence in the afternoon, to which members of both Conventions and the congregations of the hostess parishes were invited. Several hundred persons called during the afternoon.

250 people attended the Diocesan Dinner in Trinity Parish House and heard a challenging and stirring address by Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council.

Business sessions were continued throughout Friday; at noon the two Conventions assembled in the Church for noonday prayers and to hear Bishop Gravatt deliver his annual address.

"In this time of the world's tragedy and sorrow," the Bishop said, "there is much for which we can be inexpressibly thankful. The first is for God and our Christian faith in Him. We can be thankful, too, for the very high privilege and responsibility of living and serving as Christians today. Christ is the world's Saviour. In Him alone can mankind be redeemed and led into God's way of life. We have the high calling, the supreme mission, of being His commissioned and trusted followers and witnesses, members of His body, the Church, in this world of today and tomorrow."

Bishop Bids Church Face Problems

Bishop Gravatt then gave a report of his official acts and of the progress of the diocese during the past year, and outlined the challenges confronting churchmen today. He mentioned as problems that the Church must face, think through, and have a part in solving, race relations and juvenile delinquency.

Closing his address, Bishop Gravatt said:

"A vast army of our own men are today poised in England for an invasion of the continent. It will not be easy. There will be much suffering and many lives will be given. Each man that crosses the channel is offering his life and knows that it may be taken. In other words, the attitude of our men is one of complete dedication and willingness to sacrifice, if necessary, that those essential things that we love and value most may be preserved.

"Surely at such a moment the attitude of those of us at home should be nothing less than genuine dedication in our living for the essential things for which our men are ready to die. The soldiers won the victory in the last war, but we at home and our representatives lost the peace. All of us should certainly dedicate ourselves to do our utmost to see that it does not happen again—that we have a just and durable peace that will grow in quality and depth.

"But we Christians, because of the precious privilege and the sacred mission that are ours, have the greater responsibility to see that all that is best in and for our country and the world flourishes and grows. Surely, we Christians should take heed to ourselves at such a time, and indeed dedicate ourselves wholeheartedly and anew to Christ and the growth of His kingdom among men."

Woman's Auxiliary

The Woman's Auxiliary Convention heard stirring addresses by the Rev. Newton Chiang, of Anking, China, and the Rev. James Wilson, of Louisville, Ky., and Shanghai. Mr. Wilson was for some time in a prison camp and returned to the United States on the Gripsholm in December.

Mrs. W. Preston Peyton, retiring president, presided at the sessions. Mrs. J. Floyd White, of Chester, S. C., was elected president to succeed Mrs. Peyton.

SPANISH-SPEAKING MISSIONARY DISTRICTS TO CONFER

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Vernon C. McMaster, S. T. D., Secretary for Administration in the National Council's Division of Christian Education, goes to Cuba early in June for conference with educational leaders from three Spanish-speaking missionary districts.

The Bishops of the three districts, together with designated deputies, will discuss plans for producing Church school curriculum materials in Spanish; it is hoped that the three districts may be able to publish such materials cooperatively.

Dr. McMaster expects to be in Cuba from June 9 to 15, and he will meet there, representing Cuba, Bishop Hugo Blankingship, the Rev. R. Gonzales-Agueros, and the Ven. J. H. Townsend; for Mexico, Bishop Salinas y Velasco, and the Rev. J. F. Gomez; and for Puerto Rico, Bishop Charles B. Colmore, the Rev. Aristides Villafane, and Miss Ethel Robinson.

Divinity School Faculty Conduct Summer Conference

Berkeley, Cal.—Dean Henry H. Shires and the Rev. George Morrel, instructor in Church history, will be lecturing at the Los Angeles Summer School the last week in June. Professor Randolph C. Miller is conducting a special conference for clergy and laity in the Diocese of Olympia on June 11-13, at Tacoma.

Pierson Parker Joins Divinity School Staff

The Rev. Pierson Parker, Th. D., has been appointed Assistant Professor of Biblical Literature at the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Dr. Parker has been for eight years the minister of the North Congregational Church, and before that was an instructor at the Pacific School of Religion. He has resigned his pastorate and will be ordained in the Episcopal Church. He received his Doctor of Theology degree at the Pacific School of Religion, and is widely known in scholarly circles for his articles in such magazines as the Anglican Theological Review, Journal of Biblical Literature, and the symposium Christianity and the Contemporary Scene. He is the president of the Pacific Division of the Society of Biblical Studies.

Summer School

The summer school, from June 19-August 25, will feature special lecturers of three divinity schools in this area and several visiting lecturers. Terms will be five weeks each, and each term will be open to the clergy as well as special students. Sponsored jointly by the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, the Pacific School of Religion, and the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School, the faculty will include Professor William F. Stinespring of Duke University Divinity School, Thaddeus H. Ames, M. D., of New York City. Dr. Blanche Carrier, Dr. Marion Clawson, of the U. S. Department of Agriculture; Professor Walter F. Kotschnig, of Smith College, and Dean Shires, Professor Miller, and Professor Parker, of the Church Divinity School; Professor Buell Gallagher, Professor C. C. McCown, and President McGiffert, of the Pacific School of Religion; Professor John W. Bailey, Professor Ralph Knudson, Miss Margaret Lobb, Dean Linnea Nelson, Professor John Skoglund, and Professor Stacy Warburton, of the Berkeley Baptist Divinity School.

SOUTH FLORIDA

Rector and Wife Honored by Parish

Bradenton, Fla.—Christ Church Parish has extended every honor possible to its rector of fifteen years, Rev. Frank M. Brunton, who resigned several months ago, effective May 14. Deep regret has been expressed throughout the community by both white and colored residents.

Mrs. Brunton shares the esteem felt for him and has been honored in parish gatherings beside the reception tendered to them. The vestry voted an additional month's stipend to him and a gift of $50 to Mrs. Brunton. Other gifts from parish organizations attested deep appreciation of their devoted work. Mr. Brunton preached the Baccalaureate sermon for the Bradenton High School on April 30, and gave the address for schools in Gillespie and in Palmo Solo.

The Youth's Recreational Center which Mr. Brunton and his Men's Club were instrumental in starting, opened on May 12, with nearly 300 young people attending.

Mr. and Mrs. Brunton are returning to their home in Canada, where he will give part time service in St. Bartholomew's Church, Toronto, through summer months, but expects to return to Florida for part time mission work each winter.

A beautiful window was dedicated on April 30 by the Rev. Tage Teisen, rector in the Church of Bethesda-by-the-Sea. This is a memorial to Henry Morgan Tilford and Isabelle Weart Tilford. Another gift is a new set of white hangings, given by Mrs. Flagler Matthews.

When Bishop Wing visited the churches in Vero Beach, Fort Pierce and Pahokee on April 30, he received one person from the Roman Church in each place, with the classes confirmed.

Proposal to Increase Stipends to Missionary Clergy Approved

Sanford, Fla.—Much excitement reports from the Diocese of South Florida, resulting from introduction in the diocesan convention of a proposal to increase stipends of all diocesan missionary clergy to a minimum level approximating $18—and living quarters for single men and $2,400 and living quarters for married men. One layman commented that some parish workers might wish to become missionary clergy if such an increase were made, while another layman confessed to the Convention that he pays one of his truck drivers more than he pays his minister.

The proposal was finally approved, and referred to the executive board of the diocese which fixes stipends of missionary clergy. It is anticipated that reserve funds in the missionary budget will make it possible to put the increases in effect during this year, and a possibility is seen of an increase of next year's quotas, to provide for continuing the larger stipends.

Bishop Wing reported to the Convention that confirmations have again showed a healthy increase, being 149 more than the preceding year. He said also that when he was elected bishopcoadjutor nineteen years ago there were 40 clergy canonically located in the diocese, while today there are 82.

50TH COUNCIL OF BRAZILIAN CHURCH

Rio Grande, Brazil—The annual Council of the Brazilian Church met this year in Rio Grande, where just 50 years ago, Dr. Lucien Lee Kinsolving, later the first Bishop of Southern Brazil, presided at the first Convocation. The Rt. Rev. Athalicio T. Pithan, suffragan bishop, celebrated the Holy Communion on April 21, which was the fourth anniversary of his consecration.

The Missionary Society reported increased giving, and that in the past year it had paid the salary and pension assessments of the Suffragan Bishop and five missionary clergy. Parishes have accepted larger quotas than those of last year, and have voted an additional 10 per cent for 1945.

The Council heard Bishop Thomas speak on the current Forward in Service program, and adopted the Plan of Action. All clerical and lay members of the Council constitute a general Committee on Forward in Service.

During the past year, chapels have been erected near Sao Gabriel in Rio Grande and at Sete Barras in Sao Paulo. Two parish houses have been completed in the State of Sao Paulo, one at Pereira Barreto and the other in the city of Sao Paulo.

Eight deacons were advanced to the priesthood during the year. The Seminary is giving instruction in theology to six postulants, and four young men are taking a pre-theological course in the Institute Jose Manoel de Conceicao. The Ven. G. U. Krischke, Archdeacon of Porto Alegre, is giving a course by correspondence to three catechists.

PHILADELPHIA DIVINITY DEAN RESIGNS

We have learned that at a meeting of the Joint Boards of the Philadelphia Divinity School, held on Monday, May 29, the resignation of the Very Rev. Allen Evans, D. D., S. T. D., Dean of the Divinity School, was accepted, effective June 15, 1945.

Appropriate resolutions were passed by the Board, paying high tribute to the contribution Dean Evans has made in the field of theological education, and his unusual ability in placing the School in a financial, sound position.—Editor.

DEATHS

Rev. Dr. Frank J. Mallett

The Rev. Dr. Frank J. Mallett died at the home of his son, the Rev. Reginald Mallett, in Baltimore, on May 27, 1944. Dr. Mallett served as a priest for 59 years and retired from active work sixteen years ago. He was 86 years of age.

A requiem mass was said on May 29 in Grace and St. Peter's Church, with his son officiating. Burial was on Tuesday in Chapel Hill, N. C.

Dr. Mallett was born in Lynn, England, in 1858, studied in England and was ordained priest in 1885. He served in New Albany, Indiana, and Salisbury, N. C., and was dean of St. Matthew's Cathedral, Laramie, Wyoming. He was founder and director of the Society of Mission Priests and wrote a number of books, including "Wit and Humor of the Parson" and "Helping Boys."

After retirement, he moved to White Plains, N. Y., where he took active part in civic life. Following the death of his wife, six years ago, he moved to Baltimore to be with his son.

In addition to the rector of Grace and St. Peter's Church, he is survived by three other sons—Frank Mallett, of Sharon, Pa.; John Mallett, of Louisville, Ky.; and Edgar Mallett, of Nashville, Tenn.; and two daughters, Miss Mabel Mallett, of Chapel Hill, N. C., and Mrs. C. S. Lomax, of New York City. There are also four grandchildren and a great grandchild.

military merit. Though sad, we are all proud of him. Mrs. Eubanks, his mother, holds the medal as a sacred reminder of the fact that America will never bow its head to brutes and tyrants as long as it can produce such boys with the spirit of Patrick Henry.

Incidently Mrs. Eubanks is visiting relatives in a nearby town who think the trip might be a good diversion for her. She wishes me to pass along a word of affectionate greeting to Lt. Garold Simpson, yourself and all the outfit and especially those nice boys who have written her. She will be writing some of you again soon.

You may notice a similarity between the handwriting in this letter and any other you may have received from Mrs. Eubanks. Here's why: Mrs. Eubanks has trouble with her eyes sometimes, and, as everyone else is on the move all the time (war work or vital civilian work), she often gets me to help her out with her correspondence. I'm humbly grateful to know that I can be of some little service to those who befriended me in a time of need.

Now, Sgt. Hight, please sir, if I may I would like to ask you a favor, or rather for information first.

During our life here at home together Private Eubanks and I made an agreement; and, although we generally spoke of it lightly each knew the other was serious and one of the chief principles of our common bond of friendship was that we always kept our promises to each other.

We agreed that the survivor of the two would plant flowers on the grave of the other and look after them and see that they had a chance to grow. We both loved flowers. As I can not visit his resting place in person, would I be allowed to send a collection of flower seeds to you or to some one in your outfit who is in a position to look after such matters? And if so, could it be arranged to have them planted on his grave and the graves of his buddies who went along with him? I would certainly like to do this because I consider the promise a sacred one, and also because if our destinies had been reversed, he would have done the same for me. Any information you can give me will be deeply appreciated.

In your letter to Mrs. Eubanks you spoke of your intention to visit her when the war is over. All the home folks here are looking forward to that visit with keen anticipation and already I am planning the kind of good old home-cooked meal I would like to prepare for you. Coffee, hot and strong, but not bitter, with plenty of sugar and cream, or iced tea with lemon if the weather is warm, vegetables, cooked with a streak-o-lean and fat, fried steak (my specialty) in handsize slices about two inches thick, but thoroughly pounded until they are almost as pulverized as sausage, fried in a covered frying pan until they are a deep, tender brown and gravy that is a real temptation to light, hot, fluffy, golden brown biscuits. A couple of old-fashioned sweet potato pies cooked overnight with plenty of butter, eggs and spice in the filling; a variety of fruits and a knee high cake with two-tone icing. In short, the kind of meal I used to prepare for Private Eubanks when he was expected home from school. Then if you wanted to lie down and rest I would like to prepare you a bed, help you undress if you wished, take care of your things and see that you were not disturbed until you were rested. Then if you felt like talking and answering questions we would all be too glad to listen.

This invitation goes for Lt. Simpson, all the chaplains, Sgt. Swift, Cpl. Jeffers, the Pfc. who was a teacher in Michigan prior to his induction and to any others who could find it convenient to drop in for a visit on their way home.

To your entire outfit I offer my humble and lasting gratitude for your cause.

Sincerely and respectfully,
(Signed) JOHNNIE A. JONES.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Have courage; we see the morn!
Fear not, though the Now be dark,
Out of the night the Day is born;
The Fire shall live from the spark,
The world grows, not by chance;
It follows some marvelous plan;
Though slow to our sight the advance,
God rules the training of man.

To receive a reward is a good thing, but to deserve it is better.

All a man has to do is to better what he can.

..George McDonald.

It was a doctrine with St. Francis of Assisi that "we know as much as we do."

The only way to kill self-pity is to bury it life-deep in compassion, that it may be smothered by others' woes.

—Bishop Brent.

"There is something in man beyond the reach of death, else he would not give his life for it."

"Tact is sympathy in operation."

A modern saint has said that the real Christian temper is the power of being outwadrly genial but inwardly austere. —Selected.

Richard Cecil, in sight of the end, said to a friend at his bedside, "They tell me I have preached too much about faith in Christ. But if I had my ministry over again, they would hear a great deal more about it."

The whole man is called to service in the cause of Him who redeems body and soul. In contrast to the slain offering presented of old, this is a living sacrifice—a much more costly thing to give—acceptable to God. It is pre-eminently a rational devotion or service: it is our only means of translating into action the passion of our souls and minds, born of deep conviction of the boundless love and mercy of God.—Record (English).

From the worship of God in the sanctuary and the offering to Him of that which is justly due to Him, we must pass into the world outside and carry the message of sympathy, kindness, goodness, generosity to all about us; in the home, in the street, in all our daily round.

"By all that He requires of me
I know what He himself must be."

A D-DAY MESSAGE

By The Presiding Bishop

New York, N. Y.—June 6—A D-Day Message by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop of the Episcopal Church was sent by low wave all over the world late yesterday. The Presiding Bishop expressed "confidence and hope," and assured those engaged in invasion of the continuing prayers of their fellow Christians here at home.

Bishop Tucker's message follows:

To all our fellow Christians in the occupied countries of Europe we send this day a message of confidence and hope. As the vanguard of our armies lands upon your shores and the forces of liberation begin their forward march, we in America are united in prayer for the victory that shall bring you freedom. In churches all over our land men and women and children are gathering in their tens of thousands in an outpouring of supplication that God Almighty may use us and all we have to bring to pass according to His will the triumph of justice, mercy and righteousness.

Not today for the first time have you and all that you have suffered been close to our hearts. More than you may have known millions of friends in America have watched with you through the years of your pain and longed for the hour when we might have an honorable share in the great movement of free peoples dedicated to your deliverance. Today we are grateful that at last we are within hailing distance of those who have borne the heaviest burden, whose steadfast endurance and fidelity have been our inspiration, and whose comradeship in the coming struggle will be an honor to our arms.

As fellow Christians we summon you to join with us in constant prayer. United in purpose more closely than we have ever been united before, let us pray not only for that victory in the field which with all our hearts we believe to be the victory of right. With equal ardor let us pray that in the future years of liberty we may show forth our gratitude to God for an opportunity so measureless by building to His glory a new world order worthy of His name.

The Mutual Broadcasting System, through station WOR, sent out Presiding Bishop Tucker's D-Day Prayer at 5:30 June 6.

FROM OVERSEAS LETTERS

CALIFORNIA POPPIES FOR REMEMBRANCE

Dearest Aunt C—:

You referred to starting your seedbed in your letter, and so I thought you might be interested in hearing of my delightful co-worker for R. C. here.

I just joined this unit Sunday and was fascinated to find a full fledged Victory and flower garden surrounding the Red Cross recreation tent. Strawberries (I've seen one ripe), lettuce, onions, tomatoes, radishes, the honesty plant, pinks, California poppies. Her own tent is surrounded too—and preparations are all made for transplanting at least the tomato plants whenever we have to fold our tents and move on. But I understand this isn't all—that in times past "Rusty" has had her own Victory garden growing amidst the hot flak and falling bombs, and moreover has filled the scarred land with California poppy seed so that for years to come the neighborhood will have something pretty to remind them of the Americans!

Hope you are well and strong again and receive good reports from your scattered family.

Devotedly, ——

WHAT LETTERS MEAN

Dear M—:

These boys—"babies" over here—are called on to give every atom of soul and body stamina and strength, and its marvellous to see what letters mean to them. The army appreciates it and makes efforts to get it through to the very front line. I remember one boy telling of Christmas a year ago, either at El Guethe or Kasserine Pass, where they had been fighting hard all day and withdrew for a few hours and practically every single man got mail and presents and then they went back into the fighting. It may be hard to appreciate lives spent with no diversion except the constant threat and presence of death and water-filled fox holes. A letter may seem just a sheet of paper to people in the States, but to a boy in a foxhole it can mean life or death. It can be the one thing that ties him to a life worth living for and worth trying to save.

Some boys' wives and sweethearts write them "at least" three times a day, they say, and I believe they will have the easiest adjustment to make when they get home.

FROM A BATTLE FRONT

From a battle front in some distant land, Chaplain Francis W. Read, formerly at St. Andrew's, La Mesa, California, reports to the Army and Navy Commission, Boston, Mass., some of his experiences in actual warfare. He is Chaplain of a Medical Battalion, and landed with his unit late in the afternoon of the first day of battle in that particular theater. "After digging foxholes and consuming our assault rations it became dark and we settled down to get some sleep. This was difficult because of the noise of battle about a mile ahead and the pounding of the artillery. Then it started to rain. Our protective covers made good raincoats and kept us dry.

"Eventually I got to sleep. Long about 1 A. M. we were all awakened by machine gun fire very close to us, coming in our direction. A tracer bullet hit a tree stump over my foxhole. If I had been standing up I would have been a candidate for the posthumous award of the Purple Heart. We realized that there were snipers in a grove of trees near by and decided to make for better cover. In the process of so doing, I realized that my protective cover was impeding my progress, and that it stood out to make a good target. So lying flat on my stomach, I managed to wiggle out of it. The machine gun fire was of the tracer variety, so it was possible to see how close the bullets were coming. In the course of my quest for better cover, I crawled on my stomach, but could have reached up and pulled the bullets down, so to speak. Then I spotted a tractor which gave excellent over, and crawled behind it to spend the night. I found a number of men of my unit there. It rained again, and without my protective cover I was soaked. The snipers did not let up 'til daybreak, when they were liquidated by our infantry.

"After our field hospital was set up, my time was fully occupied. Our supplies included Red Cross comfort kits, cigarettes and candy. I visited the ward tents at frequent intervals. With the more seriously wounded I had prayers. To the others a word of cheer was all that was required. I distributed cigarettes, candy and comfort kits. Also I read them the news as we received the radio news bulletins from the transports. On one occasion I visited a prisoner of war enclosure and distributed cigarettes to the prisoners.

"Since returning to garrison, I have intensified my efforts on the work among our own men. I also find time to keep in contact with the churches in the area. I have helped at some of their services, and am scheduled to preach in one of the parish churches in the near future.

"Just a final word about the morale of the men. I cannot conceive of finer morale. On the way to battle they show no fear or apprehension, nor do they brag and boast. They act as though they know they have an unpleasant job to do, and are determined to do it thoroughly and well. Attendance at religious services is excellent. The men come not as condemned men needing solace, but rather as soldiers who know that the Sword of the Spirit is an essential part of their armament."

FOLLOWS CHURCH OF INDIA STORY CARRIED LAST ISSUE

New York—The Rev. Arabindo Nath Mukerjee of Delhi, head of the Cambridge University Mission to Delhi and honorary canon of the Cathedral Church of the Resurrection, Lahore, since 1940, has been made archdeacon of Delhi, to become assistant bishop of the diocese. The new archdeaconry will be set off as a separate missionary diocese with the assistant bishop in charge.

Canon Mukerjee is a graduate of St. Paul's College and Bishop's (Theological) College, both in Calcutta. He was ordained deacon in 1923 and priest in 1924, in the diocese of Lahore. He was principal of the Christian High School, Delhi, from 1926 to 1936. He has lately emerged from a trying hospital experience, having broken a leg when his bicycle skidded. More noteworthy has been his service in guiding the young students of his high school through the tense political situations of recent years and under war conditions.

Erection of the archdeaconry of Delhi with the intention of its becoming a separate diocese as soon as possible was approved by the recent General Council of the Church of India. An assistant bishop is appointed by the diocesan bishop, with the approval of the Metropolitan. The diocese of Lahore includes more than 370,000 square miles, with 39,000,000 people.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

PRAYER TIME is dare time, when God lays down the plan for breath-taking adventure. To "live more nearly as we pray" demands courage of a high order and offers a challenge that quickens our spirits and girds them for action. No prayer time ends in a cloistered nook shut off from the world, but in daring deeds of love and righteousness, outflanking evil and beating it to every attempt at winning possession of our souls and bodies—ourselves. We can never form an accurate concept of prayer if we think of it as an exercise for old ladies and weak men, who are good for nothing else. Prayer—the seeking of God's will and the willingness to follow it—is a call to a kind of life that is hard. Only those who grow strong in spirit can "take it". For all prayer must lead from resolution to revolution, must tear the clutching fingers of self from self and put them to useful tasks for others. Prayer produces convictions and these push us often where we have never dared to go before. But now, assured by His spirit presence, we are not afraid to speak and do in the realms of race relations, social reconstruction, family difficulties. Prayer demands the soul's best and leaves it with a specific job to do. That is why we have a quiet time of prayer and praise, to see life's way clear through fog and haze.

THE SHARP JAB of inspiration that quickens our wills and sets surging God's life within us usually comes from some word written long ago that hops out from the pages of God's Book and bids us stop and listen and take them away. Such a passage might be found in 2 Corinthians 11:22-27 and 12:15 (An American Translation).

"Five times I have been given one less than 40 lashes, by the Jews. I have been beaten three times by the Romans, I have been stoned once, I have been shipwrecked three times, a night and a day have I been adrift at sea with my frequent journeys, in danger from rivers, danger from robbers, danger from my own people, danger from the desert, danger at sea, danger from false brothers, through toil and hardships, through many a sleepless night, through hunger and thirst, often without food, and exposed to cold."

"And (yet) I will be glad to spend all I have and all I am for your sake."

Paul's array of deeds arising from his following God's leading in prayer tingle our spirits and fill them with awe. Prayer time is dare time. Paul, like his Master before him, prayed long each day early in quiet. Following his ringing challenge to put on God's armour and go forth to fight for Him against evil he stops rattling the sword of the Spirit in the scabbard of righteousness and composes these words (Ephesians 6:18-20):

"Use every kind of prayer and entreaty and at every opportunity pray in the Spirit. Be on the alert about it; devote yourselves constantly to prayer for all God's people and for me, that when I open my lips I may be given a message, so that I may boldly make known the secret of the good news, for the sake of which I am an envoy, and in prison. Pray that when I tell it, I may have the courage to speak as I ought."

Back to our prayer and the things we are now ready to accept with eagerness to accomplish them. "The inward light of Thy presence." This means the inward light of His presence must be sought and found and allowed to dictate our thoughts and direct our deeds. "Think thoughts and do deeds becoming to our profession as Christians—members of the Body of Christ." Remember the parts of the body are under control of the head. Paul was willing to dare anything when he knew Christ's Spirit was behind his words to give them proper utterance and behind his every action to give it power and purpose and kingdom might.

Do not pray unless you want to expose yourself to the dangers of living at your best and becoming a witness for God's highest earth way of tolerance, patience, and hope born of faith in God's plans for the world.

When we are fearful and impotent, when we are inarticulate and doubtful, we know it is not only "my brother and my sister, but its me, O Lord, standin' in the need of prayer."

Those Twelve Words

By B. S. MURRAY

AS I OPEN The Southern Churchman weekly a striking sentence, appearing on page 2, "Catholic for every Truth of God, Protestant against every error of man," intrigues me. The more I consider those twelve words the richer and deeper their significance. Their balance amazes me; yet is not balance at once the genius and glory of the Protestant Episcopal Church? There those twelve words in clear bold type tantalizingly stand suggesting that I am, or should be, a Catholic-Protestant!

So partisan today are many, that they refuse to use the word Catholic, forgetting that the Church of God is most certainly in every sense Catholic; in life, faith, and orders. These are rivalled by those who taboo the word Protestant as being effete, an unnecessary appendange, an intrusion. Surely this, too, is crooked partisan thinking. Beware lest we forget that the name of our great American Communion is The Protestant Episcopal Church!

Now modern thinkers stress the fact that Catholicity is an ideal of the Church. "I believe in the Holy Catholic Church", it has been said, "but I regret that she does not yet exist". Let us always remember that the Church that is one, and holy, and apostolic, and catholic,—the brotherhood in Christ of all mankind, knit into unity by the fellowship of the Holy Spirit—remains a vision of the future,—though a vision which once seen, mankind will never relinquish until it be accomplished. Protestant, however, is a less ancient name wrought in the fires of adversity. It was born in the sixteenth century when Churchmen weighed and considered the encroachments on their spiritual life and religious freedom and they decided to protest against anything which was vainly invented and utterly repugnant to the Word of God. They demanded nothing more, or less, than the pure Word of God. So the Thirty Nine articles of Religion (1562) reflect their theological affirmations. Don't be ashamed then of the word Protestant! Nor think that Protestantism dilutes Catholicism. Nothing of the sort. Rather it points concretely to a spiritual, active, reformed, enriched Catholicism. Great souls have proudly borne that name. And we are not only to defend that faith but propagate it. Today the world is in a protesting mood against all those forces which would abolish Freedom, Justice, and Fair-Play. We have weighed and considered the various "isms"—nor are we unmindful of that most shameful ism, schism, within the Church herself—and decided that we must protest. Surely there is nothing negative about this mood. It is rather one which is both positive and challenging. Let us therefore with those twelve words before us reexamine our status recalling that true loyalty to Christ most certainly involves common religious fellowship upon the basis of common membership in the people of God.

MY MOTTO? For Christ and His Church! We belong to Jesus, children of the Lord. The Church is of divine origin, the Body of Christ, a spiritual entity which, created by God, infused with the life of the Ascended Christ and guided by the Holy Spirit, was the representative of Christ on earth and the means through which He now works in the souls of men for the salvation of the world. Worship God, the Church urges and in her services, contained in the Prayer Book, makes adequate provision so that they may reveal the reality and presence of God. Catholics, somehow, have a remarkable ability to make God real. Where the sense of God is powerful in the spirit of the worshipper, the church forms and ceremonies glow with warmth, light, and life. That group stresses the "five-sense" appeal, and in their highly developed and dramatic technique of religion have made worship a great power. No wonder they glory in churchmanship! Again, there are those who, finding outward forms not so necessary, honestly endeavor to recapture the freedom, radiance, and power of the Early Church. All that helps them recapture a vision of Christ they retain. Christ, and not Churchanity, is their ideal! He must reign! All must worship Him in spirit and in truth. So our Church, the living Church, founded by Jesus Christ, and assured of His living and permanent Presence even unto the end of the world walks by faith and not by sight. She needs no visible, localized Head on earth; "her charter of salvation, one Lord, one faith, one birth, one holy Name she blesses, partakes one holy Food, and to one hope she presses with every grace endued". With Christ central, then, Protestants protest against any additions, subtractions, or substitutions, for He alone is all sufficient and further declares that we are not bound to accept anything that is not read in the Holy Bible nor proved thereby (Article 6).

WHILST CORPORATE loyalty to the Christian society is required of Catholics, Protestants are, in this respect, less rigid. God worship is our common ideal. Preaching, teaching, and social concern are needed in the modern church but man has another great need,—he needs God. In worship he finds that awareness, that sense of the presence of God. That's why we should obey the advice of the Angel in Revelation, and worship God. Our loyalty to Christ then supersedes all other loyalties. Everything that helps us achieve this, we cherish and retain; all that which impedes, we discard.

To the Catholic, rites and ceremonies are not anomalies, strange "material" excrescences upon religion otherwise "spiritual". They are channels themselves and media of the Spirit's operation, vehicles of life and power. Protestants, on the other hand, remind us that "forms and ceremonies" are of no value in themselves, but only in so far as they are the expression and vehicle of the spirit. Yet both "partake one holy Food" consecrated by a Priest who has, from the same source, received apostolic orders. In the Holy Communion then we offer ourselves with Christ to the Father. He offers us and we offer Him. Under His guidance we dedicate ourselves to God afresh each time we kneel at the Holy Table. Each time, when we "duly use" the Blessed Sacrament we, by faith, "only after an heavenly and spiritual manner" find Christ and thereby receive His life, His truth, His pardon, His healing power.

One thing is abundantly clear; the Church is catholic in life, faith and orders. Proud are we that the one holy catholic apostolic Church maintains her unbroken ties of orders, of thought and sentiment, of faith, of feeling and ritual preserved in the Prayer

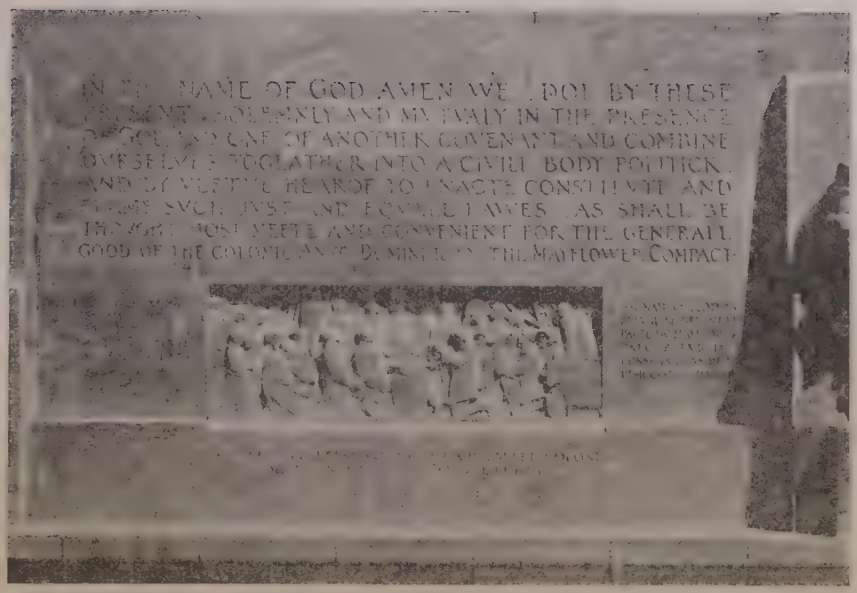
The International Monument of the Reformation at Geneva



The Bas-Relief which commemorates the signing of the Mayflower Compact in 1611

By MARIE WIDMER

IN THE PROMENADE DES BASTIONS, at Geneva, Switzerland, rises the 328 feet long International Monument of the Reformation. It was begun in the year 1909, in commemoration of the fourth centennial of Calvin's birth, and completed in November, 1918.

Background of this gigantic memorial is an actual section of the former city wall itself, a rampart standing on its original site at the foot of the hill town, aptly utilized to bear a graphic record of Geneva's influence on the world beyond her gates. It was erected with the financial assistance of the Protestant congregations of Switzerland, France, England, Scotland, Belgium, Holland, Germany, Bohemia (the present Czechoslovakia), Hungary and the United States.

Competition for a design was open to artists of all nations in 1908. Winners pronounced by an international jury were the architects Monod, Laverriere, Taillens and Dubois of Lausanne, and the sculptors Paul Landowski and Henri Bouchard of Paris. Owing to the nature of the task both architects and sculptors had to collaborate very closely.

The monument tells the story of the Reformation by a series of statues, inscriptions and bas reliefs. Four great figures, over 16 feet high, of Calvin, Farel, Beze (or Beza) and John Knox occupy its center. An inscription in gigantic lettering: POST TENEBRAS LUX (Light after Darkness) appears on both sides of this group. It is the motto of Geneva and summarizes the aim of the Reformation.

Two stone socles, commanding the steps, bear the names of the reformers Luther and Zwingli, who have their own monuments at Worms and Zurich respectively.

While Calvin was the leader of the Reformation at Geneva Farel, the then missionary of reformed Berne, was its acknowledged initiator; Beze, Calvin's disciple, was the first Rector of the newly founded University of Geneva and Calvin's successor as head of the reformed church; Knox was the pastor of the first Puritan congregation of the English refugees and one of the earliest coworkers in the translation of the famous Geneva Bible.

On both the left and the right wing of the monument are three lesser statues, standing at intervals of fifty feet. Between them and at their sides are the noted bas reliefs, carved deep into the creamy-white Alpine stone, each involving many figures.

Occupying the right wing are figures of Coligny, great leader of the French Huguenots; William, the Silent, Prince of Orange, father of the Dutch Republic; and Frederick William, the Great Elector, Duke of Prussia and protector of the Protestant cause on the continent of Europe.

Dominating the left wing are statues of Roger Williams, representing the share of the New World in the work of free Calvinism; Oliver Cromwell, main founder of the British Empire and most powerful protector of the Protestants in Europe; Bocskay, Prince of Transylvania, Protestant hero of the first Hungarian upheaval against autocratic rule.

One of the first occasions when the church and people of Geneva acted in unison is commemorated in the first bas relief on the right wing, depicting young Reformer Pierre Viret delivering his first public sermon at Geneva on February 22, 1534. Placed under Farel's version of the Lord's Prayer in Old French it presents two sets of participants in the day's proceedings, i.e., the preacher and the Bernese envoys on the left and the Genevese people on the right. The people called themselves Eidguenots, after the Swiss German: "Eidgenossen"—Confederates. This term has passed into English, through the French, as "Huguenots".

Henry IV, King of France, signing the Toleration Edict of Nantes on April 13, 1598, is the subject of the next panel. The monumental inscription in this instance is the preamble of the Edict, which was drafted by Forget de Fresne, the King's Secretary of State.

The third bas relief on the right wing commemorates the session of the States-General, on July 26, 1581, at The Hague, when the Dutch Declaration of Independence was adopted. Here the inscription declares that "Subjects are not created by God for the Prince in order to obey him in all that it may please him to command, be it for God or against God, reasonable or unreasonable, and to be his slaves. Rather the Prince is created for his subjects (without whom he cannot be Prince), in order to rule them according to law and reason.'

Lateral legends contain the solemn pledge of William the Silent to the States-General, which is to be found in his famous manifesto, called the Apology of the Prince of Orange, ending with the words which were kept as motto by the House of Orange: "Je le maintiendrai."

The Edict of Potsdam of October 29, 1685, is commemorated in abridged form in the fourth panel which shows Frederick William, the Great Elector, welcoming refugees who had fled from France after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Here the monumental inscription reads: "We, Frederick William . . . . as the persecutions, recently put into practice in France, of the adherents to the Reformed Religion, have forced many families to forsake the realm and seek dwellings in foreign lands, have resolved to take compassion on these devoted French followers of the Faith and to offer them a safe haven of refuge in all our Lands and Provinces."

Lateral legends on both sides of the relief feature the memorable words said to have been uttered by the Elector to his Commissioner General von Grumbkow:

> "Rather than leave these poor people without assistance my silver plate shall be sold."

The Lord's Prayer once more, but in English, appears in large lettering above the first bas relief on the left wing of the monument, showing John Knox preaching the Reformation at Edinburgh in St. Giles, before the court of Mary Stuart in 1565. The Queen herself never consented to be present at one of the Reformer's sermons, but three Stuarts, her kinsmen, were among the Congregation.

The next panel depicts a scene on the lower deck of the Mayflower, just before the landing at Plymouth Rock. The Pilgrims are shown kneeling in prayer. Above the group are carved these words from the Mayflower Compact:

> "In the name of God, Amen. We . . . . doe by these presents solemnly and mutually in the presence of God and one of another covenant and combine ourselves togeather into a civill body politick . . . . and by vertue hearof to enacte constitute and frame such just and equall lawes . . . . as shall be thought most meete and convenient for the generall good of the colonie, Anno-Domini 1620—The Mayflower Compact."

The third panel on the left wing portrays the presentation by members of the British Parliament of the "Bill of Rights" to William II and Queen Mary on February 13, 1689. The inscription above it reads:

> "The Lords Spirituall and Temporall and Commons being now assembled in a full and free representative of this nation doe for the vindicating and asserting their auntient rights and liberties declare: That the pretended power of suspending of laws by regall authority without consent of Parlyament is illegall . . that election of members of Parlyament ought to be free—THE BILL OF RIGHTS."

"The Peace of Vienna at the Hungarian Diet of Kassa" on December 13, 1606, is commemorated in the fourth bas relief, showing Bocskay, after his victory, as he brought to the representatives of the realm the signed treaty of Vienna. He was the protestant hero of the first Hungarian upheaval against autocratic rule. The inscription quotes his declaration: "The independence of our faith, our liberty of conscience and our ancient rights are more precious to us than gold."

The figures and inscriptions of the International Monument of the Reformation thus tell a story of mankind's victorious struggle for spiritual freedom, while the memorial itself is an achievement of universal collaboration. "Post Tenebras Lux" is its predominant motto and even now this triumphant declaration that light comes after darkness is a bright ray of hope in our war-torn world.

The love which the early Christians felt towards the Lord was not a quiet emotion which they hid within themselves in the secret chamber of their souls, and which they only spake of when they met on the first day of the week, and sang hymns in honor of Christ Jesus the crucified, but it was a passion with them of such a vehement and all-consuming energy, that it was visible in their actions, spoke in their common talk, and looked out of their eyes even in the commonest glances. Love to Jesus was a flame which fed upon the core and heart of their being; and, therefore, from its own force burned its way into the outer man, and shone there.—Chas. H. Spurgeon.

PROTESTANT AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

By William C. Kernan

ACCORDING TO THE CHURCHMAN, Christopher J. Heffernan, Associate Justice of the Appellate Division of the New York State Supreme Court, made a penetrating observation recently which ought to be of great interest to all Protestants. Speaking for the Roman Catholic laity of the Diocese of Albany, Mr. Justice Heffernan said that Catholics "should never forget" that the principles of religious liberty found in the federal and state constitutions were incorporated by men, "the great majority of whom were Protestants," and that these principles have been "vitalized because of the liberal interpretations thereof by judges, the overwhelming number of whom were not of our (e. g., the Roman Catholic) faith."

It is not likely that Protestants have forgotten the truth that underlay Mr. Justice Heffernan's remarks. It would be more to the point to say that some Protestants are likely to overlook the threat to religious freedom, won by their forefathers, in this present time. No one conversant with the facts can deny that religious freedom is threatened in the United States and that the attack upon it comes from the pro-fascists who have never ceased, even during this war, to be fascinated by Hitler's racial and religious theories.

SINCE PROTESTANTS in the past endured much to secure the recognition of religious rights in America, why should not their sons contend bravely now to keep what their forefathers secured—especially when these very same rights are under fire by the pro-fascists and anti-Semites? The question is worth asking: Why do the religious bigots agitate against the Jews precisely as Hitler did, if they do not have an aim in mind, and that aim to deny to Jews their rights—and, subsequently, after the Hitlerite pattern, to deny to others, Protestants and Catholics, their rights too?

If our Protestant forefathers, whom we acclaim, were right in contending for religious liberty in America, then to fight now for their principles is certainly a Protestant duty in the face of the fascist and anti-Semitic threat to the continued recognition of these principles in our country.

Book. The historic creeds proclaim the faith of our Fathers. And whilst the Church holds firmly to her divine origin and historic continuity as an institution, yet the same church holds tenaciously to the supremacy of Scripture, freedom of conscience, and the independence of national churches. In a word, I am a Catholic in my desire to seek and find truth, and I protest when I do not receive it.

Ancient devotional traditions, liturgical worship and ordered ecclesiastical life afford Catholics great pride. Protestants, with their emphasis on simplicity and the direct access to Christ, though keenly appreciative of the past, yet their attitude is one of burning intensity to recapture, restore, and reinforce the spirit of the Reformers and, like them, stress evangelism, education, missions, and all progressive, enlightening, Christian, democratic movements for the advance of men, my brothers. Nor are they unmindful of the great spiritual, moral, and social contribution of their Catholic brothers.

WE OWE MUCH TO Catholicism in retaining the mystic element in our churches. Our intense modern social and industrial life and our feverish desire to develop an equally active Christianity has driven out a worshipping attitude and the spirit of worship. Yet millions yearn to see Jesus. The Church must, in sacrament and prayer, show them Him. It is the spirit that counts! One my urge "Be conservative": the other pleads "Eliminate all unessentials, and adventure anywhere, so long as it is forward with Christ. Outwardly we may lack a uniform interpretation; inwardly we are one in our loyalty to Christ and His Body—the Church—which is the prolongation of That Body. Our mission is one. All our individual gifts and capacities, whatever they may be, are to be dedicated and directed to the services of the Body as a whole, and not to any sectional or selfish ends or purposes. The Church is basically missionary, world-wide, and therefore international. Onward, forward, upward she goes down the future's broadening way, revealing God to men through Jesus Christ, Son of God and Man, interlacing the souls of men in enduring spiritual fellowship, lifting humanity to Him who is their solace, their sure refuge, and revealing truth to men that they may find themselves in Him, Who is the source of their hope. Splendour of vision, this then is the challenge and the promise.

OF YOUR CHURCH, and my Church, it must be said that she, with her breadth and depth, possesses the genius to effect a synthesis of Catholicism and Protestantism so that in the future with a liberalized Catholicism which shall do justice to the Protestant witness we march forward, on to the City of God, undivided, one in hope and doctrine, one in charity. A great future awaits her in her battle to remove injustice and vindicate Righteousness and Truth. Fortunately, as we view the shape of things to come, the Russian Orthodox Church is one with us. United we stand! Truth must prevail! Always! The Master calls us to active service. So, forward in service the Church of God, a great fact and a great power, like a mighty army moves, inspired by the lives of those who have given their all in her service, challenging us to recover the Faith which worketh by love, for in this one faith, one baptism, one hope of our calling lives a universal fellowship of believers, Jesus Christ being Himself the Chief-Cornerstone. Lift up your hearts! Christ remains—and maintains! His Church, too, for we are Catholic for every Truth of God, Protestant against every error of man". In the final analysis, I am a Catholic-Protestant. This is implied in those twelve words!

OPENING THE DOOR FOR GOD. A Manual for Parents. Herman J. Sweet, Westminster Press, Philadelphia, Pa. 160 pp. $1.

This is an excellent book for parents who are conscious of their Christian responsibility for the spiritual training of their children. Dr. Sweet revises that well-worn half-truth and says that in the home religion is not only caught, but it must be taught also. His discussion of the ways in which parents can help their children to an intelligent, firm faith is written with the lay view always in mind. Therefore, he not only points out principles, but gives explicit advice in regard to questions of the child, stories from the Bible to be used, books, pictures and prayers. The book is pungently written: "It is hardly fair to get God into a tight place and then run out on Him"—this in relation to the answers we sometimes give to a child's questions. "It is amazing how many Christians have an Old Testament God." And this: "Although it is perhaps better than nothing, it is tragic to see parents trying to give a child a religion that is no longer vital, creative, and growing in their own lives, just because they feel an obligation to do something about his religious training." The low cost of the book should assure it widespread use by the clergy in educating parents to their Christian duties.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

D-Day Observance

First Report Comes From Los Angeles

New York, N. Y.—The first diocesan report on observance of D-Day to reach the Presiding Bishop was from Los Angeles, where there was practically universal observance. Churches were crowded with many strangers present. The Mayor of Los Angeles, the Hon. Fletcher Bowron, had issued a proclamation urging people to step into some church and offer prayers. All the Episcopal churches were open throughout the day.

Bishop W. Bertrand Stevens conducted six services at St. Paul's Cathedral, starting at 10 A. M., and continuing through the day, and concluding with his evening broadcast of a prayer over a local radio station, and his participation in an inter-faith series of addresses with a local rabbi, a Roman Catholic bishop and a Protestant minister over a western radio hookup. Bishop Stevens estimated that at least 1,200 persons came to the Cathedral during the day.

At St. John's Church, the Rev. George Davidson read the Presiding Bishop's special service every hour on the hour from 8 A. M. to 10 P. M., believed to be the longest series of services in the city. During the day a war prayer shrine was erected, and many people stopped to say their prayers before the shrine's honor roll of the parish service men and women. The schedule of services at St. John's was planned and announced to the people as long ago as Easter. Dr. Davidson reports that his people found the Presiding Bishop's special service "very helpful." He noted that the "seriousness and devotion of the different congregations was marked." He reports 500 people in attendance.

At St. Mark's Church, Glendale, the Rev. Clarance H. Parlour conducted two services, and was in the church throughout the day. He found that his addresses led many to counsel with him about their own prayers for their sons and husbands.

Dean Douglas Stuart, at Grace Church, Los Angeles, celebrated the Holy Communion four times, from 9 A. M. until 12 noon. Then Grace Church had prayer services every hour until 9 P. M., using the Prayer Book Litany, the Presiding Bishop's special service, and excerpts from the Forward Movement booklet "We Would Remember." At 8 P. M. Evening Prayer was sung. Congregations totaled 200. Dean Stuart saw few strangers, but many "fringe Churchmen" whose attendance at church had previously been limited to Easter and Christmas.

D-DAY IN BALTIMORE

"This Is Just the Beginning," Bishop Powell Stated

Baltimore, Md.—June 6 was a solemn day and a day long to be remembered. The news came over the radio in the early morning hours and as it reached the ears of Baltimoreans, their faces were grim and thoughtful. The Churches throughout the city opened and throughout the day intercessions were offered for protection and guidance of our troops. Many churches set definite hours for special services, besides keeping the church open for individuals who wished to pray.

Bishop Powell stated "One religious spurt will not win the war and certainly one prayer will not win the peace. We must not forget that this is just the beginning. The arrival of 'D-Day' is that for which we have prepared by prayer for many months, and it must now be won through to the end by using all the intelligence and power God has given us. It is a source of great satisfaction to all of us who have been interested in the invasion and its ultimate meaning to note the response of the people on 'D-Day' to the appeal to frequent the Churches in prayer. The Churches in Baltimore were well filled throughout the day and we are asking our people to continue their daily prayers."

It was interesting to notice in the congregation of one of the largest down-town Churches, many young people were present—wearing socks and no hats. Many came in off the streets, denoting they were eager to kneel and pray for the protection of their friends and loved ones.

Service leaflets, with special prayers for the duration of the Invasion, were sent by the Army and Navy Commission to every Church in the diocese. This leaflet was prepared by the Forward in Service Commission.

CONSECRATION

Rev. W. W. Horstick as Bishop of Eau Claire, June 29.

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker has taken official Order for the Consecration of the Rev. William W. Horstick, D. D., who will be Bishop of Eau Claire, on June 29, at 10 A. M., in Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire.

Bishop Tucker will be the Consecrator, and the co-consecrators will be the Rt. Rev. Edwin J. Randall, Suffragan Bishop of Chicago and the Rt. Rev. Harwood Sturtevant, Bishop of Fond du Lac.

Bishop-elect Horstick will be presented for Consecration by the Rt. Rev. Winfred H. Ziegler, Bishop of Wyoming, and the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker, Bishop of Nebraska. The sermon will be preached by the Rt. Rev. William L. Essex, Bishop of Quincy.

Attending Presbyters will be the Very Rev. T. J. M. Nutter, D. D., Dean of Nashotah House, Nashotah, Wis., and the Rev. E. S. White, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago. Serving as Deputy Registrar will be the Rev. W. Roy Bennett, Spooner, Wis.

D-Day in Boston

Intensive Turning of People to the Churches

Boston, Mass—D-Day was received thoughtfully, soberly, prayerfully, and that description holds true for the entire diocese. There was and there continues to be an intensive turning of the people to the churches for special services and also for the opportunity to enter and pray, light a candle at the prayer shrine and enter a loved name in the book kept for the purpose. At Trinity Church, Copley Square, the sexton said that a First Service Command car was parked in front and a high ranking officer trying to open the door when he arrived at 6:30 A. M. on D-Day itself. In the Leslie Lindsey Memorial Chapel of Emmanuel Church on Newbury Street, three Australian flight officers, two American WACS and a State Police officer were among the hundreds kneeling early in the day.

In almost all of the churches, a D-Day program had been planned; but when the actual D-Day itself arrived, hidden floods of feeling were loosed; there HAD to be something more to meet the call from the hearts of the populace.

This was strikingly illustrated at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul. Prayers on the hour from 8 A. M. until 8 P. M. were announced. A director was seated at the desk in the vestibule to explain the simple procedure to those strange to church customs. Throngs made their way to the Prayer Shrine, and an extra candle rack, used at Easter, was hastily erected to accommodate the number of candles lighted. But at noon, inevitably the service moved out onto the spacious porch and the front steps running across the entire width of the building; and there Dean Edwin Jan van Etten led hundreds in prayer as they stood on either side, behind and in front, and across the street on Boston Common. An amplifier enabled the prayers to be heard clearly, although naturally the traffic of Tremont Street could not be stopped. It was a most impressive spectacle, and symptomatic of the manner in which the Cathedral Church is meeting the needs of all people.

Metropolitan churches had continuous services throughout the day; suburban and country churches had two or three services or else an open church throughout the day and an evening service. At the Church of the Advent, the tremendous bells in the high tower rang out in the evening and a service, unannounced and unadvertised, drew a fine attendance.

A concomitant of all this is that the churches and prayer were front page news in the city daily papers; press pictures of prayer shrines and services were numerous and important. "What are you people doing?" was the urgent query from newspaper reporters at the Diocesan House throughout the day. In answer, the churches "did." There was absolute necessity of responding to this demand made by both churchmen and non-churchmen. The one unanimous movement was "to the church,"

Iowa's New Bishop Consecrated

Bishop Keeler Consecration Preacher Stresses Responsibility of Laity

Davenport, Iowa—Stressing the responsibility of the laity for the maintenance and development of the Church, Bishop Stephen E. Keeler, of Minnesota, preaching at the consecration of the new Bishop of Iowa, the Rt. Rev. Elwood L. Haines, at Davenport, May 31, warned of the dangers of "Sacerdotalism," which, he said, must be combatted. "There are two ways to do this," he said. "One is by belittling the office of the clergy, the other is by magnifying the office of the laity. The latter, of course, is the true method.

"The particular genius of our branch of the Church of Christ lies in the balance and proportion of power as between the clerical and lay orders. Anyone who knows the Prayer Book is struck by the rubrical directions which so constantly guarantee the rights of the laity in corporate worship.

"He is a wise bishop and one who best serves the spiritual needs of his people who insists that the clergy and laity alike are bound by the legitimate use of the Book of Common Prayer.

"Anyone familiar with the Constitution and Canons of the Church will appreciate the great power given the laity in its ordinances. In fact, nothing can happen in this Church of ours without the consent of the laity."

SPIRIT HIGH—FAITH DEEP—HOPE REAL—LOVE LIVELY

A cable from Sian, China, reports that the Church of England's Canadian missionaries have escaped from the present renewed and violent fighting in Bishop Lindel Tsen's diocese of Honan, and have arrived safely in Sian, province of Shensi.

Honan has been divided into free and occupied areas, the Canadian missionaries having withdrawn early in the war to the free western portion, which is now being overrun. Bishop Tsen and his Chinese staff remained at their posts in the occupied city of Kaifeng and presumably are still there. Kaifeng has been occupied since June, 1938.

Meanwhile, the first letter to come in two and a half years from Bishop Tsen, written March 5, has just reached his Canadian headquarters office. The high hopes he expresses for the early return of his cathedral have probably been postponed by current events. He writes:

"The Church in spite of indescribable difficulties has been making progress in membership and in financial offerings. All my fellow workers, ordained and lay, have been most faithful in their service and equally admirable in their readiness to 'eat bitterness.'

"Almost all the occupied buildings of our diocese have been returned to us. The Cathedral and the Church of Truth will also be returned very soon. The original staff of our hospital are still there to carry on the medical work to the benefit of the sick and the glory of the Heavenly Father.

"For the past two years we have been living under the most intense strain. Not a few of us have broken down in health, if not in spirit. Yesterday I learned with much concern that the pastor of our cathedral fainted during the family evening prayer in his house. I have been under the doctor's order to take a rest for at least six months, owing to high blood pressure and heart trouble. However, I am really a great deal better than four months ago when I felt that I was going from bad to worse. I am telling you about the cathedral pastor and myself merely as examples illustrating the condition of most of my fellow workers, due to undernourishment and over anxiety. But thank the Lord our spirit is always high, our faith deep, hope real, and love lively.

"I want you to be prepared to send back all my missionary fellow workers as soon as possible. There is every sign of a great and bright future for our Church out here. The Lord has taught us many lessons by means of all the unusual happenings, how to carry on His work when peace and the new order come to us."

LAYMEN OF MISSIONARY DISTRICT CONSIDER MEANS OF BECOMING DIOCESE

Fresno, Calif.—Laymen of the missionary district of San Joaquin met recently to consider means of becoming a diocese. An endowment fund is contemplated, as well as a fund for repairs and additions to present church property. An objective of $500,000 was discussed, and the details of the plan will be placed before all the parishes in the near future.

Taft, Calif.—St. Andrew's, Taft, announced before Easter that, to avoid too many special offerings during the year, the Easter Offering would be divided as follows:

Army and Navy Commission, 30%, Presiding Bishop's Fund for War Relief 15%, Church Divinity School of the Pacific, 15%, local uses, 40%.

The returns of the appeal were far greater than anticipated. The total offering more than doubled any previous Easter offering in the history of the parish, with the result that the 40% retained for local uses was in no way a decline from the previous year's expectations. The returns for the Theological Seminary, for example, gave the school more than five times the amount obtained by the Theological Education Sunday Offering.

FOUR GRADUATES

At the Bishop Payne Divinity School

Petersburg, Va. — Commencement exercises at Bishop Payne Divinity School, May 14-17, included Baccalaureate Sermon by the Presiding Bishop; Commencement Address by the Rev. Dr. Aston Hamilton, of Millers Tavern, Virginia, and a forum discussion by the Alumni on "Pastoral Counseling in War Time," led by the new Professor of Old Testament and New Testament Language and Literature, the Rev. Edgar C. Young, D. Th., D. D.

The four graduates are Mr. Charles W. Fox, of West Virginia; Mr. Alexander Easley and Mr. Joseph Banks, of Virginia, and Mr. Richard Horsley, of Texas.

New Dean Instituted

Bishop Dun Attends Commencement of Theological School

Cambridge, Mass.—The 78th Commencement of the Episcopal Theological School and institution of the new Dean, the Rev. Charles Lincoln Taylor, Jr., Th. D., on June 1, brought the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, back to the School with which he had been connected almost continuously since 1917, until resigning in March to accept election as Bishop of Washington. Installation of Dean Taylor, youngest man ever to be inducted into the office, with the exception of the late Rt. Rev. William Lawrence, came at 5 P. M. in the afternoon with Bishop Dun and Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill officiating. The Very Rev. Edwin Jan van Etten, dean of the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, Boston, preached the institution sermon.

Commencement exercises began with the service of Holy Communion at 8 A. M. Dean Taylor conferred degrees upon nine young men and certificates of graduation upon three at the 11 A. M. service when the Very Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, Missouri, preached the sermon, saying in part:

The Church must be more courageous in providing leadership and more definitely and actively concerned with human welfare, and more sincerely dedicated to the freedom of all men from want. The Church in the past decade has made many mistakes in many places because it has not been sufficiently conscious about the material welfare of men. It will either speak with greater clarity in the post-war world on this subject or be discredited.

"The Church in the post-war world must free itself from bigotry and prejudice and lead in a campaign for opportunity for all men. If we lost the battle for human rights, even though we win the war, we shall not have destroyed the ideology of Hitler."

Degrees

The men who received the degree of Bachelor of Divinity were: Thaddeus Clapp and Edward H. Cook of Cambridge; R. Richard P. Coombs, Louisiana, Mo.; Donald L. Davis, Wilkesbarre, Pa.; Henry B. Getz, Philadelphia, Pa.; Albert E. Jenkins, Winthrop; J. Edison C. Pike, Reading; C. Robert Riemenschneider, Haverhill, Mass.; and John C. Ruback, Jr., of Troy, N. Y.

Those receiving certificates of graduation were: H. Russell Barker, Newport, R. I.; Richard S. Knight, Boston; and Hillman R. Wiechert, Providence, R. I.

The Adams Prize for homiletics was awarded to Edward H. Cook; the Salmon Wheaton prize for reading to John C. Rubach, Jr.

Alumni Association Annual Meeting

After luncheon on the lawn, the Alumni Association with about 200 in attendance held its annual meeting and election of officers. Following the alumni service when Dean Taylor was instituted, came the annual alumni dinner with the Rev. Frederic C. Lawrence, retiring president, as toastmaster. Addresses were given by Thaddeus Clapp for the senior class; Robert Amory, president of the Board of Trustees; Bishop Dun; the Rev. Dr. Henry B. Washburn, dean emeritus; and Dean Taylor.

New officers of the E. T. S. Alumni Association are: president, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day; vice-president, the Rev. Dr. Phillips E. Osgood; members for three years of the executive committee, Bishop Oliver L. Loring and the Rev. Charles F. Hall. Bishop Dun of Washington was chosen as commencement preacher for 1945.

The New Dean

The new Dean of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, the Rev. Charles Lincoln Taylor, Jr., graduated from Williams College and continued his studies in Oxford, England, Marburg, Germany, and in Jerusalem. Returning to Cambridge, he completed the prescribed course of the theological school in two years in 1924 and in 1925 became a member of the faculty.

FRENCH CHILDREN AND REFUGEES AIDED BY BISHOP'S FUND

New York, N. Y.—Through a contribution to the Friends' Service Committee, Episcopal Church people are able to help feed the starving children of France. The Friends' Committee is purchasing food in Portugal and Switzerland, for redistribution through the Secours Quaker and the International Red Cross. The Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief gave the Friends' Committee $1,088.76 in April and $100 in May.

The Presiding Bishop's Fund has just designated $400 for the American Committee for Christian Refugees, for special work which that group is able to carry on through the offices of the World Council of Churches in behalf of refugees in France and Switzerland.

WESTERN NORTH CAROLINA

Twenty-second Annual Convention

Asheville, N. C.—"The war has not changed and cannot alter eternal truths which the Church proclaims. These truths remain. Just as the sun and the multiplication table have not been affected by the war, so likewise the Church and her message continue constant." So said Bishop Gribbin in his annual address to the 22nd annual Convention of the diocese which met on May 9 and 10 at Trinity Church, Asheville. Bishop Gribbin laid particular emphasis upon the duty of the Church to returning service men, pleading for friendly cooperation for their restoration to a normal place in the life of the Church and community.

A resolution was passed empowering the Bishop to appoint a committee to investigate the possibilities for use of the Valle Crucis School, closed for the duration, and report their findings as soon as possible to the Executive Council. Many in the diocese favor the establishment there of a training school for mountain workers.

An amendment to the canons was passed, making members of the Executive Council whose terms expire, ineligible for re-election for a period of one year.

RHODE ISLAND

D-Day—H-Hour Observed

Providence—"D-Day and H-Hour" were duly and solemnly observed in Rhode Island. All churches and synagogues were opened for prayer, and many had special services during the day. In at least one church the attendance was more than on the previous Sunday. Some of the Protestants could not bring their conscience to allow them to pray for "victory", as they felt that prayer might indicate some sort of approval of war. And they could not pray for the personal safety of any soldier, for "those that live by the sword shall die by the sword". But at any rate, some Protestant churches which had been locked on week-days for many years have had their doors opened daily for private prayer and intercession, even though they had no services on D-Day. And on D-Day a race track closed for the day!

The Rhode Island Diocesan Service Flag now has 49 GOLD stars.

At the latest meeting of the Providence Convocation, the Rev. Irving A. Evens was, at his own request, succeeded by another in the office of Dean. Elected to that office was the Rev. Arthur M. Dunstan, rector of St. James' Church, North Providence.

Elected recently as Chairman of the Rhode Island Clericus was the Rev. L. B. Rasmussen, rector of St. Mark's, Warren.

The Rev. Allen Greene is now priest-in-charge of St. Peter's Church, Manton.

A Youth Rally was held at Grace Church in Providence on June 4, with Bishop Appleton Lawrence as speaker.

The Rev. Dudley Tyng, rector of St. Thomas' Church, Greenville, celebrated on Trinity Sunday the 35th anniversary of his ordination to the priesthood. Bishop Bennett was the special preacher.

W. A. Meets

Providence—On May 25 the Diocesan Woman's Auxiliary met at St. Martin's Church for a successful day. The Rev. John Mockridge delighted all with his address on experiences as an "Observer" at Rock Point School for underprivileged girls, near Burlington, Vermont. The other speaker was the Rev. Leslie D. Batchelor, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, who made an interesting address on a Woman's Auxiliary in Canada.

SUPPLIES CONTINUE TO CHAPLAINS

Boston, Mass.—The distribution of supplies and equipment to Episcopal Chaplains is continuing on a constantly increasing scale, according to a statement released by the Rev. Henry B. Washburn, secretary of the Army and Navy Commission. Summarizing Chaplains' requests which have been met by the Commission, the statement shows 337 portable altars with linens; 123 Communion sets; 4,725 pieces of altar linen, and 35 Fair Linens for Army Chapels.

During April, 1944, the Commission paid 438 Pension Premiums amounting to $6,933.25, and Discretionary Funds amounted—January 1 through May 1—to $14,085.

A total of 498,056 copies of the Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors has been distributed; also 18,655 Offices of Instruction; 109,484 Wayside Hymnals; 229,887 Forward—day by day; 161,534 pieces of miscellaneous Forward Movement literature; 74,644 Holy Communion folders; 300,107 Church War Crosses; 32,207 Identification Cards.

Vestments supplied to chaplains include 50 cassocks; 260 stoles, 115 surplices and 37 tippets.

The Army and Navy Commission needs the continued support of the whole Church, immediately, and through the duration of the war. Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, Commission chairman, points out that funds in sight will be exhausted before the end of this year, and that efforts to raise additional money should be continued throughout the summer months. "For every reason we must keep the Church with our men and women wherever they be, at home or abroad," Bishop Sherrill said.

MEMORIAL SCHOLARSHIP

By W. A., of New Jersey

Princeton, N. J.—A scholarship fund set up by the Woman's Auxiliary of the Diocese of New Jersey, in memory of the late Edith C. Roberts, is announced by Miss Marietta E. Atwood, diocesan president.

The plan is to give a yearly scholarship to an Episcopal student at Ginling College, China. The women are giving a "special" for it this year which will cover four years, and they hope that it will become a permanent scholarship when Chinese currency is stabilized. It will be known as the Edith C. Roberts Memorial Scholarship.

Miss Roberts, who died last year, was a sister of Bishop William P. Roberts, of Shanghai, and of Prof. Donald Roberts, of St. John's University, Shanghai, and was always intensely interested in the work of the Church in China.

She had served as diocesan president of the Woman's Auxiliary for six years, and treasurer also for a six-year term, was active in Church Mission of Help, and was elected assistant presiding officer for the 1943 Triennial. She was chairman of the Princeton Community Chest, and for a number of years was president of the Y. W. C. A. in Princeton.

GIRLS' FRIENDLY SOCIETY EXECUTIVE VISITS MICHIGAN

Detroit, Mich.—A series of highly successful and well-attended meetings was held in the Diocese of Michigan during the week of April 23, with Mrs. Helen G. Hogue, National Executive Secretary of the Girls' Friendly Society, as leader and speaker. Although brought to Michigan under the auspices of the GFS, Mrs. Hogue did not confine herself to that organization, but met with varied groups, mostly composed of young people, and stressed development of Christian personality in their lives.

Mrs. Hogue's first engagement was on Sunday afternoon, April 23, when she spoke at the annual Festival Service of the GFS in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit. The service, the chief emphasis of which was on Missions, was followed by a reception in the Cathedral House.

On April 24, the diocesan Woman's Auxiliary joined with the GFS in a dinner meeting in St. Paul's Cathedral. Mrs. Hogue made an address and this was followed by a very interesting Jury Panel on the topic "Women and Girls in a World at War," which dealt largely with the problems of the home and the various types of discrimination encountered in these times. Two hundred were present at the dinner, the full capacity of the Cathedral dining room, and only the physical limitations prevented many more from attending.

Thursday and Friday afternoons were devoted to conferences in the Diocesan House, between Mrs. Hogue and various members and leaders of youth organizations of the Diocese and some of its parishes.

DR. HOBBS' RETIREMENT ANNOUNCED

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. G. Warfield Hobbs, D. D., since 1921 associated with the national headquarters of the Episcopal Church, will retire on September 1, according to announcement by the Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, Presiding Bishop of the Church. Dr. Hobbs attains the Episcopal Church's official retiring age of 68 on August 29.

Following a career as a newspaper man, Dr. Hobbs joined the official staff of the Church, first as editorial secretary, then as editor of the magazine "The Spirit of Missions," then as executive of the Department of Publicity, and for the last several years devoting himself to special work in the development and use of radio and motion pictures in the service of the Church.

Dr. Hobbs had been successively on the city staff of the Baltimore American; a correspondent in the Spanish-American War; city editor and managing editor of the Philadelphia Public Ledger; art director of the Curtis publications; editor of the Baltimore Sunday Sun. After taking up his work with the Church, he decided to prepare for Holy Orders, and was ordained to the diaconate in 1923 and to the priesthood in 1925 by the Rt. Rev. John Gardner Murray, bishop of Maryland, and one time Presiding Bishop of the Church.

New York, N. Y.—Leaving about June 14, Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., treasurer of the National Council will pay a short visit to Cuba. He goes at the request of Bishop Hugo Blankingship, who wishes to discuss plans for some contemplated real estate transactions of considerable importance, calculated to improve the work of the District. Dr. Franklin hopes to be able to visit a number of the mission stations, and to return after about a week's stay.

THREE-FOLD ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED

Mamaroneck, N. Y.—Trinity Parish here, celebrates a three-fold anniversary this month. The observance began June 11, with a special service at which the Presiding Bishop was preacher. The anniversaries are the 58th of the consecration of the church building; the 127th of the final legal incorporation of the parish, and the 240th of the starting of the first regular services of the Episcopal Church in Mamaroneck.

The Rev. Dr. Frank Dean Gifford is rector.

BISHOP OLDHAM TELLS STUDENTS D-DAY MEANS DEDICATION DAY

Albany, N. Y.—Addressing the graduates of St. Agnes School at their commencement on June 6, the Rt. Rev. G. Ashton Oldham, D. D., bishop of Albany, emphasized the significance of D-Day which had come on their commencement date. "Whatever else it may mean," he said, "for our soldiers and for us it means Dedication Day." He continued, "In this contracting and interdependent world, liberty is possible for us only when it is possible for all mankind. . . . The sacrifice of our soldiers must be matched by sacrifice here, their dedication must call forth ours."

Invasion Day prayers were said in the Cathedral of All Saints first at the Corporate Communion of the graduating class of St. Agnes School. There were also special Intercessions at noon and at five o'clock. All the parish churches had intercessory services at varying hours, and this was diocesan-wide in response to Bishop Oldham's pastoral letter to the clergy anticipating Invasion Day, in which he said: "Military weapons alone will win neither the war nor a secure and lasting peace. We Christians have in our armories the potent weapon of prayer, not to range God on our side but to be sure we are on His side. . . . Accompanying the barrage of guns there should be a barrage of prayer to cover and surround our soldiers with the protection of the Most High."

St. Augustine's Conference

Intense Interest—Intelligent Discussions

New York, N. Y.—"I have never attended a Church Conference where there was more intense interest, nor where discussion was more intelligent and to the point, than the St. Augustine's Conference for Church Workers which has just closed at St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C."

That comment was made by the Rev. Dr. D. A. McGregor, who, with Miss Charlotte Tompkins, Miss Edna B. Beardsley and the Rev. B. W. Harris, represented the National Council on the Conference faculty.

Dr. McGregor was impressed by the fact that 145 people came to the Conference, many of them travelling long distances by bus. "There were representatives," he said, "from Galveston, and from Texas, and we had the hottest brand of hot southern weather."

"The conference was organized and handled so that it was smooth running and efficient. This was because of the fine work done by Mr. A. R. Chippey, Miss N. W. Anthony, in charge of arrangements, and Mr. Harris, in charge of program and enrollments."

The conference met May 29, and ran through June 2. It was built around the general theme, "Life in the Christian Community" and here again Dr. McGregor commented on the organizing skill that built the whole program around the general theme, instead of having a series of detached courses."

The declared object of the St. Augustine Conference, is "to train and stimulate worthy and capable leaders for the work of the Church, with special emphasis upon Christian Education, Missions, Social Service, and a flexible program for the young people."

Bishop Edwin A. Penick, of North Carolina, addressed the other leaders, including the Rev. Messrs. Beverley M. Boyd, Richmond; John M. Burgess, Cincinnati; J. Henry Brown, Fort Valley, Ga.; Dr. Preston C. Johnson, Virginia State College, with the National Council representatives.

AN APPRECIATION

Dr. Kramer J. Hoke

Although four months have passed since Dean Kramer J. Hoke left his earthly labors for activity in a longer sphere, I have sought the opportunity to record in the Southern Churchman the impression of his rarely beautiful life as shown at the College of William and Mary. Tributes have been paid him by the faculty of the college, the Alpha Chapter of Phi Beta Kappa, and by various educational organizations. It is significant, however, that his family preferred his funeral to be held in Bruton Parish Church rather than in the Wren Chapel of the college, where also it would have been a privilege to honor him. It is to him as a devoted Christian that the writer, not a member of his church, but a co-worker at the college submits this brief tribute.

Dr. Hoke's undergraduate training at Mount Saint Mary's College in Maryland, which later granted him an honorary degree, had made him tolerant of another religious communion than his own. He recognized thoroughly the fine qualities of all churches. He was really a lover of all sorts and conditions of men. He had a feeling for the sanctity of a church building and wished it exclusively for worship. He loved the peace and refreshment of an early communion. He was unafraid to be openly (yet never ostentatiously) religious on the campus. His vesper talks at the college were memorable for their spiritual discernment and beauty of thought.

Beyond all his accomplishment as dean, as professor, as widely known educational expert, was the gift of his radiantly pure life. Truly, like Enoch, he walked with God and was not because God took him.

GRACE WARREN LANDRUM,
Dean of Women, Professor of English, College of William and Mary.

U. T. O. INGATHERING LARGEST EVER PRESENTED

The Spring Ingathering for the United Thank Offering in the diocese amounted to $4,366.64. In transmitting it to the treasurer of the National Council, Mrs. A. Guy Reber, Diocesan Custodian, wrote: "This is the largest single offering ever presented in this diocese, and we are very happy over the result."

In Western North Carolina a substantial gain in the United Thank Offering is reported. Mrs. Thomas J. Woolridge, treasurer of the U. T. O. in that diocese, forwarded the diocesan remittance with the comment, "This certainly is a wonderful work."

MISSISSIPPI

Meet to Discuss Interracial Cooperation

Jackson, Miss.—Approximately 130 representatives of civic organizations and governmental agencies met at St. Andrew's Episcopal Church Parish House recently to discuss the work of the Mississippi Council on Interracial Cooperation. A research committee was appointed to carry on a study of the needs of the State and to outline a program to implement its findings. Officers of the Council are F. C. Willcoxen, Vicksburg, chairman; J. L. Reddix, Jackson, first vice-chairman; Mrs. J. Morgan Stevens, Jackson, second vice-chairman; Alexander Fitz-Hugh, Vicksburg, treasurer; Miss F. B. Walthall, Jackson, secretary.

and the story is the same everywhere.

The parish churches plan to continue to meet the need in the hearts of the people. Christ Church, Cambridge, is but one of many keeping open daily for prayer from 7 A. M. until 9 P. M.

An editorial in the Boston Herald is illustrative of the tenor of many local editorials, saying in part:

"America has knelt before, but never with so deep a sense of awe. . . . D-Day passed with no frenzy of celebration; but there were many who sought communion with God in the brimming emotion of this intense time. In the clamor of a World War, America was spiritually awakened. . . . This is a precious time in our history. For a moment, perhaps longer, we are as never before, not even after Pearl Harbor, one nation, united in a solemn realization of our destiny. . . . Is it too much to hope that the storm and stress of this moment will make our national heritage more valued, so that after the war we can re-found America on a more generous, more idealistic plan? Will something of the spiritual re-birth of D-Day carry over into V-Day and the days thereafter? We have the material resources for unparalleled prosperity and happiness. We can realize it only if we have the faith and devotion. God give them to us!

DEGREES CONFERRED

The degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology was conferred upon the Rev. John Goodridge Martin on May 24, 1944, by the General Theological Seminary, New York City, of which he is a graduate.

Dr. Martin is Superintendent of the hospital of Saint Barnabas for Women and Children, Newark, New Jersey, and is also President of the American Protestant Hospital Association. He has participated in many hospital activities of his state and nation; has served as President of the New Jersey Hospital Association and was for three years its executive secretary. He took part in the organization of the Hospital Council, Inc., and is still a member of its board of trustees. This body organized the first community-wide service plan, the Hospital Service Plan of New Jersey, of which he is also a board member. Dr. Martin represents his state on the Advisory Committee of the Associated Hospital Service of New York. He is also a member of the Hospital Society of New York, and is a Fellow of the American College of Hospital Administrators.

The degree of Doctor of Sacred Theology was conferred upon Dr. Martin in recognition of his outstanding service and achievement in the hospital field.

Dr. Martin was born in Paterson, New Jersey. He is a graduate of Yale University and studied institutional management at New York University. After his ordination in the Episcopal Church he became rector of St. Peter's Church, Clifton, New Jersey, and was called from that parish to become Superintendent of the Hospital of Saint Barnabas. In 1917 he did welfare work in England and France, and for his service with the Fourth French Army in the Foyers du Soldat (affiliated with our Y. M. C. A.) received the "Medaille

DEATHS

Rt. Rev. E. S. Yu

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Yu En-su of Kiangsu, China, died in April following an operation, the National Council has just learned through a cable from Mr. Arthur Allen.

In an article in the current issue of Forth, Bishop William P. Roberts of Shanghai (Kiangsu) wrote, "Bishop Yu and his Standing Committee form one of the strongest groups of men to be found in all China," and officers of the National Council regard Bishop Yu's death as a heavy blow to the Chinese Church.

Bishop Yu was consecrated in Shanghai May 31, 1942, as assistant bishop of Kiangsu. At Bishop Roberts' request, he assumed full ecclesiastical authority in the diocese, as Bishop Roberts, after a term in an internment camp, was repatriated to the United States.

Son of a Chinese priest, Dr. Yu was born in 1890. His education was gained at St. John's Middle School, Soochow University, the Anglican Theological College, Toronto, and Toronto University. He was an instructor of English and Religion at Soochow University for two years, then spent two years as a traveling secretary for the Milton Stewart Evangelistic Fund. He was ordained deacon at St. John's Cathedral, Victoria, Hong Kong, in 1919, and priest in St. John's Church, Yunnanfu in 1921. He was rector of St. John's, Yunnanfu for four years; secretary for Student Volunteer Movement; Principal of St. Andrew's College, Kaifeng; Bishop's Commissary; Dean of Students, and Professor of Sociology, Great China Union; Rector of St. Peter's Church, Shanghai. He held numerous positions on committees and commissions of the Chinese Church, and was for some years chairman of the Advisory Council of Bible Societies in China.

Bishop Yu was the eleventh Chinese to become bishop in the Anglican Communion.

Bishop Roberts stated that "since his consecration he has had enough problems to crush many persons, but he remains cheerful and hopeful in it all. He has had to spend many long hours with the Japanese authorities to appeal for a continuance of Christian work in American properties. He has been chairman of the committee appointed at the request of the Japanese to promote unity and cooperation among all Christian bodies and churches. It has also been one of Bishop Yu's responsibilities to try to raise loans and funds for the continuance of all the work formerly supported by the American Church. In the absence of other bishops in the Yangtze Valley and in Chekiang Province, he has visited for confirmation three dioceses other than his own, and has done the best he can for all the many requests that have come in for help from all over Occupied China.

The Bishop's death followed an operation for stomach ulcers, Mr. Allen's cable reports. He is survived by Mrs. Yu, two daughters and a son. He had been looking forward to a year's rest following the war.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

The Highest Distinction

"My Brethren, I would warn you against this wretched, mischievous spirit of party—A Christian! A Christian! let that be your highest distinction; let that be the name which you labor to deserve. God forbid that my ministry should be the occasion of diverting your attention to anything else. But I am happy that I can appeal to yourselves, whether it has not been the great object of my zeal to inculcate upon you the grand essentials of our holy religion; and to make you sincere, practical Christians. Alas! my dear people, unless I succeed in this, I labor to very little purpose, though I should presbyterianize the whole colony."

—Samuel Davies, of Virginia and New Jersey, died 1762.

"The constant danger of organized religion," says Bishop Barry, "is to become self-centered and introverted, more concerned with its own preservation than with the redemption of society. The Church today is not secure against this. It tends to be asking, 'How can He save the Church and strengthen it against hostile forces?' But it ought to be asking the very different question: 'How can the Church save the world even at the cost of its own life?'"

We do our work and pass on. Pilgrims we are, and the sand covers our tracks almost in the passing. If we pitch our tent at eventide we must strike it in the morning and fare on our way. Love alone endures, and it will be well for us if, when we pass into the unseen we find those whom we have blessed here waiting to welcome us.

—Dr. J. F. Newton.

Man finds the meaning of his life in accepting his responsibilities to his family and the national community. But there remains a part of man that transcends all community, a dimension of the human spirit that must find its ultimate meaning in God, the Redeemer, Who alone knows the secrets of all hearts, their unconfessed frustrations and mysteries.—Reinhold Niebuhr.

Worship is giving to God His worth. It is making always the right response to God. But because of our sinfulness that is exactly what we are unable to do ourselves. We can only do so in the power of Christ. Our Lord made that offering that we could not make, the offering of a perfect life. At every stage, at every moment of His life, He made the perfect response to God. We offer our worship through Him.—Selected.

From somewhere in the Pacific, via the Episcopal Church's national headquarters in New York, comes the picture of a set of chimes made of shell cases. Largely the work of Marine Corporal William P. Cole, the chimes call the men to chapel. The chimes are rung by turning the wooden crank. An Episcopal Church Chaplain comments that this is another indication that men on battle-fronts want their Church with them.

Dear Miss P.—

"On occasions, all too rare, we have been given the opportunity to go ashore for recreation. Brief descriptions are allowed but no names or facts relative to location. I shall always remember the first time I climbed a palm tree. I've always had a childish desire to do this, so picking out a friendly looking one on the beach, not too perpendicular, but rather as if it were straining itself over the lagoon to catch its own reflection in the clear water, I started up. It was a precarious climb, but I succeeded in reaching the fronds and knocking down nearly a dozen coconuts. True they were not ripe, but just right for the purpose of drinking the milk. Ripe ones can be picked up from the ground, having fallen from natural causes. That day I had a delightful swim among the coral reefs in the clearest water I have ever seen.

"At other times I have taken short hikes over rolling foothills and have climbed two rather lofty peaks. They were really not of great height, but offered such a pleasant respite from the confining life on the ship, they only seemed so. From their summits a beautiful panorama spread out beneath me in all directions. Immense grassy meadows, dotted with flocks of sheep so far away they seemed like immobile white ants; deep, dark ravines filled with strange trees, and frequently arms of the sea reaching in—unruffled and clear—like stained glass. There are many pleasant, secluded glades upon the mountain sides where it is so very quiet one dares not even laugh, hesitates to make the slightest movement. A dislodged pebble resounds like a boulder. The air is so delightfully fresh it is easy to fall in love with a place like that.

"Once, while endeavoring to place as much distance as possible between myself and the ship's anchorage, I chanced upon one of the most lugubrious, eerie swamp lands possible. Everywhere were hanging long vines like live tentacles from huge trees standing stolidly like massive sentinels draped in coats of green. A sombre gloom presented everything in its most frightful perspective. It was very still except for an occasional squawk of some swamp creature. Most places like that make me feel that I am the first person to trespass them. The atmosphere is so gloomy and uneasy. Add a few low-hanging sinister clouds and you would have Poe's 'Dark tarn of Auber in the ghost haunted region of Wein.'

"Quite near there, however, I found a striking contrast. A large bush, nearly a tree, which bore multitudinous blossoms of brightest scarlet, the flower being like a large pine cone. The petals were very soft and delicate and so numerous that the bush could be seen at quite a distance through the forest. I've been unable to learn its name or any thing regarding it.

"As I am prone to judge the successfulness or unsuccessfulness of a voyage more by things like the foregoing than by military value, I think that I can consider this one fair. This is not the right spirit, I know, but I abhor regimentation. All of us do, really, but it will not last forever."

MESSAGE FROM NEW GUINEA

The jungle speaks, a maze of sound,
Eerie voices softly call;
An unseen giant shakes the ground
And suddenly the raindrops fall.

Brilliant flashes light the rain,
Wild forest creatures vainly flee,
The wind cries out in wild refrain
His song of triumph, loud and free.

But presently the storm is o'er,
The jungle glows in verdant green,
The tropic birds call out once more,
And all is calm, serene.

And so it is with you and me
And all that lies in view —
The storm that breaks on land and sea
Must some day soon be through.

The clouds that fill our brightest skies
Must fade and leave a brighter blue,
And fear forever leave your eyes
When I come home to you.

PRAYER FOR THE NATION

"Eternal God, the Father of all mankind, and the sure defense of those who are sore beset, remember in mercy, we beseech Thee, our country now involved in war. Give wisdom to our counsellors, and courage and endurance to our soldiers, sailors and airmen, and all who guard our shores. Look in compassion on those immediately exposed to danger and hardship—all who are embattled and imprisoned; all who wander sad-hearted and alone; all whose homes have been left unto them desolate. Vouchsafe unto all of us that courage that shall enable us to live through anxious days and troubled nights. And grant that, when the current conflict of the nations is overpassed, there may be in us a mind forgetful of past ill-will, a heart of love for all true spirits, and a disposition to find a way of living that shall last forever. Through Jesus Christ our Lord." Amen.—From the Federal Council Bulletin.

81 EPISCOPALIANS REGISTERED AS CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

New Haven ,Conn.—"We believe the right of conscience within our Church should be maintained," says the Joint Commission of General Convention on Conscientious Objectors, in a leaflet being sent to clergy and interested Church people.

The Commission asserts that "The objector is neither a coward nor a slacker, but rather is inwardly compelled to follow at all costs his duty to God as he sees it."

Eighty-one Episcopalians are registered as conscientious objectors and assigned to Civilian Public Service Camps in the United States. The facilities of the camps are provided by the Government. The majority of 7,000 CPS men live in units operated by and paid for by the Friends, the Brethren and the Mennonites.

Conscientious objectors receive no pay, although they work 51 hours a week. They receive $2.50 to $15 a month, from which they supply their own clothing, shoes, and all personal needs. They receive no allotments for dependents; no accident insurance Their keep costs $30 a month for each man.

To January 1, 1944, the Friends, Mennonites and Brethren have paid approximately $31,000 for the care of Episcopal conscientious objectors. Epicopalians have paid back $23,000. "We still owe $8,000, and will need an additional $12,000 for 1944," says Bishop W. Appleton Lawrence, chairman of the Joint Commission.

The Commission is asking contributions for the Episcopal Church's share in the CPS program, stating that information may be had from Franklin L. Baumer, 53 Wall St., New Haven 11, Conn., or any member of the Commission.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

CARRY ON your necessary duties if there is not time to settle down for this brief prelude to your quiet time. But lend me your ears and keep open your mind, for often a word will be as a command to our scattered thoughts, to marshall them in orderly array and give us disciplined and accurate guidance for at least some of the decisions to be made for and during the day.

"Look with Thy mercy, O Father of men, upon all Thy children in every land, on every sea, and in the thoroughfares of the sky. Hold in Thy gracious keeping every burdened heart, encourage every noble hope, strengthen every righteous purpose, unite in the deathless bond of charity all followers of Thy valiant Son, whose name, and whose name alone, can still the cries of greed and bring to our stricken world the hush of peace. Shatter our fears and our misgivings, and let the light of truth so govern our thoughts and guide our hands that, with all the brotherhood of the sons of God, we may build as our home that kingdom which belongs to Thy Son, our Saviour Jesus Christ."

Our prayer fits into the pattern of the major desires and yearnings of almost everyone of us. We pray and want to give God a hand in the fulfilling of our soul's sincere desire, whether we can express it or not. It seems to me that in order to cooperate with God in the making of a new and better world for all peoples we must begin right now with adequate preparation mentally and spiritually and with a taste of and a test by actual experience in translating what we hear with our ears, see with our eyes, and believe with the tenacious and convicting powers of our hearts and minds, into something concrete.

I BELIEVE THERE are five things we must do as Christians before we can carry our full share of responsibility for the destruction of sufficient evil to enable us to begin the process of restoration throughout the world, upon a firmer foundation of those spiritual qualities that neither time nor man can destroy—faith, love, good will, inner peace, and truth.

1. We must get God and His world straight in our thinking and feeling. We must have a good solid concept of His nature and of His laws. We Christians believe that God is consistent in the running of His universe and can be counted on at all times. We believe that God is our Father and is, therefore, mightily concerned about all of us and willing and eager to give us sufficient for all our needs. We believe He is a God of love, who is willing to forgive all who come to Him in sorrow and ask for it—through Christ. He is our Redeemer. We believe He is a God of life, who has created us and all the world—through Christ He gave us insight into the full meaning and possibilities of man's life on earth. We believe He is a God of light, who has given men physical and spiritual means of seeing and comprehending—through Christ He revealed the great and almost limitless powers of man's insight and vision. We believe a lot more but at least those three basic beliefs will give us an angle on this No. 1 prerequisite for being peace-makers and world re-builders. Anything contrary to the Nature or Laws of God is not of Him and we should shun it like poison. When doubt would rear its ugly head, go back and reiterate these three concepts that form the bulwark of our creed.

2. We must get man straight and look at him with the eyes of the spirit and see in him the makings of sonship. Our attitudes and emotions, when governed by our human prejudices and narrowness, show up man too often as a weasel, an ugly duckling, or a weak rotter and nothing more. Seeing man as God sees him reveals his potential—that which he can become with God's help and ours, and makes us want to help free him from whatever is preventing his development.

The blocks of class and culture, race and color, must be gradually dissolved as we day by day, begin to see in man God's image, when we concentrate on the man and what he means to God, instead of on the evil and wickedness man has done, and for which he deserves just punishment. Man is ever precious in God's sight no matter what man has done, and God went so far as to send Jesus Christ to convince men of His love for the world and all it contains.

We shall continue our thinking on this important theme next week. Think now upon these first two thoughts and endeavor to assimilate them before tomorrow dawns.

What is Creation Waiting For?

By FREDERICK W. NEVE

MODERN ASTRONOMY has increased our knowledge of the vast extent of the universe to a wonderful degree. In fact the distances recorded which separate us from some of the stars visible to us seem almost incredible. This knowledge of the vast extent of the universe as compared with that of former times gives us a far vaster conception of the greatness, the majesty, the power, and wisdom of Almighty God.

Then again this vaster conception of God implies also a vaster conception of the meaning of the Incarnation, that is of the condescension of Almighty God in sending His Son into the world to take our nature upon Him and to humble Himself to the Death of the Cross, for our redemption. The more we think about it the more wonderful it seems, that God should choose this insignificant planet, the earth, to make it the scene for the carrying out of the greatest Divine Act since the creation of the universe, an act, too, more vast and far reaching in its effects than anything that has taken place since Creation itself.

Then again this leads us to a greatly enlarged conception of the privileges and possibilities necessarily implied in our being admitted to be the children of God. Our Lord, in referring to John the Baptist, said to His disciples: "Among them that are born of women there hath not arisen a greater than John the Baptist, notwithstanding he that is least in the Kingdom of Heaven is greater than he." As a member of Christ and a child of God, the possibilities of such a life for time and for Eternity are incalculable, in spite of the fact that so slight an advance has been made in the realization of this truth by man himself. Our Christian inheritance even in this life is a vast one, it merely awaits our entering upon it and taking possession. "All things are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." "He that spared not His own Son, but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not, with Him, also freely give us all things?"

But now we come to the question which heads this article, "What is Creation waiting for?" St. Paul gives the answer to this question in Rom. 8:19, (Revised Version), "For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God." This certainly implies that the fulfillment of the Divine Purpose with regard to creation depends upon what has happened, and the future happenings, in connection with this world of ours. That is to say, this world of ours gives the clue to the ultimate destiny of creation. The idea that Christ, the Son of God, came into this world to save us from our sins and win for us eternal life, leaving the rest of creation unaffected by it, may be only a part of the Divine Purpose.

IT WOULD NOT DO to build too much upon a single verse of Scripture, but there is certainly the suggestion that this vast universe is not merely a manifestation of the Divine Power but that there are multitudes of other worlds besides our own containing beings capable of knowing God and of serving Him. Our redemption is described in the Scriptures as an Eternal Redemption, that is to say, there is no time limit to its power. Why, then, should there be any space limit, in fact the whole of creation should share in its blessings.

In Christ's commission to His disciples, His words were:—"Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," He meant that His redemption is a universal one. The words of St. Paul seem to indicate that the whole creation could not fulfill the Divine Purpose without its being affected and influenced by the work which Christ carried out upon this earth. What is more, His words imply also that it is the sons of God, specially prepared and trained upon this earth, who are to be the messengers to carry the message of what Christ has done for them to the other worlds, whose inhabitants are conscious of their need of redemption, but are ignorant of the way by which it is to come to them. This must be done, if at all, in the future life, for, of course it would be impossible to perform such a mission in this present life.

THE QUESTION OF OTHER worlds with intelligent beings on them is of course a matter of speculation but with the vast number of solar systems making up the Universe it would be strange if this earth should be the only one capable of sustaining life, and if life, then why not physical life in its highest form known to us. A life, moreover, capable of being still further enriched by the gift of eternal life.

The question as to whether, if there are other worlds besides our own, would it be necessary for Christ to do for them what He has done for ours, is an open one. The answer has already been given, namely, that just as Christ's work of redemption was an eternal one, so is it without limit in space. If creation awaits the revelation or manifestation of the sons of God, then it would seem as if the sons of God will be able to meet a need which cannot otherwise be supplied.

The remarkable statement by our Lord, that the least in the Kingdom of God is greater than John the Baptist is interesting in this connection for this reason, that St. John the Baptist merely heralded the Messiah, the Lamb of God Who taketh away the sin of the world, but Whose work had not yet been accomplished. Whereas the sons of God would come, if my suggestion is a correct one, to bring to those who are waiting for the Gospel, the good news that the great work of Redemption has been already accomplished and that they are invited to share with them in the Glorious Liberty of the children of God.

This life is a preparation for the next. This is clearly indicated by the words of St. Paul, in describing what the ideal is towards which the Church of Christ should ever be working:—"And He gave some, apostles; and some, prophets; and some, evangelists; and some, pastors and teachers; for the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come in the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." But this is none other than the revealing, or the manifestation, of the sons of God, for which, according to St. Paul, the whole creation is waiting.

ELIJAH

Fire from Heaven

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

JUST AS A SPACE of hundreds of years elapsed between the time of Abraham and Moses, so a like space passed between the time of Moses and Elijah. The hard, desert tribe trained by Moses entered the Promised Land and began to subdue it. Palestine was not an empty land. It was filled with people who resisted the Israelites and fought for their homes. Moses led his fighting tribesmen in from the East, from the desert, and they conquered first the land to the east of the Jordan River, now known as Trans-jordania, and under the protection of the British. In that day it was known as Bashan, and Gilead. It was well-watered, and filled with magnificent forests, and fine, high pasture-lands,—forests which have since been cut down to the ground, and pastures which have since been washed into wretched gullies, overgrazed and ruined by the wastefulness and the carelessness of men. It was here, standing on the summit of Mount Nebo, that Moses looked out with his keen old eyes across the wild valley of the Jordan to the heights of Judea beyond,—the Promised Land, which he was to see, but not to enter; and it was in this country east of the Jordan, centuries later, that the prophet Elijah was born. He came into Palestine from beyond Jordan, and he went back there to end his life and his ministry.

So you see the conquest of Canaan was not a rapid process. The Jews got a foot-hold, and they enlarged it through the years, but it took them centuries to conquer the Promised Land. The sword of David built the Hebrew Kingdom to its greatest extent, and David left to his son Solomon a domain stretching from the borders of Damascus on the north to the Red Sea on the south, and from the shores of the Mediterranean, on the west far into the eastern desert, beyond the borders of fertile Gilead.

That fine kingdom was divided by the quarreling Hebrews themselves, after the death of Solomon, and the chance to become an empire passed forever from the sons of Abraham.

AT THE TIME of the division, the strongest position, the best land, and the majority of the population passed to the Northern Kingdom. The rich lands to the east of the Jordan went to this northern kingdom. Jerusalem,—Solomon's city, in which he had built his magnificent temple,—became an isolated provincial capital, overshadowed by, and often actually subject to, the greater kings in the north.

The kings of the north built a magnificent new city, Samaria, on a height overlooking the ancient high-road between Egypt and Mesopotamia, near the place where that road broke through the ridge of Carmel. The winter palace of the king was there, and his summer palace was in Jezreel, some miles away, at the head of a valley overlooking the spot where the Jordan River issues forth from the Lake of Galilee. In the Kingdom of Israel,—as the northern kingdom was called,—lay the whole extent of Mount Carmel. This mountain runs from the sea towards the Jordan. And along the base of it, from the modern port of Haifa to the site of ancient Jezreel, is the broad flat plain of Esdraelon.

The highest place in the ridge of Carmel had, since the days of the conquest, been sacred to the worship of Jehovah, the God of Israel, the God of the Covenant of Moses. The natives in that country to this very day call that place "the Place of Sacrifice." You may stand, as I have done, in the streets of Nazareth, which is in the hills to the north,—and look across Esdraelon to that ancient High Place, plainly lifted up above the level of the blue ridge of Carmel.

The history of the kings of Israel at Samaria is, for the most part, a story of murder and violence, and the ruthless shedding of blood. The house of Jeroboam, who established the northern kingdom, perished by violence. The house of the able but cruel warrior, Baasha, perished the same way. Zimri, who murdered his master and ruled for seven days, but burned with his family in his palace by the avenging Omri, who thus took the kingdom by murder from a murderer. His son, Ahab, was on the throne when Elijah, the stern and avenging prophet, came out of the land beyond Jordan to Samaria.

AHAB HAD MARRIED a Phoenician princess,—Jezebel. Jezebel was a woman of beauty, but vindictive and cruel of will, and determined in mind. She was not only a princess, she was also a priestess,—the High Priestess of the Phoenician goddess Astarte. In our Bible the reference to "Baal", whose priests Elijah overthrew, are references to this goddess. Ahab had married this woman because he thought he needed to cement an alliance with her father, the King of Sidon, against the Kings of Damascus, who were the great enemies of Israel.

The worship of Astarte was a fertility cult of the most depraved nature, involving sexual crimes and excesses, and human sacrifice in its most horrible form. Little babies were burned alive to propitiate the cruel goddess, while the priests, intoxicated with religious frenzy, leaped and foamed at the mouth, and slashed themselves with knives. And at the height of the ecstasy the priests and the people gave themselves over to ghastly excesses,—in the name of religion! This was the horrid worship that Jezebel,—Phoenician princess and priestess,—swore, when she came to be Ahab's Queen, to substitute for the worship of the God of Abraham! (Much the same sort of choice we have when we face the new paganism of Hitler!)

Thus a crisis came for Israel,—for the religion which had begun when God called Abraham,—the religion which had found its genius and its destiny when Moses set the nation free and brought the Holy Covenant and the Law down from Mount Sinai.

THE RELIGION OF ISRAEL in that day was not perfect. It was far, far below our Christian standards. It was below what it, itself, afterwards became, under the influence of the later prophets. But it was so far above the religion of Jezebel that we can find no basis for comparison. It was the worship of one God. Though there might be other gods, they were not for Israel! And it was a sternly moral faith. At its heart was the Covenant! God had given freedom to the Hebrews,—therefore they owed Him the moral duty of obedience! The basic rights of man to freedom, and to justice, and to equality under the law,—which are the bases of our democracy,—were guaranteed, not just by custom between man and man, but by the authority of the Almighty!

Because of this Divine sanction behind the Law,— which was rooted and grounded in Moses,—God's prophets dared to rebuke even kings for injustice to the least of their subjects. Nathan could stand before David,—and point the finger at that mighty king and say,—"Thou are the man!" Elijah could come before King Ahab, and promise God's retribution because Ahab had slain the humble Naboth to get possession of his vineyard,—"Hast thou slain, and hast thou taken possession? Therefore thus saith the Lord; in the place where the dogs licked the blood of Naboth shall the dogs lick thy blood,—even thine!"

Search the records of antiquity, and see if anywhere you can find an equal statement of the rights of man, maintained even in the face of kings!

The revelation had yet far to go,—but it had also come a long way, in the time of Elijah, the prophet! And in the time of Elijah it faced its first great crisis!

Jezebel, that wicked and cruel woman, as strong as a rock;—and Elijah, the prophet of the Lord, burning with unquenchable inner fire;—and between them poor, weak, worldly Ahab, spoiled, and petulant, and vacillating;—brave in battle, but afraid of his wife; willing to sign the death warrants of God's saints and God's worshippers rather than to cross her,—willing to put up with her rages, her wheedling, her ranting, her threats, for fear she might ruin his alliance with her father, the King of Sidon,—putting political expediency above moral righteousness!

SO THE STAGE is set for conflict! God's prophets have been slain by the score. The worship of Astarte is established openly throughout the land, and even those who hate it must pay it lip-service. Then appears the strange figure from beyond Jordan, a hairy man, dressed in skins, from out the forest wastes and the desert. He enters Samaria. He stalks through the streets! He forces his way into the audience chamber of the king! He shoulders aside the courtiers, and withers the soldiers with a glance, and confronts King Ahab,—Elijah the Tishbite!

Tall, burned brown by the desert winds, his lean muscles like knotted cords under his leathery skin, fierce-eyed, his long hair and beard uncut and uncontrolled, he leaned upon his staff in the elegant house of Ahab! Pointing a finger at the astonished monarch he said,—"The sins of your wife are your sins, for you do nothing to restrain them! A judgment has come upon you and your wicked house! As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall fall no dew nor rain in Israel these three years, but according to my word!" And having so said, the strange figure turned and stalked out of the palace.

Ahab tried to laugh it off as a joke,—but no rain fell. One year,—two,—three! Springs dried up. Streams ceased their flow. Crops failed. Cattle were starving. Ahab sought for Elijah, but could not find him.

At the end of the three years Elijah came again into Israel. He had been hiding in Jezebel's own country of Sidon. Jezebel was at the summer palace in Jezreel, but Ahab was in Samaria. Elijah confronted him, and demanded a test of strength between the God of Israel and the Phoenician Astarte.

There were four hundred and fifty priests of Astarte in Samaria. Elijah was the only champion of Israel's God. The King, and the prophet, and the priests of Astarte, and well-nigh the whole population of the City of Samaria went out to the ancient place of Sacrifice on Mount Carmel.

It was daybreak when the crowd arrived on the mountain top. Elijah, a wild and commanding figure, stood up to address the people. "How long halt you between two opinions?" he shouted. "Is Baal God? Then worship Baal! But if Jehovah is God, follow Him!" There was a dead silence.

"You do not answer. You are timid? But I am not timid! Let us make a test here! Let these four hundred and fifty fakers who worship Astarte prepare a sacrifice, but put no fire under it. I will do the same. The God that answers by fire, let him be God!" And at this a deep-throated roar of approval went up from the crowd and boded ill for the loser.

The prophets of Baal could not refuse this test. They had to deliver or die. But they supposed that Elijah was no better off than they were. Elijah had a surprise for them.

All unsuspecting, the prophets of Baal prepared their sacrifice, but put no fire under it. And all day long they leaped, and foamed at the mouth and gashed themselves with knives after their fashion; but there was no voice, and no answering, and no fire fell from heaven. And all day Elijah mocked them.

THEN, AT THE TIME of the evening sacrifice, the grim prophet repaired the altar of the Lord, which had been allowed to fall into ruin. On it he placed the wood, and the sacrifice. To show that there was no fire hidden there, he sent to the great spring at the foot of the mountain, which has never been known to go dry, and which is there to this day,—and brought up water and dashed the altar and the wood and the sacrifice with it three times. Then he lifted up his hands and prayed; and as he did so a blinding flash of fire struck the altar, and the intense heat of it devoured the sacrifice, and reduced the limestone of the altar to powdered lime! And the memory of that incident remains in that country to this day!

Wild excitement took hold of the crowd! And they began to shout,—"The Lord He is God! The Lord He is God!" And the people rushed upon the prophets of Baal and slew them in the foot of the mount!

Then Elijah sent his servant to look toward the sea. And he saw a little cloud coming up out of the horizon.

I, myself, have stood on Mount Carmel, and have seen such a cloud,—but when I saw it, it was morning; Elijah's cloud came up out of the sunset.

And when Elijah saw the cloud, he said to Ahab,—"Prepare your chariot. Get down! Go! There is rain in the land! Go, lest the rain stop you!"

And Ahab rode before the storm twenty miles across the plain of Esdraelon to Jezreel, lashing his horses before the rising storm. And before him, in the power of his tremendous exaltation, his tunic girt about his waist, his long gray hair in the wind, ran the prophet Elijah, shouting and singing as he ran, a wild song of the triumph of Jehovah over the religion of Baal.

And there in Jezreel, like a wicked spider in her web, sat Jezebel, waiting for them!

ELIJAH THOUGHT he had won God's victory. He had counted without Jezebel. "My god do so to me and more also," she said, "if I make not his life like the life of those he slew, before this time tomorrow!"

Jezebel turned upon Ahab like a tigress! While the rain fell in torrents upon the flat-topped houses of Jezreel, and the swirling wind blew spray into palace and hovel alike, she raved at Ahab, and followed him about, and the thunder and lightning made comma and period for her screams and curses! From room to room she dogged his steps, threatening him, ca-

We Trust It Was Sincere

The response of the public to the call for prayer on Invasion Day, was to put it mildly—amazing. Reports from all over the country tell of full churches and even business houses attempted to bring a religious note into their places of business. Here in Richmond, Virginia, three large department stores marked the day by definite religious services. At one store the personnel was assembled before the opening hour, and after the singing of the National Anthem, were led in prayer by a clergyman. In another a service was held at eleven o'clock, both for personnel and customers. The third store hod a prayer read each hour over a loud speaker system. The quiet that settled over the store during this time was profoundly moving. This store also pulled the shades on all their display windows except four, which contained no merchandise, but in each of the four General Eisenhower's prayer, the President's prayer, General Washington's prayer, and the Presiding Bishop's prayer. We trust this is symptomatic of the fundamental faith of the American people. If it was mere emotionalism—God help us.

We do not wish to appear cynical, but we do question the deep and abiding significance of this demonstration of American faith. We cannot forget that less than fifty per cent of the population of this country has any definite religious affiliation. We cannot forget that there are over a hundred organizations operative in this country that have, as their reason to be, the spreading of hate between groups that differ racially, religiously, and culturally. The demagogue finds a fertile field among those groups. If we meant our Invasion Day prayers, we have heard an answer to them, through God speaking to us. Speaking to us to go out into our communities and spread good will; build up better understanding between groups in which tensions exist, and work more diligently for an order of society in which each group composing that society will have an equal chance.

We were not only praying for the safety of our loved ones on Invasion Day, we were praying that we might have the courage to "carry on", in the way which their sacrifice is keeping safe for us. It is going to take courage and faith to build the new way that surely must be God's will for all mankind.

We can make no contribution to that new way unless we make it in the name of the New Man Christ Jesus. He is the focal point of the new order. We must be sincere in that belief and hold tenaciously to our conviction that His way is the only WAY.

A Happy Appointment

The Southern Churchman has contended in several editorials that the Protestant Chaplains in our armed forces were not getting the support they should from the Protestant Churches. We rejoice therefore to learn that through the Federal Council of Churches, Bishop Edwin F. Lee of the Methodist Church, has been appointed to the directorship of the General Army and Navy Chaplains Commission. We understand that Bishop Lee will work in close association with the chief of Chaplains of both the Army and Navy. That he will represent the interests of the Protestant Chaplains with governmental and military authorities is taken for granted. The Roman Church through Archbishop Spelman has certainly taken advantage of a similar set-up granted them. We trust that through Bishop Lee's office, our Chaplains will feel that they may get closer contact with civilian religious leaders. This we feel has been a great weakness. After all, most of these Chaplains are eventually returning to civil pastorates. It would be disastrous to have a gulf develop between the Chaplains and civil religious leaders. This is a step in the right direction.

We pledge our support to Bishop Lee, and will be glad to publish at any time material that he and the Commission may think will serve the constructive purpose of informing the public of the problems and the fine work our Chaplains are doing.

"The Fighting Fifth"

No, that is not the soubriquet of an army unit. It is the name that some imaginative publicity man has given to the Fifth War Loan Drive. During the other four drives we were building up our necessary war implements. Now those implements as tools of war are being used in combat.

Back here on the home front we can fight by buying bonds that will make sure the continued flow of weapons to our men on the fighting fronts. We Christian people are in this fight. We are not blessing war, but only facing up to our responsibility. The purchase of a small bond becomes a fighting man on the front. The success of the Fighting Fifth Loan is going to depend upon the number of small bonds sold. Church people have their responsibility in this united effort.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

joling him, promising to ruin his alliance with her father, saying she would betray him to the Syrians at Damascus, calling down the curses of a thousand gods upon his head, until the poor man, tearing his hair in exasperation, shouted to her to do as she liked, so long as she left him alone, and went and locked himself in his room. But she got his signet ring, and with it signed and sealed Elijah's death warrant.

A servant in the king's house, whose name was Obadiah, slipped out through the drenched streets and warned the prophet. Elijah was now in despair. From the height of triumph he had suddenly been cast into as deep a hell as living man can know. He had played his master-stroke and had lost. He now was sure that the cause to which he had given his life was defeated. He began to doubt, not only of himself, but of his God. The very foundations of his world were shaken.

Elijah arose, and went out from Jezreel, to the southward. Down the wild valley of the Jordan, around the grim shores of the Dead Sea, into the desert, and on to Sinai. Now he had to know! Now he had to find his God, and to confront Him face to face!

Without rest he passed on and on, until he came to Horeb, the gaunt mountain. Here God had given His Holy Covenant to Moses!

Into the mountain he went, up through the precipitous valleys, up the wild cliffs; and finally he threw himself, exhausted, upon the floor of a cavern high on the desolate heights.

He slept; and as he slept a dark cloud gathered about the mountain top. He awoke and looked out of his cave. Swirling mist, like smoke, obscured his view. Then the storm broke, and shook the mountain. The wind arose and screamed past the cave mouth! Rocks dislodged, and charged like monsters down the mountain side,—crashing into the abyss. The ground shook, as if the solid earth itself were afraid!

Then came the lightning, so quick and rapid that the fire of it ran like snakes of flame along the ground! And thunder crashed around him like the end of things created!

THEN ELIJAH LEARNED something,—he who already knew so much!

God was not in the earthquake; nor in the wind; nor in the fire!

The storm died away. And after it there was a great, great silence, like the silence before creation. And in that silence Elijah heard a calm, small Voice; and when he heard it, he knew that it was God!

And he wrapped his cloak about his head, and went out of the cave, and fell on his face on the ground.

And God said to him,—calmly, quietly, out of the silence,—"What are you doing here, Elijah? Your place is in Israel, where I have work for you to do. Go back to your work, and leave the rest to Me. I have yet seven thousand in Israel who have not bowed the knee to Baal!"

So Elijah learned,—what we need to learn, and never more so than today,—that it is not through miracle, and not through flame from the heavens, that righteousness triumphs; but through the steady faith, and labor, and sacrifice, and perseverance of the saints!

Amen.

STEWARDSHIP

Our Church

Forward in Service

THE BIBLE REVEALS TO US the truth that in the beginning God created man. Man as God created him was a member of a brotherhood which should spread over the face of the whole earth. Man, as created, had in common one nature, one universe, and one God. "Among other endowments man from the beginning possessed free will, which is an essential characteristic of human nature." Through pride and self-will man perverted this gift and "fell." By the "fall" we mean that process which separated and separates man from God and man from man. It was a "fall" away from a recognition of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man.

Thousands of years later God came into the world in a special way, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. He took upon Him our nature "and was made man." "Through the life, death, and resurrection of Jesus Christ the brotherhood of man as God had established it was re-created and strengthened." The means of this re-creation and strengthening was and is Christ's body, the Church, in which His holy spirit dwells. He chose His apostles to be the foundation of His Church. He incorporated us into the fellowship of His Church in holy baptism. We did not choose Him; He chose us.

At baptism we accepted our adoption, our membership in Him, and offered ourselves in self-surrender to Him in His Church. "Every day's work, every thought, word, and deed, was and is to reflect our Sonship in Him, to show to the world that we are members of that fellowship of man with God and man with man, through Christ, which He had intended since the dawn of human history." Through this fellowship He permits us to share with Him in the salvation of the world. Without fellowship in Christ the world has no hope but to be lost in a chaos of its own making.

We are the stewards of the Christian fellowship. "We are called by our Lord Jesus Christ, the Eternal Son of God, to the responsibility of living in this world that life of fellowship with Christ in His Church and through Him with one another, which alone can create what human hearts long for when they think and speak of 'the brotherhood of man.'"

BOOK NOTES

By F. J. Warnecke

THE CREATIVE DELIVERY OF SERMONS. Robert White Kirkpatrick, Th. D. The Macmillan Company, New York. 235 pages. $2.50.

This is a book which the clergy will read with much interest. Many books have been written in regard to the preparation of sermons. This book begins where they end and concerns itself with the vital task of the delivery of the sermon. The comments of Dr. Kirkpatrick are detailed and specific. He presents for us a technique that uses the emotions and our muscular tensions as well as the intellect. Older men will wonder whether they can get out of the ruts of their own fixed habits, but in any case reading this book will encourage all of us to more careful thought in respect to the delivery of sermons. The author is pastor of the Presbyterian Church at South Boston, Virginia, and has been an instructor in speech at the Union Theological Seminary at Richmond. This certainly is a "must" book for the clergy.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Christ Must Come First

"Every Other Claim Must Go," Archbishop of Canterbury Stated to American Chaplains

New York, N. Y.—The Archbishop of Canterbury was the speaker at a Quiet Day for 75 Chaplains of the Air Force organized recently by Chaplain Walter P. Plumley, former rector of St. Mary's, Haddon Heights, N. J., and who has just been promoted to the rank of Major.

The Archbishop spoke of the points of danger which might lie in the path of Chaplains and clergy.

"Let us consider the stern duty involved in the following of our Leader," Archbishop Temple said. "God, and Christ in Whom we see God, must come absolutely first, and so far as His claim does cut across any other claims, that other claim must go. There can be no compromise at all. Remember these words are not spoken to the Inner Room, but to the great multitude, all the people. Christ never said anything about offering comfort and happiness. It is not the offer of comfort and happiness in the first place, here or elsewhere. It is a call to service, whatever it costs. It is said that we must abandon any kind of worldly goods. Some are called to that. What matters is, that whether we abandon them or not, that we should be ready to abandon them, that our spirits should be completely detached from all these worldly concerns.

"In our calling, our chief task is quite deliberately to influence other people. That is merely an arrogant thing to do if we are doing it in our own name. Why should they pay any attention to us? No reason whatever, unless we really are representatives of the One Who is the Lord of their souls as of ours.

"There are some things which come to take a higher place in our lives than loyalty to Christ and His Cause. It can be a love of power, just a form of selfishness, of course. We all know, I expect, some ministers who look, at least, as if they were diminishing their ministry because they delight in exercising power.

"Another danger is popularity—catching people to ourselves. That is a temptation which is sometimes very strong to young men in the ministry. I have certainly seen some good ministerial work spoiled by jealousy. Partisanship is another thing. There are some people in the Church of England, for instance, who are keener to be good Protestants or good Catholics than good Christians. We must search our own hearts.

"Whatever it is we do, leading prayers, preaching, organizing, as ministers of the Gospel, it presents us to other people as representatives at least of the Church, if not of our Lord. We must come to this work through the Lord. Our motive must be clear. It must be the motive of the Good Shepherd, whose true concern is the welfare of the flock. The good shepherd is he who wins the loyalty and allegiance of his flock, and we to whom He has given the commission to care for that flock on His behalf, can only do this so long as we, too, are one, with free but full allegiance to that one Good Shepherd."

HUDSON STUCK HOSPITAL MAKES SPLENDID REPORT

Fort Yukon, Alaska—Bishop John B. Bentley, commenting on the annual report of the Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital said, "It is a splendid report, showing at a glance that Dr. Lula Disosway and her staff were more than busy during the past year. The Hospital again proved itself a blessing to the whole community and to those living within a wide radius of Fort Yukon."

The report of the hospital, a 24-bed institution, shows in the year 244 patients admitted, 229 discharged, and 7,287 hospital days. Twenty-three births were reported, 14 deaths, 254 medical patients, and 52 surgical patients. Dr. Disosway performed 102 operations.

In addition to the in-patients, the hospital staff looked after 3,748 old and 87 new patients at the clinic and gave medical treatment to 3,835. The out-patient report includes also 601 surgical cases, 942 pediatric, 172 gynecological, 16 genito-urinary, 190 skin diseases, 132 obstetrical, 287 eye, ear, nose and throat, 119 X-ray, 159 laboratory tests, 393 vaccinations and inoculations, and the examination of 33 school children, and 12 men for the selective service.

In addition to the out-patients treated in the clinic, which is held at the hospital; the staff made more than 2,000 village calls during the year, visiting and caring for the sick in their own homes.

AGAIN ASKING FOR EPISCOPAL CHAPLAINS

Boston, Mass.—Again the Army and the Navy are asking for Episcopal Chaplains. The Army and Navy Commission hopes that it may receive inquiries promptly. Address the Commission's executive secretary, the Rev. Henry B. Washburn, D. D., 1 Joy Street, Boston 8, Mass.

At present the Episcopal Church has 305 men commissioned and on duty in the Army Chaplain Corps, and 149 men commissioned and on duty in the Naval Chaplains' Corps.

MR. FRANKLIN GOES TO CUBA

New York, N. Y.—Leaving about the 14 of June, Lewis B. Franklin, D. C. L., treasurer of the National Council, is paying a short visit to Cuba. He goes at the request of Bishop Hugo Blankingship, who wishes to discuss plans for some contemplated real estate transactions of considerable importance, calculated to improve the work of the district. Dr. Franklin hopes to be able to visit a number of the mission stations, and to return after about a week's stay.

Dr. Aldrich Declines Election

Serving Now as Chaplain of the Navy Demands Singlehearted Devotion

Detroit, Mich.—It was with regret that word was received in the Diocese of Michigan this week from the Rev. Dr. Donald B. Aldrich of the declination of his election as Bishop Coadjutor of the Diocese. The election had taken place on the second ballot at a Special Convention of the Diocese in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on May 24.

Dr. Aldrich's letter to the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, contained expressions of his appreciation of the election, and of the offer of diocesan authorities to wait for his services as Bishop Coadjutor until the war shall be over. (At present he is serving as a chaplain with the Navy.) He also remarked upon the largeness of the responsibility and the scope of the Church's opportunity in such a diocese as Michigan, with its many industrial and social problems.

However, Dr. Aldrich felt strongly that a Chaplain's work must claim his sole allegiance, and that he must not have "one leg on shore." He felt that a commitment at this time to the Diocese of Michigan would not allow for a complete and wholehearted commitment to the cause which he is already serving, and which, he said, "demands the singlehearted devotion of every one of us—equal if possible to those who unreservedly commit themselves to the point of wounds and captivity and death."

Bishop Creighton does not plan to set a date for a second Special Convention to elect a bishop coadjutor for the diocese, but intends to wait until the next annual Convention in January, 1945.

Bishop Juhan's 20th Anniversary To Be Observed

Jacksonville—Plans for observance of the 20th anniversary of Bishop Juhan's consecration as Bishop of Florida were initiated at the recent annual Diocesan Convention of the Florida Laymen's League.

November 25 will mark the completion of 20 years of service by Bishop Juhan as Bishop of Florida.

George W. Milam of Jacksonville is the new president of the Florida Diocesan Laymen's League, succeeding A. LeRoy Johnson.

Church Removed From Huntington Rebuilt and Consecrated

Jacksonville—The new Church of St. Stephen in the Edgewood Heights section of Jacksonville was consecrated recently by Bishop Juhan of Florida.

This beautiful old church building with its stained glass windows was formerly All Saints' Church of Huntington, Fla. It was dismantled, removed from Huntington to Jacksonville, a distance of some seventy-five miles, and rebuilt on the present site to become the Church of St. Stephen.

The service opened with a shortened form of Evening Prayer conducted by Bishop Arthur Lea, in charge of the Church of the Good Shepherd, which is the mother church of St. Stephen's. The Lesson was read by the Rev. Alfred Clark of East Haven, Conn., who was visiting in this city. The Sentence of Consecration was read by the Rev. Charles M. Wyatt-Brown, who until recently was the assistant rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd. Addresses were given by Bishop Lea, the Ven. Fred G. Yerkes and Bishop Juhan. Music was furnished by Franklin Glynn, musical director of the Church of the Good Shepherd, and his choir.

St. Stephen's while "new" to Jacksonville is "old" in terms of the history of Florida, as well as in its relations to the Old World. As a church building it has a history of six decades of work and worship as All Saints' Church at Huntington in Putnam County.

All Saints' Church was erected under the patronage of the late Mrs. Huntington of New York City, who owned a large estate in the neighborhood. By death and removals the church eventually lost its entire membership, and became available for "new" St. Stephen's congregation of Murray Hill, who dismantled the building and removed it seventy-five miles from Huntington and rebuilt it here, making "considerable demands on those responsible for the work, which has at last been completed," the Bishop stated.

The building is Gothic in style and has a spire sixty-five feet in height. All windows are of stained glass and were imported from England. The front is of marble and of rare beauty.

The Gilmore Street corner of three lots was given to the congregation by B. K. Paschal.

Church Debt Canceled

St. Philip's Church, Jacksonville, has liquidated its mortgage, thanks to a successful drive which ended recently. Dr. C. V. Freeman received special praise because, "heading a list with his own personal contribution of $100, and with his honest personality and sincerity, he solicited and turned over to the treasurer $864."

When the final reports were received, a total of $1,961.85 had been raised, which is more than enough to cancel the indebtedness.

HOPEFUL SIGNS

That the Church Is Moving Forward

Charleston, S. C.—"What's Right With the Church" was the topic chosen by the new bishop of South Carolina, the Rt. Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers, for his first address to his diocesan convention. The Bishop, speaking at the closing session of the Convention, listed four "hopeful signs to indicate that the Church has been moving forward," these being:

"The Church has an attitude of self-criticism. There is a new demand in the Church for reality. There is a growing spirit of good will among the branches of the Church. The Church is determined not to escape from the world, but to transform it."

The Tsu Family Arrives

Tell Delightful Story of Aiding and Entertaining Our Fliers

Boston, Mass.—Mrs. Y. Y. Tsu and the four children arrived in Boston early in June, having left China in March, to join Bishop Tsu, who has been in the United States on special duty since last July. Reports have come from Kunming about the hospitality of the Tsu home shown to Americans stationed there. Mrs. Tsu answered queries as to how it started and what is going on.

A rather lost-looking American flier stopped at a crossing on a crowded street in Kunming, headquarters of the American air command in free China, to ask a policeman where he might find some one who spoke English. A certain small boy observed this, as he observes everything, darted out and captured the tall American single-handed, and took him home.

The flier was in luck for the boy's parents were Bishop and Mrs. Y. Y. Tsu, who could not know American life better if they had traveled on the Mayflower; in fact, not so well. From that day on, the Tsu home never knew the meaning of solitude. The air field is ten miles out. For the men with town leave Mrs. Tsu became "our Kunming mother," as one of them expressed it with a fine disregard of relative ages. Kunming has practically no American or British residents.

An inspired friend in Chungking had presented Mrs. Tsu with an electric waffle iron. The men were allowed to beat the eggs, and even twelve men at a time could be kept happy with waffles and wild honey. Besides waffles they were thrilled to have brownies, rather blond brownies for there was seldom any chocolate, but walnuts were plentiful. "Oh, brownies!" the men would exclaim. The milkman's interest was aroused and he did all he could to get fresh milk for Tuesday nights, the men's special time, and now and then a flier coming in over the mountains from India could bring a quarter-pound can of cocoa.

Mrs. Tsu had one of Kunming's few pianos, which, of course, became a focus for any group of men in the house. They played games and sang endlessly, requesting such songs as "God be with you till we meet again."

The Church property consists of two Chinese dwellings, front and back, with the court between. The Tsus lived in the rear house; the front one is St. John's Church. The men came to the regular services when they could; later, when they could not go so far from the airfield, services were arranged for them at special times. They spoke highly of their chaplains but said the camp services never really felt like church. There have been as many as seven chaplains on duty at one time, but, as it happens, not one of them has come from the Episcopal Church. The American general heading the infantry training center was not allowed to tell his wife in Connecticut where he was, but he wrote her that he so enjoyed attending Bishop Tsu's church, and that was enough.

Many of Mrs. Tsu's friends were most eager to do anything that they could for the Americans, but were shy and rather frightened of the foreigners. They have found many ways to help, however.

Forty-four Americans are buried in Kunming, and the Chinese women wanted to do something for the American mothers of these men who died so far from home. One woman who keeps a beautiful flower garden in memory of a daughter who died some years ago offered flowers from the garden and made wreaths which the women took to the burial ground and placed on the graves, taking pictures afterward to send to America. The Kunming women have a memorial committee now, through whose efforts young people in the Kunming schools have been planting flowers and bushes to beautify the burial ground.

The women have a useful information committee, to answer the men's constant queries on where to buy what for how much, or what to order in the restaurants. Some of the older women decided that men away from home anywhere must have mending to be done, and have formed a service committee for that and other kind deeds. A sightseeing committee has also been popular, arranging trips to many places of interest or beauty, providing talks on Buddhism before visiting ancient Buddhists temples, and so on.

The men especially enjoy being entertained in Chinese homes. For this, Mrs. Tsu and her friends enlisted the interest of students returned from the United States where some of them had enjoyed American hospitality. Expense was a difficulty here for many of the university people and other educated families who most wanted to do it were just the ones hardest hit by inflation, who could not afford any extras at all. When Mrs. Tsu was talking about this out at the airfield with Chaplain Tull, one of the more recent chaplains, who has shown great appreciation of any effort on behalf of the men and aided in every way, he suddenly remembered that he had some cartons—whole cartons—filled with American costume jewelry which had been assembled in the United States and dispatched for use among the native people of the South Sea Islands. By some strange mistake it had turned up, useless and in the way, in Kunming. Chaplain Tull turned it all over to Mrs. Tsu to be sold. Half the proceeds go for entertaining the American men, and half for the Episcopal Church's student center which is located in another part of the city and is struggling to accumulate a building fund.

Chaplain Tull was most anxious to find some good work that the American men could do in Kunming. One day Deaconess Julia Clark appeared at the Tsus' with twenty forlorn Chinese orphans, rescued out of Burma. She was taking them to the Roman Catholic orphanage, which seemed the only possible place. Mrs. Tsu wondered whether this was something for Chaplain Tull's men. If the children's support could be provided, they could be housed in part of a school which was founded years ago by Bishop Yu En Su, late assistant bishop of Shanghai, when he was priest in charge at Kunming, a school founded in memory of his brother and named for him, En Kwong.

Chaplain Tull leaped at the chance, and at the party which was arranged so that the guardians could meet their little wards, every man grabbed a child. There were not enough children to go round.

PEOPLE OF ALL DENOMINATIONS ATTEND SERVICES

Harrisburg, Pa.—Probably more people attended the churches of Harrisburg on Invasion Day than ever before with the possible exception of Easter. All day long people entered churches of all denominations to pray from early morning until late at night. Special services were held in Episcopal churches as well as in the Roman and other Protestant churches.

- At the regular daily celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:00 A. M. in St. Stephen's Cathedral there was a very large congregation. A special service at 8:00 P. M. was also well attended. The Litany and A Call to Prayer was used. Dean Carson reported that there was a continuous stream of people coming and going all day long, the largest influx of people he had ever seen in the church except possibly on Easter.

St. Andrew's, Harrisburg, used A Call to Prayer, in connection with a celebration of the Holy Communion at 10:00 A. M., and again at 8:00 P. M., with full choir. 320 persons attended a special service of All Saints Mission, in the Little Theater, Hershey. A Call to Prayer was used. No advance publicity had been given. Announcement of the service was made at the plant of the Hershey Chocolate Corporation and on bulletin boards in various parts of the community.

NAT. EPIS. CONFERENCE ON RURAL CHURCH WORK, JULY 10-21

New York, N. Y.—In announcing the twenty-second National Episcopal Conference on Rural Church Work to be held in conjunction with the Town-Country Leadership School of the University of Wisconsin, Madison, July 10-21, the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, associate secretary of the Division of Domestic Missions states, "This year more than ever before is it essential that our Church leaders and workers study what is happening to the rural church and community. The acute dislocation of personal, family, parish, community and national life under the impact of the war is putting Church leadership to new and greater tests. The aim of the 1944 National Conference is to determine how the policy and strategy of town and country church work can be adjusted to meet the new needs and opportunities today, tomorrow, and in the years to come."

Five lecture courses are offered by specialists in their fields, drawn from the faculty of the University of Wisconsin and Northwestern University. These include "The Rural Community", "Our Changing Social Order", "Agriculture", "Family and Children" and "Social Groups". Episcopal sessions and leaders will focus on the topics: "Lines Along Which the National Rural Work Program Is Developing", "Trends in Training Men and Women for the Rural Ministry", "Racial Tensions in the Rural Community", "Christian Education in the Small Parish", and "Christian Service in the Rural Community". Among the leaders are the Rev. Richard J. Morley, S. S. J. E., Canadian Order; the Rev. G. Moore Smith, Ontario, Canada; Mr. George F. Wiese, North Carolina, and the Rev. Daisuke Kitagawa. Five officers of National Council divisions will be among the resource leaders.

Inter-Church sessions under the direction of the Rev. Henry S. Randolph, representing the Home Missions Council of North America, and the Rev. Mr. Samuelson, include among the discussants Professor Emerson Hynes, St. John's University, Collegeville, Minnesota; the Rev. Martin E. Schirber, director of Catholic Rural Life Schools, and the Rev. Martin Schroeder, of the United Lutheran Church.

The Rural Workers' Fellowship will hold its annual meeting on July 19, the Rev. Robert Purrington, president, has announced.

St. Francis House, student center at the University, will be headquarters of the Conference. Advance registration, states the Rev. Mr. Samuelson, director, has been heavier than in previous years, but the capacity of Lincoln Lodge, residence for the delegates is greater than previous lodging arrangements, and applications for registration are still being received by the Division of Domestic Missions, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

A "CATCH-UP" SERVICE IN CATHEDRAL

Detroit, Mich.—It happens occasionally, and it seems in these uncertain times to be happening more and more often, that here and there a member of a Confirmation class cannot be present when the Bishop visits his parish to administer the Apostolic Rite of the Laying on of Hands.

As an accommodation to such persons and to the clergy who have prepared them for confirmation, it has been the custom of the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., to hold an annual "catch-up" service in June, in order that these candidates may not have to wait for the next parish visitation or be confirmed in a parish class in another church.

Such a "catch-up" service was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, on the afternoon of Monday, June 5. About thirty were confirmed, presented by a considerable group of clergy of the diocese, the service being attended by a small congregation of friends and relatives. This annual service is being used each year by an increasing number.

ORDINATIONS

Priest

The Rev. Jay Ralph Keim Deppen, A. B., S. T. B., was ordained priest by Bishop Heistand in St. John's, Westfield, Pa., May 31, 1944. He was presented by the Ven. John G. Hilton, and the sermon was preached by Canon Heber W. Becker. He is rector of St. John's Church, Westfield. Address: P. O. Box 452, Westfield, Pa.

DEACONS

Mr. Percy David Jones was ordained to the diaconate by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Bishop of Michigan, on Tuesday, June 13, in St. Mark's Church, Detroit.

Mr. Jones was in the June graduating class of the Seabury-Western Theological Seminary at Evanston, Illinois, of which Bishop Creighton is a trustee.

The Rev. Edward Williams, rector of St. Mark's, presented Mr. Jones for ordination. The sermon was preached by the Rev. David T. Davies, rector of Trinity Church, Bay City; the Litany was read by the Rev. Sidney S. Rood, a classmate of Mr. Jones, recently ordained in St. Paul's Church, Port Huron, by Bishop Creighton; and the Epistle was read by the Rev. William T. Smith , rector of Emmanuel Church, Detroit.

Mr. Jones will take charge of St. Michael's Church, Lincoln Park, and Trinity Church, Belleville. He will be the first resident clergyman in this field for many years. Delegations from both churches attended the ordination service.

A luncheon in the parish house of St. Mark's Church followed the service, attended by the candidate and his family and friends, clergy of the diocese, the delegations from Lincoln Park and Belleville, and other guests.

Francis William Tyndall, Dorsey G. Smith, Joseph B. Tucker and Jaquelin Marshall Washington were ordained deacons by the Rt. Rev. Frederick D. Goodwin, D. D., bishop of Virginia in the Church of Immanuel on the Hill, Alexandria, Virginia, June 16. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Frederick J. Warnecke. Mr. Washington was presented by the Rev. Edwin E. Tate; Mr. Tyndall by the Rev. Edmund L. Woodward, D. D.; Mr. Smith by the Rev. Albert C. Muller; Mr. Tucker by the Rev. Stephen R. Davenport. Mr. Washington has been appointed deacon in charge of St. James-Northam Parish, Goochland, Virginia. Mr. Tyndall has been appointed deacon in charge of Rivanna Parish, Fluvanna County, Virginia. Mr. Smith has been appointed deacon in charge of Christ Church Parish, Kilmarnock, Wicomico Parish, Wicomico Church, and St. Stephen's Parish, Heathsville, Virginia. Mr. Tucker has been appointed deacon in charge of St. James Church, Montross, and Washington Parish.

The Rev. Joseph H. Banks was ordained deacon on June 12, 1944, by the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, D. D., suffragan bishop of Virginia in Grace Church, Millers Tavern. He was presented by the Rev. Aston Hamilton, D. D.; the sermon was preached by the Rev. John H. Scott. The Rev. Mr. Banks has been appointed minister-in-charge of St. Mary's Church, Berryville, Va., effective July 1.

MARRIAGE

The Rev. William Hampton Brady and Miss Margaret Josephine Lodge were married in St. Paul's Church, Savannah, Ga., on Sunday afternoon, June 4, with Bishop Barnwell officiating, assisted by the Rev. Charles E. Crusoe, D. D. On the preceeding morning, Dr. Crusoe said a Nptial Mass to which Mr. Brady had asked as many of St. Paul's people as could, to make their communion with them, which many did.

Mr. Brady, rector of St. Paul's Church, is a native of Aquasco, Maryland.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"You have only to be true to the highest you know; to keep your face turned to the light; to keep the path steadily; to pray that God will lead you to ever-increasing knowledge; to despise no call upon you."

"I know not what the future holds, but I know Who holds the future."

You cannot love Him properly if you are not doing some work for Him.—Ingram.

"God gives not only necessities. He scatters with a full hand."

Jesus Christ did not come into the world to make life easy. He came to make men great.—Bishop Fiske.

"The Samaritan who rescues you most likely has been robbed and beaten in his day, and it is a wounded arm that binds your wounds."

All truth is essentially Christian.—E. D. Head.

The world is always asking the Church to tell how it can escape the consequences of its sin—that is to say of its selfishness, for this is the root of all sin. But the Church has—or ought to have—no interest in doing this. Its concern is to tell men how to escape from the sin itself, and this will carry with it escape from the consequences.—Archbishop Temple.

"Joy is the flag we fly from the mast of our life's home when the King is in residence."

Once again, O man of wonder,
Let thy voice be heard,
Speak as with a sound of thunder;
Drive the false thy roof from under,
Teach thy priests thy word.
—R. W. Gilder.

The first word, when the tomb was newly rent
Was to a grieving woman gently said;
With two sad men He walked, the day far spent,
And how their heavy hearts within them burned
As comforted into the inn they turned
And He was known to them in breaking bread.
—C. Hazard.

From the companionship of Jesus Christ come all the qualities that make life beautiful and lovely. The chamber into which He walks becomes a room of everlasting memories, the words He utters become a living gospel of hope and life.

The Southern Churchman

Vol. 110—No. 27 1 JULY, 1944

FOR THE NATION

O ETERNAL GOD, through Whose mighty power our fathers won their liberties of old; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we and all the people of this land may have grace to maintain these liberties in righteousness and peace; through Jesys Christ our Lord. Amen.

FOR VICTORY

ALMIGHTY GOD, uphold, we pray Thee, the United Nations in their struggle to maintain liberty and righteousness throughout the world.

Guide us unto Thine own victory.

Arouse our peoples to generous and courageous sacrifice in the cause of truth and justice.

Forgive our sins and overrule both our aims and acts to accord with Thy most Holy Will.

We ask all in the Name of Him who died to make men free, Thy Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Amen.

FOR DIVINE TRIUMPH

WE PRAY THEE, O God, not that Thou should'st help us carry out our own plans, but that we may be used in serving Thine; not for man's victory over man, but for the triumph of Thy righteousness and Thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

JOURNEYINGS OF THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN

The Editor,
The Southern Churchman,
Richmond, Virginia.

Dear Mr. Editor:

Through the kindness of a dear relative the Southern Churchman is, after reading, usually passed on to the writer and in turn is made available to others.

A valued friend to whom copies have often gone forward has many times written me that they are always welcomed and read with much interest and appreciation. Only recently a letter from him included the following reference:

"I always enjoy the 'S. C.' and read it through. Even the local items are expressed in a way that interests the stranger and whoever 'runs' it has the knack of interesting the outside reader." He added that one member of the family particularly enjoys the "Thoughts" appearing from week to week on the last page.

This friend is now at his home in Scotland slowly recovering from the effects of four days in an open boat in freezing weather in the North Atlantic following the sinking of the vessel he was on by an enemy submarine. Members of the United States armed forces are stationed nearby (in fact, part of the family estate has been taken over temporarily by the British Government for the use of our forces) and he wrote some time ago that the issues of The Southern Churchman sent him find their way later to personnel of our services, through an American chaplain, a frequent guest at his home, who "seizes them" eagerly.

I have thought that what has been said above in appreciation of The Southern Churchman, also this little account of the journeyings of some of one subscriber's copies, might perhaps be of interest to you and the associate editors.

Sincerely yours,
W. L. P.

Washington, D. C.,
June 17, 1944.

AN INSTITUTION FOR THREE GENERATIONS

June 7, 1944.

Gentlemen:

I have delayed remitting because I wanted to write a letter. The Southern Churchman has been an institution in our family for three generations: My grandfather, the Rev. S. S. Burleson, in Minnesota and Wisconsin in the last quarter of the past century; my father in the first quarter of this century in North Dakota, Idaho and Washington . . . received your journal through the kindnesses of the Church Periodical Club.

I enjoyed it at the General and Virginia Seminaries and have subscribed to it from Washington, California, Arizona, and now Louisiana. The forepart of each week would not be right—without your visits!!

Your articles, editorials and news are always fair, impartial, timely and interesting. Keep up the good work.

Appreciatively and sincerely yours,
Theodore M. Burleson.

Plaquemine, La.

DEAN HAINES CONSECRATED BISHOP OF IOWA

Davenport, Iowa.—The Very Rev. Elwood Lindsay Haines, former dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, Ky., became the fifth Bishop of the Diocese of Iowa on May 31, at Trinity Cathedral, Davenport, with Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker officiating, and Bishops Charles C. J. Carpenter, Alabama, and John Long Jackson, Louisiana, as co-consecrators.

The service was attended by deputations from all the parishes of the diocese, clerical and lay deputies to the diocesan convention, and a large congregation, many more people than could gain access to the Cathedral. A public address system made it possible for the overflow congregation to hear the service on the Cathedral lawn, where chairs were placed. Thousands of other listeners heard a two-hour running description account of the consecration broadcast by the Very Rev. Rowland F. Philbrook, dean of Trinity Cathedral, over radio station WOC.

The bishop-elect was presented for consecration by the Rt. Rev. Charles Clingman, Kentucky, and the Rt. Rev. Howard R. Brinker, Nebraska. Bishop Brinker also served as Litanist. The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, Michigan, served as Gospeler, and the Rt. Rev. Wallace E. Conkling, Chicago, read the Epistle. The consent of the House of Bishops was read by the Rt. Rev. Douglass H. Atwill, North Dakota. Evidences of election were read by Charles H. Wilson, Davenport, chancellor of the diocese, and the evidences of ordination by the Rev. James H. Dew-Brittain, rector of St. James Church, Independence, and secretary of the diocese, while the consents of the standing committees were read by W. Parmele Peterson, Davenport, secretary of the diocesan standing committee.

Attending presbyters were the Rev. Harold Weaver, of Kentucky, and the Rev. Frederic G. Williams, rector of Grace Church, Clinton, and president of the standing committee of the diocese.

Bishop Stephen E. Keeler, Minnesota, was the preacher.

A luncheon for the newly consecrated bishop was held in the Hotel Blackhawk following the service. Speakers were: For the laity, Horace Van Metre, Waterloo; the Rev. F. G. Williams, Clinton, for the clergy; Bishop Clingman, Bishop Tucker and Bishop Haines.

Editorial Comment

Commenting on the new bishop, the Davenport Daily Times said editorially: "The consecration of the Rev. Elwood L. Haines as the fifth bishop of the Episcopal diocese of Iowa marks the beginning of another chapter in the history of the Episcopal Church in this State.

"The development of the diocese since the consecration of Trinity Cathedral in 1873 has been impressive. The culture no less than the spiritual life of the state has been enriched by the growth of this Communion and the educational and other institutions supported by it.

"Davenport has shared most abundantly in the benefits flowing from these institutions, notably St. Katherine's School and St. Luke's Hospital.

"Bishop Haines follows in the footsteps of men whose memories form one of our richest heritages. The consecration today recalls the saintly Bishop Morrison, the beloved Dean Marmaduke Hare.

"In consequence of the untiring efforts of the late Rt. Rev. Harry Longley, the new bishop will find the affairs of the diocese in the excellent order which distinguished his administration.

"Davenport joins the diocese in welcoming to this city and state Bishop

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

LAST WEEK WE BEGAN to describe five of the basic preparations for our Christian leadership of the world out of darkness into light. We discussed the first two: Get God straight and the world He created; and man, the highest of His creation. Today we continue.

3. We must believe that God, who made the round world and all that therein is, has a plan for the operation of that world and the sustaining of that life. Our Christian job, then, seems to be in part the seeing to it that everyone has enough and to spare of food, shelter, and clothing; opportunities for work and play and happiness—freedom from want and from unemployment; freedom from fear and slavery; freedom of worship and freedom to make choices within the circle of the best for the whole. We must recognize that all peoples should share equally in the rich stores of natural wealth, all of which God has given. For centuries, earth's abundance has been unequally distributed and man has suffered unnecessarily. As Christians we must do all in our power to see that no nation or people suffer want. The job is gigantic but it can be done.

4. Since God has prepared a friendly universe to work for and with man for producing a complete and abundant life, and since God made us in His own image, we as Christians believe that God endowed us with our most God-like and precious possession—the power of choice. God has given us free choice. He stands truth and righteousness up before us but we must choose them. He will not force us, even though through Christ He constantly seeks to win us. But if we really believe God's way is the way to live in cooperation with His Laws both natural and spiritual, then we must choose for everything that points towards His way without regard for consequences. Many heroic examples of this are being lived out now, especially in the occupied areas of Europe, where men have chosen the truth and borne witness that it was of God. They have done this even though death has been their reward, rather than to be left alone as weak and cowardly, and unfaithful to the trust God has placed in them. God is depending on us for making the good news victorious in the places of darkness and ignorance and prideful self-will.

5. It is rather obvious that no matter what we believe, unless that belief furnishes us the necessary power to follow on with acts, it is no good. Unless these acts are in harmony with that belief, it really is no good to us or to others and we fail God. The disciples followed on with acts only after they were empowered with the Holy Spirit, only after they were freed from hesitant fearful self, and lived all in all for Christ.

In order to be practical about this whole thing I suggest five ways of beginning our course of action as Christians, for making a better world for all peoples.

(1) Believe with all your heart that what I have said is true. Without the terribly earnest convictions of these basic certitudes about God and man we shall never be motivated to specific deeds.

(2) Take one step today toward accomplishment in some area—one step toward brotherhood for example, by one decent gesture of tolerance and understanding and Christian love as instances and opportunities arise.

(3) Correct false impressions about God and His world and His will for the world. Do not keep silent when a word will silence gossip or hate or give new hope to despair.

(4) Join some group that is working for Christian ends in society, preferably in your own church first—such work must stem from here. A tie with such working groups as the State International Commission or the Councils for International Organization, or the endless opportunities to influence legislation (such as the repeal of the Chinese Exclusion Act passed recently, or the insistence upon a clear statement of foreign policy by the government, or to join the crusade for every citizen to vote).

(5) And, lastly, pray. This admonition is "old stuff", I know. We've always been told to pray. But by this, I mean to stick with God and His way closer every day and seek without ceasing our part in His plan through His multitudinous and complicated affairs of the day's life.

Forget not these things to do them; forget not the 'morrow and its call to worship, forget not the clearness of God's word to us at this and every dawn.

O God, the protector of all that trust in Thee, without Whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy; Increase and multiply upon us Thy mercy; that, Thou being our Ruler and Guide, we may so pass through things temporal, that we finally lose not the the things eternal. Grant this, O Heavenly Father, for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Report of the Committee Appointed to Study the Problem of Divorce and Juvenile Delinquency and to Make Recommendations

Presented at the Meeting of the Council of the Diocese of Virginia, May, 1944

THERE IS NO MORE serious problem facing America today than divorce. It has been the subject of discussion at the General Convention of the Episcopal Church for many years, but a question is whether the emphasis by the church is in the right place. More attention is paid to the fear that a few may suffer than that the whole body of society may deteriorate. We approach it as a menace to our civilization and one which must be faced if we shall survive. The sanctity of marriage is the prime consideration. Its indissolubility is the ideal.

There is a parallel in the history of the Roman Empire as narrated by Gibbon. Plutarch says that Romulus allowed but three grounds of divorce: "Poisoning, adultery and false keys," and no divorces were known in the early years of the empire, but as of 533-565 A. M. Gibbon says that when Roman matrons became "the equal and voluntary companions" of the men a new jurisprudence was introduced that marriage like an ordinary partnership could be dissolved at the will of one associate. "In three centuries of prosperity and corruption this rule was enlarged to frequent practice and pernicious abuse. Passion, interest or caprice suggested daily motives for the dissolution of marriage, . . . the most tender of human connections was degraded to a transient society of profit and pleasure." Gibbon concludes: "A specious theory is confuted by this free and perfect experiment which demonstrates that the liberty of divorce does not contribute to happiness and virtue."

IN AMERICA divorce has become so easy and profligate that it is no longer regarded as a tragedy. It has become so fashionable that its danger to the welfare and happiness of the State is little considered.

"Civilizations, let us assure ourselves," says an anonymous writer, "are far more vulnerable on their domestic side than on their economic side. The home is the unit of the nation. Family life is the great assurance. If a state would not perish, it must see that its homes are the altars of human happiness of the family."

In America today, a vacation at a motor court in a foreign state is a residence giving jurisdiction for divorce on the flimsiest of grounds.

One of our Bar Associations had an inquiry asking for the marriage laws, and at the same time for the divorce laws, indicating merely a trial marriage. A law publication recently stated that it had been advised that several states had authorized marriages by proxy and inquired whether such a marriage was permissible in Virginia.

In eight years from 1933 to 1940, inclusive, the number of divorces in American has risen from 165,000 —1.31 per thousand of population to 264,000, or 2 per thousand of population, or one divorce to every six marriages.

Marriage is no longer regarded as an affair for grown-ups well disciplined, nor is there much suggestion that the partners to matrimony should cultivate understanding and sharing of one and the other's burdens. On the contrary, the emphasis is laid upon the freedom to change.

Dean Gauss, of Princeton, has been quoted as saying that broken homes contribute three or four times the problem cases among the students than normal homes. This is borne out by the testimony of school principals.

A leader for ethical culture says: "the reason is plain enough to those who understand what still distinguishes a home from a stock farm. The best contribution of the parents to their children is a spiritual gift. The man encourages his wife to offer their children all that is most excellent in her, and she exercises this influence upon the father."

A great philosopher has said that the ideal marriage is where each surrenders everything to the other.

The approach to the solution of the question is through legislative, religious and social sanctions. This means that the people must set the standards, must change the attitude of society, and must advocate stricter laws.

The late John B. Minor, a great Virginia law teacher, said on this subject, "Religion, reason and experience combine to enforce the sanctity of the marriage tie. If not held indissoluble altogether . . . in the interest of society and the happiness of mankind, it should be dissolved in rare and extreme cases."

Juvenile Crime

Tied in with divorce and spreading to many families regardless of divorce is juvenile crime. The arrest of males and females under twenty-one years of age showed a percentage of change from 1941 to 1942 of a decrease of 3.6% in males and an increase of 55.7% in females, while the increase in arrests of females under twenty-one years of age from 1942 to 1943 showed a total increase of 47.9% over the previous year, and the arrest of males under eighteen years of age showed a total increase of 23.4% for 1943 over 1942. There was no decrease in males under eighteen years of age in 1943, and for that year the number of males arrested was greater for the seventeen year age than for any other year.

There is but one conclusion to be drawn from this. It is that the influence of the home has broken down; that schools cannot supply what the home lacks; and that the Church has failed.

WE, THEREFORE, recommend the following resolution for the consideration of this Council:

Whereas, in the opinion of this Council the increase in divorce and juvenile delinquency threatens the life of our people;

Therefore, be it resolved, That the Protestant Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Virginia exert its in-

Moral and Spiritual Leadership Necessary

By EDWARD R. STETTINIUS, JR.

The Under Secretary of State

LAST WEEK, as news of the landings in France spread across the nation, our hearts were lifted in prayers for the success of this great crusade to free the world from tyranny and oppression. The sands were running fast, and Hitler's monstrous plans to crush men's souls and to stamp out the religious life of Europe were at last approaching their miserable doom.

As our thoughts turn now to the problems which lie ahead in the post-war world, we must realize that there is nothing more important than to lay a firm and solid foundation on which the structure of a true and lasting peace may be built. Such a peace must recognize the basic Christian principles of justice and charity and brotherhood, and in our deliberations we must bear these qualities constantly in mind.

A great responsibility rests upon this nation to furnish moral and spiritual leadership to the other nations of the world and to instill in the minds of all men the will to preserve the peace and to bring into being the economic and social conditions essential to it.

Commissions on Church Unity

Meet in All-day Session in the Diocese of Ohio

The Commissions on Church Unity of the Diocese of Ohio of the Protestant Episcopal Church and of the Presbytery of Cleveland of the Presbyterian Church met in all-day session at the Church of the Covenant on Friday, June 16. The two Commissions met separately in the morning, the Episcopal group under the leadership of Bishop Beverley D. Tucker, the Rev. John R. Stalker, rector of St. Timothy's Church, Massillon, and Chairman of the Commission, and Canon T. O. Wedel, Warden of the College Preachere at the National Cathedral in Washington. The Presbyterian Commission met under the chairmanship of Dr. Philip Smead Bird, Pastor of the Church of the Covenant, with Dr. Robert B. Whyte, Pastor of the Old Stone Church, and Dr. Herman A. Klahr, Moderator of Cleveland Presbytery, taking on active part in the leadership. Ministers and laymen from both churches were represented on the two Commissions.

After luncheon together, the two groups met in joint session in the afternoon. Dr. Wedel and Dr. Whyte, as members of their national commissions on Church Unity, sketched the background of the plans for organic unity of the two churches on a national basis. After brief statements by Dr. Stalker and Dr. Bird, Bishop Tucker presented several concrete suggestions as to ways and means in which the Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches in the vicinity of Greater Cleveland might work together and demonstrate to the community and to the nation the harmonious spirit and desire for unity existing between the two sister communions. After some discussion, it was unanimously agreed by the joint commission that there should be an exchange of pulpits between the two churches throughout the city on October 29, which is Reformation Sunday. It was further agreed that an official representative of the Cleveland Presbytery be invited to attend the Annual Meeting of the Diocese of Ohio and vice versa. Also included in the matters discussed and approved were plans for joint meetings of the official boards of Presbyterian and Episcopal Churches, representation of the sister Churches at ordinations, and discussion of the proposed union at conferences for young people, women, etc. Further meetings will be held to work out details and explore other areas in which cooperation may be carried on. Both Commissions were unanimously agreed in their desire to work for the real and vital unity of the Churches which they represent.

flict is won. As Christians we know that this hope cannot be realized unless it be a freedom that is won in and through Christ.

From the darkness that covered the middle of the English Channel on invasion night comes a hope that we can see beyond the night to the dawn of a new day, when all peoples may come to the light of God's way for His Children.

Statement of Purpose

Evangelicals have often been accused of making nebulous statements; of having no definite program. This is not true in regard to the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. This group at their May meeting in Richmond, Virginia, drafted a statement of purpose. That statement of purpose we publish in its entirety in this issue. We had planned to make some comments on this extremely interesting statement. A statement which our esteemed contemporary, "The Living Church," calls, an "Evangelical Milestone." But we have used up our editorial space, and will have to defer this comment until next week's issue.

We hope that our subscribers will read this statement carefully. It deserves reading and study. Here is something positive. Here is a starting point, that may become a rallying ground, for all who wish to see the Church make a real impress upon our contemporary scene.

Statement of Purpose

As Adopted by the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship.

I.

THE EPISCOPAL EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP seeks to unite for common prayer, study, counsel and practical activities members of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, who, valuing greatly the unbroken heritage of the Anglican Communion as part of the historic Catholic Church, value equally the evangelical character restored to it at the Reformation.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship has no desire to create partisan spirit within the Protestant Episcopal Church, but seeks to preserve for it both its Catholic and Protestant heritage.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship regards the Reformation as an act of Divine Judgment upon the Church, as the reassertion of vital elements of Christian faith and practice lost during the preceding centuries, and as the means of eliminating medieval errors and corruptions.

II.

The particular objectives of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship are:

1. To witness to the Gospel and to summon all people everywhere to the faith and obedience of Jesus Christ, the Divine Revealer and Redeemer.

2. To increase the effectiveness of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America as an agency of God's rule in the lives of individuals and society; to that end, to cooperate with other Christian Churches and to promote the cause of organic union, at this time particularly with our sister reformed Churches.

3. To uphold the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Protestant Episcopal Church as set forth in its Book of Common Prayer, the Articles of Religion, and the Constitution and Canons.

4. To preserve permanently for the Protestant Episcopal Church the positive principles of the Reformation; and to provide encouragement, counsel and help to all seeking to forward the cause of evangelical Christianity in faith, ethics and practice.

5. To promote study, research, and writing in all lines of Christian knowledge, and to disseminate literature.

6. To further the application of Christian ethical principles to every sphere of personal and social life.

III.

We, the members of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, affirm our belief in God, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit.

We affirm that God took the initiative in making known to men His nature and His will for them. This revelation was given in a series of mighty acts culminating in the life and teaching, the death and resurrection of Jesus Christ, the foundation of the Church and the gift of the Spirit.

We affirm that the final authority for Christians is this revelation of which the record is contained in the Bible. The Bible, therefore, is the ultimate norm for faith and morals. For right understanding of the Bible men need the help of the Christian tradition; but tradition must always be subject to the living Word of the Scriptures and to Christ Himself who rules the Church today as in past ages through His ever-present Spirit.

Both the Bible and tradition are subject to critical investigation for the purpose of discovering actual historical events.

We affirm that in His life, death, and resurrection, Jesus broke the power of evil, and manifested a love beyond our understanding; that this was God's act; that whenever men give themselves to Christ in trust and obedience they are reconciled to God and brought into community with fellow believers.

We affirm that God called the Church into being and bestows upon it the Holy Spirit; that membership in this "family of God" is an inestimable privilege and a great responsibility; that the continuity of the Church is preserved by various means; externally by the Bible, the creeds, the ministry, the sacraments, the missionary enterprise, and internally by Christian faith and life, and that to lose any one of these is as serious as to lose another. The Holy Catholic Church includes all those who acknowledge Jesus Christ as Lord, hold the substance of the faith as contained in the Apostles' Creed and have been baptized.

We affirm that an authorized and regular ministry is essential for the Church; that the traditional form which Anglicanism preserved at the Reformation has such great values that we cannot conceive of its being discarded, though it may need to be adapted to changing circumstances; that the unity and continuity of the Church demands "a ministry recognized by every part of the Church as possessing not only the inward call of the Spirit but also the commission of Christ and the authority of the whole body", (Lambeth 1920), and that the historic episcopate has been in history and can be more fully in the ecumenical Church of the future the living and representative organ of such unity and continuity. At the same time we believe that non-episcopal ministries which have been manifestly used of Christ are true ministries of the Word, and sacraments; their sacraments genuine and reliable means of grace, and their Churches part of the Holy Catholic Church.

We affirm that the sacraments are instituted of God as corporate actions of the Christian Fellowship. Sacraments are means of grace used by the Holy Spirit who dwells in the Fellowship, and they must not be divorced from the life of the Fellowship. The grace of the sacraments is the personal power of God working through the corporate fellowship upon and within the life of believers. Baptism and the Holy Communion are the only sacraments generally necessary to salvation.

Baptism is the sacrament by which the Church admits new members to its ranks and signifies to them that in Christ they are reconciled to God.

The Holy Communion is the feast at which the Lord is the unseen Host. As they eat of the bread and drink of the cup, believers commemorate Christ's cross and resurrection and offer themselves to God in union with Him Who gave Himself on the cross; they commune with Christ, spiritually receiving His body and blood; they renew their fellowship with one another in Him, offer their sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving for all His benefits, and express their confidence

The Under-Secretary of State Speaks

We trust that many of our readers will read the very fine statement made by the present Under-Secretary of State which we publish in this issue. This brief paper was written specifically for The Southern Churchman. It is our hope to publish from time to time statements from our leaders in regard to the peace that is to come.

Mr. Stettinius is a fine Churchman. He knows that the basis of a "just and durable peace" can only be laid upon the foundation of Christian principles. Moral and spiritual leadership is a prerequisite for frank and open dealing of nation with nation. It is open diplomacy that will save us from narrow nationalistic aims, and a selfish imperialism.

We are grateful to Mr. Stettinius for permission to publish this very fine statement. It is encouraging to realize that we have this type of leader in places of high authority.

Marriage and Divorce

These are large issues attracting the attention of the majority today. The progress of the War is front page news. We should never let these exciting items blind our vision so that we cannot see issues near at home. Issues that may make a rubble heap of all the things for which our armies are contending.

One of the great issues on the home front is the stability of the home. Christian marriage, and the resultant Christian home, are of prime importance for the preservation of our civilization. Many of us are alarmed by the quick rise of forces that are doing despite to the stability of the Christian home.

The Council of the Diocese of Virginia at its meeting a year ago (1943) appointed a commission to study this whole question and make a report at the 1944 Council. We take pleasure in publishing in full that report. It does not make pleasant reading. But it gives facts that we think all intelligent churchmen should know. Whereas we may not agree with all the interpretations of these facts as given in the report, we congratulate this particular diocesan commission on its very fine report. We trust that the members of General Convention's Commission on Holy Matrimony will find it useful.

Faith to Look Beyond the Night

We had the privilege of reading a letter written by an officer of our invading forces to his wife. This letter was written on the transport that was taking him across the English Channel to the appointed rendezvous with the landing craft. There were several things in the letter that made a deep impression upon this reader. We have his wife's permission to pass them on to you.

In the first place this officer tells of the great comfort he received by attending a service of Holy Communion, celebrated by the Chaplain on the transport. The Chaplain happened to be one of our clergy. After the service, this officer relates that he returned to his quarters, finished a letter to his wife, and before turning out the light, read "Forward Day by Day." Interestingly enough the passage of Scripture—selected for that day—June 6th—was from the fifth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians.

It begins: "For freedom did Christ set us free: stand fast therefore, and be not entangled again in a yoke of bondage." The armies of liberty are approaching the shores of a continent in bondage. A continent enslaved by the domination of evil men. Men who have ruthlessly spilled the blood of their neighbors. Men who have enslaved their brethren made in the image of God. Men who have made of race and blood an absurd fetish. And in those marching forces of freedom an officer reads that "for freedom did Christ set us free!"

Would to God that all the officers and men in our armed forces and all us back here at home, honestly believed that only real freedom is to be found in Christ!

The officer from whose letter we quoted, we happen to know intimately. He was confirmed by our Chaplain during his West Point Days. He has been a devout Churchman ever since. In fact, we have in our possession a letter from a Chaplain of another denomination, who happened to be stationed at the same post with this man and in this letter he pays a fine tribute to the church loyalty of this man. It seems to us, that in the intimacy of a letter to his loved ones, he speaks to all of us. He is too good a soldier not to have known the dangers he was shortly to face. But he prepared himself spiritually. He turned to mercy of "the everlasting arms." He heard in the stillness of his quarters just before zero hour, the strong voice of God speaking to him. We are sure that officer went into battle with a courage and serenity that carried him safely through all dangers.

In the next place there is a wonderful vision in the thought that the passage in Forward Day by Day—for June 6th—Invasion Day—had as its theme freedom. Not only will the enslaved peoples of the continent of Europe stand fast in hope, the hope of their deliverance, but we stand fast with them in the hope that their deliverance and ours from the bondage of war will be made real when this con-

STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

in His final victory over all His enemies.

We affirm that the Book of Common Prayer is part of our Anglican heritage, providing invaluable forms for public worship, an aid in private devotions, and an instrument for molding character and true piety; that adherence to the spirit and intent of its rubrics is mandatory on all ministers of the Protestant Episcopal Church; that the meaning of its offices is to be understood through their history; that the Offices and Articles of Religion together delimit the official position of this Church on the matters with which they deal.

IV.

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship is concerned primarily with the proclamation of the Word of God. That Word reveals both God's judgment upon the sin of individuals, society and the Church, and also His forgiving and renewing love. It calls men to repentance and faith, to prayer and moral obedience, to stewardship of God's gifts, to be His witnesses, to strive for the conversion of the world and the reorganization of society in closer accord with His will.

Some Immediate Objectives

The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship agrees that:

WORSHIP

1. The Holy Communion is the primary and characteristic act of Christian worship, but the morning and evening offices are services of prayer, praise, and preaching worthy to be the principal service of the day.
2. The Holy Communion is full and complete only when the faithful communicate.
3. Fasting before Holy Communion is a permissible but non-obligatory discipline.
4. Holy Communion may be administered by Intinction.
5. The exclusion of any adult baptized Christian from the Communion is not required by the rubric at the end of the confirmation service.

LEGISLATION

We should strive toward

1. Organic union with the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A.
2. The adoption of a revised marriage canon.
3. Legalizing of intinction as a permissive use.
4. The revision of the Prayer Book.

fluence in every way possible to support the sanctity of the marriage tie and to advocate the repeal of lenient laws for divorce as a means of directing the attention of the people to this threat to our civilization; that our Church Schools be called upon to see to it that every child in addition to other instructions be specifically taught to know his duty to God and his duty to his neighbor as set forth in the catechism of the Church; and further that the Bishop of the Diocese be requested to call a conference of Clergy and laymen to consider these important questions, and that the Bishop be requested to present this matter to other Dioceses; that after the conference called by the Bishop for studying the whole field of Juvenile Delinquency and marital relations, that the Bishop appoint a commission for this Diocese to work in cooperation with the General Convention's Commission on Holy Matrimony.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

GENERAL THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY COMMENCEMENT

New York, N. Y.—Fourteen men were graduated from the General Theological Seminary, New York City, at the commencement exercises on May 24. They came from twelve dioceses and missionary districts: Colorado, Connecticut, Fond du Lac, Long Island, Massachusetts, Milwaukee, Newark, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, and Western North Carolina. The men were graduates of thirteen colleges and universities: Allegheny, Carleton, Chicago, Colorado, Harvard, Haverford, Houston, Lehigh, Lenoir-Rhyne, Marquette, Princeton, Trinity, and Wesleyan. One had the degree of bachelor of science; the others the degree of bachelor of arts.

Thirteen graduates of other years, having completed the additional requirements leading to the degree of bachelor of sacred theology from the Seminary, received that degree.

Honorary Degrees

The honorary degree of doctor of sacred theology was conferred upon the Rt. Rev. Sumner Dudley Walters, bishop of the Missionary District of San Joaquin, and upon the Rev. John Goodridge Martin, superintendent of the Hospital of St. Barnabas for Women and Children, Newark, N. J.

The opening event of Commencement Week was the preaching of the Baccalaureate Sermon in the chapel on May 22. The preacher was the Rt. Rev. John Thomas Heistand, D. D., bishop of Harrisburg. Taking for his text: "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this" (Esther 4:14), Bishop Heistand said in part:

"God's chief and permanent instrument for opposing evil and preserving the good is the Church of His creation. In its earliest days it was the permeating leaven in the corrupt Roman Empire. Later, when the barbarians sacked Rome and left it a heap of smoldering ruins, the Christian Church in the person of the Bishop of Rome walked in and on the ashes laid the foundations of the Middle Ages, one of the most glorious periods in Church history.

"As we survey the history of nations and men, with their rise to power and influence, and the subsequent decline, again and again God has used His Church to point men to the way in which lies their peace and wellbeing. Thus today, in the midst of a world in flames, with many of her most beautiful structures lying in ruins, we find the same Church functioning amidst the confusion and chaos caused by war. We know that, though these material structures be destroyed, the Church in essence and ideal can never be destroyed.

"But if everything Christianity has given to civilization—justice, and freedom, kindness, mercy, family life—are cast aside in the interests of winning a war (and in many instances this is happening), we might well ask: What have we left?—even though we are the victors in the conflict. As I stand before you, I am speaking to those who know that they are citizens of two worlds: the one existing within the other—the Kingdom of God, which exists side by side with the kingdoms of this world, a society or a civilization, I do not care what you call it, which in its pride of achievement has come to believe that it can and will exist independently of the will of God. . . .

"By virtue of our citizenship in the Kingdom of Heaven, we are thus committed to that cause for which our Lord laid down His life, and to which He commissioned us to carry on here on earth—the winning of this world for Him. . . . It is into this Kingdom that you have been chosen for a special service—to be messengers of good tidings, stewards of holy mysteries and pastors of the flock of Christ."

On Tuesday, Alumni Day, an unusually large number of the alumni gathered for the events of the day. One of the chief of these was the reading of the Alumni Essay on "One Church," by the Rev. Alan Griffith Whittemore, Superior of the Order of the Holy Cross. Another was the election of officers of the Alumni Association: President, the Rt. Rev. Wallace J. Gardner, D. D., Bishop of New Jersey; Executive Committee, the Rev. Albert A. Chambers and the Rev. Lyman C. Bleecker; Recording Secretary, the Rev. William K. Rehfeld. The Rt. Rev. William F. Lewis, D. D., Bishop of the Missionary District of Nevada, was nominated for alumni trustee.

The Commencement Address, delivered at the exercises on Wednesday, May 24, was by George Finger Thomas, Ph. D., Professor of Religious Thought in Princeton University. Dr. Thomas' subject was "The Distinctive Task of the Episcopal Church." He said in part:

"I shall begin by reminding you of a well-known distinction made by Ernest Troeltsch between two types of Christian groups, the 'Church' type and the 'sect' type. . . . The 'sect' type of Christian community is best understood as a relatively small fellowship of true believers who are striving earnestly to live lives of perfection in the world and who have separated themselves from the established Churches in order to do so. It often insists upon a personal experience of faith and a genuine rebirth or regeneration as a condition of membership in the group. The 'Church' type, on the other hand, is more inclusive in its membership. Many of its members have never gone through a vivid personal experience of religion, much less a radical conversion. They are not content to separate themselves from the world, since their ideal is to share the life of the world and at the same time to leaven it with the Christian spirit. . . .

"It seems to me that the greatest need of the Christian Church as a whole in our time is to combine the vital piety of the 'sect' with the balanced wisdom and the social and cultural responsibility of the Church. Since the Episcopal Church conforms to the 'Church' rather than the 'sect' type, it will doubtless make its major contribution in accordance with the genius of that type. The nature of that contribution is my main concern today. . . .

"Let us be honest with ourselves. There is always a danger in the 'Church' type of a deeply ingrained complacency. We tend to accept our Christian belief with only the slightest appreciation of its difficult and paradoxical character. It is easier to parrot the words we have learned in Church School and Confirmation class than to believe them in our hearts, or even to make up our minds in what sense we believe them. Likewise, we tend to accept the Christian ethic with almost no sense of the radical demands it lays upon us. . . .

"Because he was not content with the dead faith and conventional morality of the Anglican Church of his day, John Wesley should be acknowledged, not only as the father of a great 'sect,' but also as one of the greatest leaders of our 'Church.' We would do well to read again his famous sermon in Oxford on 'The Almost Christian.' The description he gives of the 'almost Christian' is not a picture of the average member of the Church, in his day or ours. It includes not only 'having the outside of a real Christian, but diligence in the use of the means of grace of the Church and sincerity in the effort to obey God's will. One might have expected Wesley to be satisfied with him. But the 'almost Christian' lacks one thing possessed by the 'altogether Christian';' faith and the love which comes with it. . . . Given such faith and love, the need for an adequate theology and ethic to articulate its meaning always manifests itself. In its absence there is nothing for a Christian theology and ethic to talk about.

"The criticism of modern Christian invidiualism by exponents of the social gospel was largely justified. For Christian individualism limited the Christian life to personal piety and morality and did nothing to prevent the exploitation of slaves before the Civil War or the economic piracy of the Gilded Age that followed it. But the social gospel was often shallow in its religious motivation and theological assumptions. . . . It is now generally recognized that social Christianity must be based upon more solid theological foundations and a stronger religious motivation. . . . If we are to face with hope the difficult tasks of social Christianity, however, we must not be frightened by the charge of social Utopianism and come to doubt the power of Christianity to transform society. . . . There can be no Christian society unless and until there is a dynamic and creative Christian Church at its center."

At the Senior Class luncheon, which was the final event of Commencement, the Very Rev. Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, S. T. D., Dean of the Seminary, was presented with a scroll, signed by the entire student body. The scroll expressed the great admiration and appreciation of the students for the Dean and their gratitude for all that he had done for theological education in the American Church.

VIRGINIA SEMINARY COMMENCEMENT

Alexandria, Va.—At this time when thoughts are centered on the news from across the seas, the Virginia Theological Seminary welcomed as its preacher for the annual Missionary Sermon the Rt. Rev. Lloyd R. Craighill, bishop of the Missionary District of Anking, China. The traditional service was held in the Seminary Chapel on June 14 the evening before commencement.

Bishop Craighill is a graduate of the Seminary—the class of 1915. In an informal, impressionistic sermon, he told of life in his district during the Japanese occupation. One Mission compound in Wuhu housed 2000 refugees for seven months. Here people found strength and help in praying for their friends overseas, and in the awareness that Christians in America were remembering them in their prayers. In hospitals and educational institutions, as well as in the churches of China, Bishop Craighill assured people that the spirit of the workers has endured heavy trials, but is prepared to endure more.

Of the thirteen Anglican dioceses in China, ten have Chinese bishops (including the Bishop of Shanghai, who has died recently). To the Chinese, the Church is a "second home," and one cannot help reflecting that this attitude is due to the work of missionaries like Bishop Craighill.

The Rt. Rev. Henry St. George Tucker presided at the 122nd Commencement exercises on Thursday, June 15. After the singing of the Virginia Seminary Hymn, Bishop Tucker awarded the diplomas and degrees to the graduating class, adding informality with his personal comments to each man.

The Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the Home Department of the National Council, gave the Commencement address. He challenged the clergy and laity with the need of a new dynamic for aggressive evangelism to reach the untaught, uninspired majority of unchurched people: a conviction, a power, a capacity for sacrifice, an awareness of issues necessary to inspire people who are not unchristian, but who have never really been challenged to enlistment. The success or failure of the missionary message will determine the future of the Church and of the world. He spoke of heresies in congregations who feel that they have hired the minister to minister to the group which hires him, or congregations who limit the function of the Episcopal Church to urban aristocrats. The missionary spirit is needed specially in rural work, and in religious education at this time. "Our business is the business of the Master of Life." The nation is realizing through the war that progress must be bought and paid for: the Church must also realize this. We must not expect a miracle to stay deterioration. Dr. Wieland saw promise in the awareness within the Church of its short-comings, and promise for its rural work in the particular characteristics of stressing the sacraments, and of teaching and worship regardless of numbers.

CHURCH OF THE AIR

Rt. Rev. Clinton Simon Quin, Episcopal Bishop of Texas, to Speak on CBS' "Church of the Air" July 2

The Rt. Rev. Clinton Simon Quin, Bishop of Texas, will deliver a talk entitled "Put On the Whole Armor of God" on the early program of Columbia network's "Church of the Air" Sunday, July 2, (WABC-CBS, 10 to 10:30 A. M., EWT. From Houston, Texas).

A quartet from the choir of Houston's Trinity Church will sing selections from the Episcopal Hymnal, under direction of Portia Spencer. Organist for the program will be E. A. Hawes of the Christ Church, Houston.

Six men received Certificates of Graduation, seventeen received the Degree of Bachelor in Divinity, and two the Degree of Bachelor in Divinity cum laude. Degrees of Doctor in Divinity were awarded to: the Rev. Moultrie Guerry, for his special work among the colored people, and among students; the Rev. Charles F. Penniman, for welfare work, particularly for children; the Rev. Francis Bland Tucker, for his contribution to hymnody through his work on the Hymnal Commission; the Rt. Rev. E. Pinkney Wroth, for his work as Bishop of Erie.

Rain interrupted the Alumni lunch which was being held out doors. The toastmaster, the Rev. Arthur B. Kinsolving of the class of '24 (having its twentieth reunion) climbed on a table on the porch of Aspinwall Hall and proclaimed it to be the speaker's platform. He called on Dean Roach of Bexley Hall which had joined forces temporarily with the Virginia Seminary; Dorsey Smith, president of the Student Body; David Yates, '34; Beverley M. Boyd, '24; Canon Wedel of Washington; Professor Brown-Serman, who presented a gift from the Faculty to Miss Mary Allen, who, having served as Cataloguing Librarian for four years, is leaving to be a missionary in Liberia; and Dean Zabriskie.

The Ordination Service was held in the Seminary Chapel on Friday morning, June 16. Four candidates from Virginia, and one each from West Texas, Oklahoma and Massachusetts, were made deacon by the Bishops of Virginia and Pennsylvania.

PROTEST MYRON TAYLOR'S REAPPOINTMENT

Resolution Unanimously Adopted

Richmond, Va.—The following resolution was unanimously adopted by the Richmond Ministerial Union at its meeting on June 12, 1944:

Whereas, the President of the United States, according to press reports, has reappointed Mr. Myron Taylor as his "personal Representative" to the Roman Catholic Vatican with the rank of Ambassador; and,

Whereas, the appointment of United States Ambassadors must have the formal approval of the United States Senate, which the appointment of Mr. Taylor to the Vatican does not have, and

Whereas, the appointment of an ambassador to the Roman Catholic Vatican is directly in contravention of the American principle of the separation of Church and State; therefore

Be it resolved, by the Richmond Ministerial Union that we protest this reappointment of Mr. Myron Taylor, or the appointment of any other ambassador to the Roman Catholic Vatican, not upon the ground of any hostility to the Roman Catholic Church, as a church; but upon the ground of our historic principle of the separation of Church and State, to which principle we are unreservedly committed, and

Be it further Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be spread upon our minutes, a copy mailed to President Franklin D. Roosevelt, and to each of our United States Senators from this Senatorial District, and to our Representatives in the Congress.

Henry Lee Robison, Jr.,
Secretary.

WAR PRAYER CHAPEL OPENED

Alexandria, Va.—The lighting of a vigil light to burn for the duration of the war marked the opening of a war prayer chapel in Grace Church, North Patrick Street.

Rev. Leon Neff Laylor, rector, conducted the ceremony, attended by 150 members of the congregation.

The prayer shrine is dedicated to St. Alban; a Roman soldier who lived in the fourth century and who gave his life protecting Christian leaders from persecution. He was not a Christian, having been killed before he was able to join the church.

Although similar chapels exist throughout the United States, the St. Alban chapel is believed to be the only one of its kind now open in Virginia.

The chapel is 12 feet long and 6 feet wide. It contains an altar, a priedieu, brocade altar tapestry and two candles. Hanging on the right wall is the vigil light and resting on a wall stand on the left wall is a statuette of the Roman saint.

A committee of church women, headed by Miss Effie Wilkinson, made the tapestry hangings.

Dr. Laylor said "the public is welcome to use the chapel." "It is dedicated," he added, "as a place of prayer for men and women fighting the war on all fronts, and as a place to pray for our enemies."

CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF THE PACIFIC COMMENCEMENT

Honorary Degrees Conferred

Berkeley, Cal.—The Rev. Richard M. Trelease, rector of St. Paul's Church, Kansas City, was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity at the 50th commencement of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, on June 15. An unusual feature of the commencement was the awarding of the Bachelor of Divinity degree to Chaplain Eldon W. Borell, U. S. A., who wrote this thesis on a South Pacific isle and whose degree was received by his wife for him. Other recipients of the Bachelor of Divinity were the Rev. Victor M. Rivers of Puerto Rico, who received the alumni preaching prize of a year's subscription to the Religious Book Club, the Rev. Bertram E. Simmons of Rupert, Idaho, and the Rev. Paul Lattimore of Martinez, Calif. The commencement address was given by the Rt. Rev. Sumner Walters, Bishop of San Joaquin.

This event concluded the 50th anniversary of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, which was featured by a Jubilee commencement a year ago, by the publication of the symposium, Christianity and the Contemporary Scene, edited by Randolph Crump Miller and Henry H. Shires, and by the campaign for additional support.

Dean Henry H. Shires announced the resignation of Prof. Everett Bosshard, who becomes rector of St. Matthias' Church, Los Angeles, and the addition of Professor Pierson Parker to the faculty.

The alumni meeting was addressed by the Rev. Richard M. Trelease. Speakers at the dinner included the Rev. John C. Leffler, of the alumni; the Rev. Victor Rivera for the students; Bishop Robert B. Gooden, president of the board; Professor Everett Bosshard for the faculty; the Rev. Arthur Farlander for the alumni, and the Very Rev. James M. Malloch for the trustees.

5 OUT OF 14 GRADUATES GO TO MISSION FIELDS

Nashotah, Wis.—Of the fourteen members of this year's graduating class at Nashotah House, five and possibly six, expect to go to the mission field, according to announcement by the Dean.

The Rev. Harry R. Morgan is now en route to the Panama Canal Zone, and the Rev. Edward Mason Turner is now en route to Alaska.

The Rev. Peter Francis, a graduate of Carroll College and of Nashotah House, and member of the Church of the Holy Apostles at Ellsworth, Kansas, will work in the Home Missionary District of Salina.

The Rev. Raymond A. Gill, graduate of Temple University and Nashotah House, a member of St. Gabriel's Parish, Philadelphia, will join the Holy Cross Mission at Bolahun, Liberia. He hopes to be in the field by the end of the year.

The Rev. Charles H. Hanby, graduate of Carroll College and Nashotah House, a member of St. Clement's Parish, Philadelphia, will work in the Church of England diocese of Nassau under Bishop Spence Burton. He will leave for the field in August.

TWO TUCKERS RECEIVE DEGREES

New York, N. Y.—Two relatives of the Presiding Bishop received degrees from the Virginia Theological Seminary at its recent commencement. Bishop Tucker conferred the degree of Doctor in Divinity upon the Rev. Francis Bland Tucker, rector of St. John's Church, Georgetown, Washington, and the degree of Bachelor in Divinity upon his nephew, Joseph B. Tucker, who is a son of Dr. A. W. Tucker, formerly of Shanghai, and now in charge of St. Agnes' Hospital, Raleigh, N. C.

Haines and his family, confident that their contribution to every phase of community life will be enriched by their activities and influence."

Gifts

Bishop Haines received many gifts from individuals and organizations. Among them were: A bishop's chair, from Mrs. Rice Cowan, of Louisville; Pectoral Cross, laymen of Iowa; Episcopal Ring, clergy of Iowa; Episcopal Vestments, congregation of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville; Vestment Case, clergy of Kentucky; Silver Service, former parish of Christ Church, Glendale, Ohio; Bishop's Cross, the Rt. Rev. W. Bertrand Stevens of Los Angeles; Book of Bishop's Services, Bishop Carpenter and Trinity Church, Bethlehem (a former parish of Bishop Haines); suitcase, Altar Guild of Christ Church Cathedral, Louisville, and a picture from the Cathedral staff.

Annual Convention

The annual Convention of the Diocese of Iowa met on the evening of the same day, affording Bishop Haines the opportunity to make his first public address to his people. The Bishop and Mrs. Haines held open house following the close of the Convention.

In his address Bishop Haines stressed the "unprecedented opportunity" lying before the Church in Iowa. "Iowa has been described to me by good authority," he said, "as one of the most promising fields in the whole Church. Educationally Iowa leads the land. It has ample means to invest in the support of the Church. It has a sound, stable, God-fearing population. It has rich human resources as yet untapped by the Church. The Episcopal Church here has much to give, not only towards the spiritual integrity of Iowa, but to the onward movement of the Christian Gospel everywhere."

Bishop Haines was born in Philadelphia March 12, 1893. He served as a missionary in Liberia from 1920 to 1924; and was with the U. S. Army of Occupation in the first World War. He was until his election, a member of the National Council, and has served on many diocesan committees and commissions, as well as attending General Conventions as a clerical deputy. Bishop Haines is the author of a number of books, including the well-known "Poems of the African Trail." He is married and has three children.

Personal Notes Of Interest

The Rev. David H. Lewis, Jr., rector of Abingdon Parish, Whitemarsh, Virginia, since July 1, 1942, has accepted a call to become rector of Christ Church Parish, Christ Church, Virginia, effective August 1. In addition to being rector of the parish, Mr. Lewis will teach religious studies in Christchurch School for Boys.

The Rev. Dennis Whittle, rector of St. Peter's Church, Delaware, Ohio, has accepted a call to become rector of Christ Church, Luray, Virginia, and associated missions, effective August 1.

The Rev. Pierson Parker, Th. D., will become a full-time member of the faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. For the past eight years, he has been minister of the North Congregational Church, Berkeley, Cal., and before that he was instructor in Old and New Testament at the Pacific School of Religion. He will enter the ministry of the Episcopal Church. Dr. Parker will be a member of the department of Biblical Literature and will be Librarian. He received his theological education at the Pacific School of Religion, receiving his Th. D., magna cum laude. Dr. Parker has been a contributor to many scholarly journals, and contributed the article "The Jesus of History Today" to the symposium, Christianity and the Contemporary Scene. For the past several years, Dr. Parker has served as a part-time instructor at the school.

Contrary to recent announcement, the Rev. A. L. Schrock is not curate of Holy Cross Church, Miami.

THE ROSE WINDOW OF NOTRE DAME

A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

DEATHS

Dr. W. S. Slack

Funeral services were held in St. James' Church, Alexandria, La., Sunday, June 18, for Dr. William Samuel Slack, former rector and retired priest of the Diocese of Louisiana and leader in church and civic circles, who died Thursday at the home of a daughter, Mrs. Fred L. Adams, of Alexandria.

Final rites for the former rector of Mount Olivet Church in Algiers and St. James' Church in Alexandria, were conducted at St. James Church. Interment was in Mount Olivet cemetery, Pineville. Those who officiated were the Rt. Rev. John Long Jackson, bishop of Louisiana, and the Rev. Caleb B. K. Weed, missionary for New Orleans.

The son of the late Henry Richmond Slack and Louisiana Tennessee Woolfolk, Dr. Slack was born on Mound Plantation near Rosedale in Iberville parish in 1869.

He was graduated from the University of the South, Sewanee, obtaining his bachelor of arts degree in 1891, his master of arts degree in 1895 and his doctor of divinity degree in 1934. Dr. Slack taught in private and public schools of Maringouin, La., for a year following graduation, then entered the theological seminary at Sewanee.

In August, 1892, he was named assistant master in the Sewanee grammar school, a post he held until 1895. He was ordained deacon of Christ Church

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

We thank Thee, Lord, for weary days,
When desert streams were dry;
And first we knew what depth of need,
Thy love could satisfy.

Days when beneath the desert sun
Along the toilsome road,
O'er roughest ways we walked with One—
That One the Son of God.
—Wm. Cowper.

Trouble and perplexity drive me to prayer and prayer drives away perplexity and trouble.
—Melancthon.

All who enter the strait and narrow path in good earnest, soon find themselves in a climate extremely uncongenial to the growth of pride.
—Selected.

I have read in Plato and in Cicero sayings that are very wise and very beautiful; but I never read in either of them, "Come unto Me and I will give you rest."
—St. Augustine.

"We lose religion if we do not use it, just as we lose friendships when our interests and those of our friends no longer cross and recross each other. I know of no way in which faith may be kept in storage."
—Selected.

There is a law of life. It was written in fragments in the human heart. It was set down in old times, as Peter puts it in the epistle, not by the will of man, but holy men of God spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. Then it was incarnate in a Life.
—Paul Sherer.

There are no crown-wearers in Heaven who were not cross-bearers here below. Hast thou a cross, believer? Shoulder it manfully! Up with it! Go along thy journey with unshrinking footsteps and a rejoicing heart, knowing that since it is Christ's Cross it must be an honor to carry it; and that while you are bearing it, you are in blessed company, for you are following Him.
—Charles Haddon Spurgeon.

AMERICAN BOMBER FINISHES 100 MISSIONS

Clarence L. Bailey Member of Crew on "Mild and Bitter," Which Made Bomber History

Clarence M. Bailey, S.-Sgt., Radio Op., Gunner, of Magruder Lane, Williamsburg, Virginia, was one of the crewmen who helped make possible the great record of the B-26 Marauder "Mild and Bitter," first American bomber in the English Theater of Operations to complete 100 missions.

He was one of 166 pilots, co-pilots, bombardiers, navigators and gunners who fought in this medium bomber over enemy bases in France, Holland, and Belgium from last July 28 until May 8 of this year. Not one of these men ever suffered injury while riding to combat in "Mild and Bitter."

Nameless for her first 44 missions, (it was known as No. 131,819) this Marauder acquired its name last December when the crew chief, T.-Sgt. William L. Stuart, of Donna, Texas, was standing at a bar in an English pub and overheard a cockney order a favorite British drink: "Mild and Bitter." That was it and Captain Paul Shannon, of Attica, Kansas, the pilot, okayed same.

"Mild and Bitter" has had a remarkably successful career. In all her missions she suffered less than 50 flak wounds, most of them small. Her worst trip kept her out of commission for only four hours due to 20 holes and slight damage to the electrical lines.

Her engines have never been changed. They have lasted through 440 hours (300 combat hours) of flight, covering 58,000 miles. These 2,000 hp. Pratt and Whitney engines consumed 85,000 gallons of gasoline.

Sergeant Bailey is a grandson of Mrs. Julia French Sparrow, of Richmond, Va.

OLD MARINERS' CHURCH SCENE OF SERVICE-HONOR MERCHANT MARINE

Detroit, Mich.—Mariners' Church was the scene of an unusual and beautiful service when the members of the Propeller Club, Port of Detroit, held their annual worship service in connection with Maritime Day. A group of Navy "Anchorettes," 50 young women in uniform, led the music at the service. At the conclusion of the service, an American flag, complete with standard, etc., was presented by the Regan-Lide Auxiliary No. 13 of the American Legion to Mariners' Institute, a part of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission work which is housed in the Mariners' Church building. The Rev. David R. Covell, L. H. D., rector of Mariners' Church and Superintendent of the City Mission, preached the sermon at the service and accepted the flag on behalf of Mariners' Institute.

This service was followed, on Memorial Day by a service at the Ashley and Dustin dock on Detroit's river front, when the Merchant Marine was honored by the Propeller Club in a memorial service during which flowers were scattered on the waters. The Ford Motor Company's tug "Dearborn" proceeded to midstream where Dr. Covell read the committal service during the casting of the flowers on the water. Captain Parsons, President of the Propeller Club, made a brief address.

So much of Detroit's life has been bound up with river commerce, and there are so many in whose lives the love of the water looms large, that it seems fitting that Old Mariners' Church should minister to their spiritual needs and provide a home for their worship services.

REV. HARRY MORGAN ARRIVES IN PANAMA

New York, N. Y.—Word of the arrival of the Rev. Harry R. Morgan in the Panama Canal Zone, where he will work, has been received by the National Council.

The Rev. George F. Packard writes to the Council about his own work at Christ Church, Colon, saying:

"We had confirmation in St. Mary's last week, Thursday night, so as to get the class I had been working on out of the way for Morgan. Well we jammed the place with the largest congregation in its history and the largest class. Then I had long planned a 'Bring-a-Friend-to-Church-Night,' and had hit upon last night for it not knowing Morgan would be here. When I first planned it, I didn't even know there was a possibility of anyone coming. Naturally it worked fine as he was here. Each person was asked to bring a friend and we gave them tags to wear if they did. St. Mary's had 245 out and that just three days after the confirmation service, . . . so things are going along.

"Here at Christ Church we had the same service. I had planned both on the same night and same time and was going to run between both, starting at one and ending at the other. But, as I say, Morgan took St. Mary's, and, then to show you how things work out, the Bishop of the Argentine, Bishop Weller (Church of England) was in town on a boat and he preached for us here with a crowded church—so we keep hitting 'em on all sides."

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES SEABURY-WESTERN

Seabury-Western Theological Seminary held its Commencement exercises on June 7 and 8. The Alumni meeting was held on the evening of the 7th, at which the officers were elected. It was voted to make some gift to the Seminary in honor of the services of the retiring Dean, Bishop McElwain.

The Alumni meeting was followed by a dinner presided over by the retiring president of the Alumni Association, the Rev. Russell K. Johnson. The speakers on this occasion were Bishop Conkling, Bishop Keeler, the Rev. Harold Holt, D. D., and Bishop McElwain.

Commencement was held on June 8th, preceded by an organ recital given by the Seminary organist, Mr. Achilles Taliaferro, M. Mus. The preacher was the Rev. Sherman E. Johnson, S. T. D. Nine men were graduated, and the degree of S. T. M. in course was conferred upon the Rev. William Paul Barnds.

GIVING LAGGING

Army and Navy Commission Hoping for Prompt Contribution

Boston, Mass.—On May 24, the Army and Navy Commission reported to the Church that giving for its Program of work was lagging to a dangerous and disturbing degree.

At that time $188,958 had been given toward the $440,000 needed by the Commission for this year.

Since that discouraging report, giving has increased and remittances speeded up, so that on June 22, the Commission was able to report receipts of $278,925.28. The balance still to be raised is $161,075, which should not present a difficult goal.

The Commission is hoping that parishes, dioceses and individuals will contribute freely and promptly, so that the fund may be assured within the next few weeks.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

I WILL EXTOL THEE, O LORD; for Thou hast lifted me up . . . Sing unto the Lord, O ye saints of His, and give thanks at the remembrance of His holiness . . . in His favor is life . . .(and) joy cometh in the morning . . . Lord, by Thy favor Thou hast made my mountain to stand strong. Thou hast turned for me my mourning into dancing . . . and girded me with gladness; to the end that my glory may sing praise to Thee, and not be silent. O Lord, my God, I will give thanks unto Thee forever." (Psalm 30.)

"O God, the strength of those who walk with Thee, without whom nothing is safe, nothing is tranquil: confirm in us the knowledge of Thy presence. that, Thou being our companion in the way, we may so deal with our anxieties that at length our hearts may find rest in Thee through Jesus Christ Our Lord." (Suter 15, No. 1.)

The day, like wet clay, lies before us ready for moulding into the shining counterpart of our heart's best desire for it. But until the likeness we created yesterday stands up and passes inspection under the light of God's presence we must spend our first moments touching it up before storing it away. That case of nerves or complaining or of quitting when things got too big to handle alone; that moment of impatience or of discontent or of weakness that led to troubles; that hasty word or ugly temper or moment of unfair judgment of another. These and/or other remembrances will keep us occupied for awhile and must be straightened out we are able to stand up and face another day with its own crop of troubles and evils, and likewise its wonderful new experiences. Our moments of failure yesterday were probably those moments when we forgot God.

ONE OF YESTERDAY'S REGRETS might have been the continuing of a habit that has never been adequately dealt with. This may demand a large portion of our quiet time. But such habits that hold us and constantly seek to pull us away from the way we know God wants us to go must be dealt with now in drastic manner before we can call any day our own to be developed as we choose.

But sometimes we cannot deal with the past in a few moments. That habit for example. It may take long and persistent handling day after day before it is conquered. Stay with it at least long enough to get one positive thing to do about it during the immediate present. Suppose the bad habit is loss of temper, that is, easily thrown out of control. One immediate step toward cure might be an admission of our temper tantrum as pure cussedness on our part and not righteous indignation caused by another. Or our step might be shame and sorrow and amends to another for the consequences suffered from our loss of temper. Or another step might be to begin the day by offering each moment of the day's life to God for using according to His plan, and referring back to this early moment dedication every hour throughout the day. Still another step might be the finding of a phrase to remember and chant as the surge of temper comes back and would possess us, such as: "When I lose control it is because another's actions or words control me." (If race is a point in question the one of a different race is in control at the moment.) "When I lose control I forget God." "When I lose control I lose the sane use of my mind." "The end result of uncontrol is the mental hospital." "Jesus said be not angry, with or without a cause—it's futile" and "The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God."

Perhaps next week a word or two about planning a day after each yesterday's darkness has been cleared away. O God, possess our minds and hearts and guide them through the day even until tomorrow comes.

Consecration Sermon

"WHO THEN IS WILLING TO CONSECRATE HIS SERVICE THIS DAY UNTO THE LORD?"

By the RT. REV. WILLIAM L. ESSEX

PREACHING at the Consecration of the Rev. William W. Horstick, at the service held Thursday, June 29, in Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, the Rt. Rev. William L. Essex, bishop of the Diocese of Quincy (Illinois) spoke on the text "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" (I Chronicles 29:5). He pointed out that in every ordination and consecration there are two aspects: Appointment by those who have authority, and the Grace of God, given to endow a man for a fruitful ministry.

"The service of consecrating a bishop," Bishop Essex said, "has more than a local significance. It is the act of the whole Church, and the fulfillment of its intention. We pray for the edifying and well-governing of the Church, which, as the larger body, includes the diocese of Eau Claire."

Referring to the late Bishop of Eau Claire, the Rt. Rev. Frank E. Wilson, Bishop Essex said, "Your first Bishop, in a statement disclosed after his death, said, 'I desire to record my deep conviction of the eternal deity of our Lord Jesus Christ and of His ultimate supremacy over the lives of men. Human life is inarticulate nonsense without Him.' If you should ask me what, in my mind, is our need and hope for the future, I would say, Clergy and people who believe in and live by the central Christian truth that for us men and for our salvation, He came down from heaven and was incarnate of the Holy Ghost; people who believe that the Church is not a society of congenial members, but God-given, God-empowered, and endowed with the Divine life."

Church Unity

PLEADING for advances toward Church unity Bishop Essex said: "We feel the urgent need for unity among nations and in the Church, to save the world from ultimate destruction. Civilization as we have known it, has been powerless to unite mankind. The Church, as we have known it, has not yet become a family. Our divisions bring us into disrepute and divide the forces of good in the face of evil. They make our public education secular, and Christian nurture a sham. There is no united voice on the great moral issues.

"Since the days of the Apostles, through the centuries of the Church's undivided life, there were three great means of visible fellowship: The Apostolic Faith, the Apostolic Sacraments, and the Apostolic Ministry. And these are still held as essential by at least three-fourths of all the Christians in the world, including our own branch of the Holy Catholic Church.

"The fundamental difficulty, the chief obstacle to reunion lies in variant conceptions of the Church and the Ministry.

"Holy Scripture discovers to us no difference between union with Christ and union with the Church. Personal religion is all-important. But it always means, too, a corporate experience. In the body, if men are to preach and minister in Christ's name, He Himself must bestow the authority. According to the Scriptures, the Apostles alone are commissioned to celebrate the Holy Eucharist, to forgive and retain sin, and it is they to whom much of Jesus' teaching is entrusted. They teach and rule with authority, because the Lord has prepared and appointed and inspired them to do so.

"The traditional view of the Christian ministry has been vehemently opposed by the Protestant bodies since the Reformation. The rejection of the ministerial succession has too often meant the rejection of the full faith of the Creed, the departure from sacramental life, and the substitution of the Bible as our final authority instead of the Church and its historical tradition. The Body of Christ has room in it for diversity and for fearless acceptance of truth. But the diversities must not be inconsistent with the Gospel and with the age-long teaching and practice of the Church.

"We can do nothing better today than to pray for and fight for a better Church, a better personal relationship with God. May He give us courage to be great and to serve our generation with a sense of mission. Christian distinction awaits those who make Christ's word their law and their life. For this brings humility and reverence, brotherly kindness and wondrous charity, sacrifice and labor, making us vessels meet for the Master's use."

CONCLUDING, Bishop Essex spoke directly to the bishop-elect, saying, "You are assuming today the work of Chief Pastor in a diocese small enough for you to be a real father in God to your people. They are today ready to uphold you, to love you, to work with you. Trust them, inspire them, shepherd them. May your experience soon be like St. Paul's, who wrote to the Thessalonians, 'We behaved gently when we were among you, like a nursing mother cherishing her children, desiring in our yearning affection for you, to impart not only the Gospel of God, but our very souls as well, you had so won our love.'

"Be sure of God yourself by making Him your daily Companion and Friend. Know the Scriptures, for the words found there are spirit and life. Teach your diocesan family the corporate life of the Church, for individualistic Christians make poor missionaries. Fight the good fight of faith and keep that which is committed to your trust. A disloyal priest or bishop is dishonorable. God help you to keep your sacred vows, to be what He expects. And may you take the high road of consecration to your calling, in the coming years."

Understanding the Prophets

AMOS

The Rise of a Social Conscience

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

THE LITTLE BOOK which is the basis of our study today marks one of the turning points in the history of religion. It is the first book of the Prophets actually written by the prophet whose name it bears. It is the Book of Amos.

Now, I do not want you to give me the sort of response to that statement that a lady gave a couple of years ago to the Rector of St. John's Church, Cynwd,—near Philadelphia. St. John's Church has some very fine windows depicting the prophets, and the Rector was showing them to a very impressive lady, from whom he did not expect any pleasantries whatever. He indicated an especially splendid window and said in his very best voice, "And this is Amos." The very impressive lady looked at the window in silence for a while, and then turned to the Rector and said, "Where is Andy?" The poor man was so taken aback and put to confusion that he had to sit down and fan himself for a while before he could continue.

It is unnecessary for me to tell you that Amos was a prophet; that he lived seven hundred and fifty years before Christ, and about one hundred years after the time of Elijah, and that he was the first of the prophets to write his prophecies in a book; and that much of what he wrote in that ancient day amazes us by its relevance to our modern times.

The Book of Amos was actually written by that prophet; but it is not one connected essay. Amos was a poet,—as most of the Hebrew prophets were,—and the Book of Amos is, in reality, a collection of his poems. There are a few words by some editor, thrown in here and there; and there is one short prose narrative, describing a dramatic incident in the prophet's life, but the greater part of the book is a collection of poems.

NOW, SUPPOSE you should take Shakespeare's Sonnets, with a few random passages from Hamlet, and Midsummer Night's Dream, together with a short narrative describing how the poet was brought before the magistrate for poaching game in his youth,—suppose you should throw all these together, and then arbitrarily divide it up into chapters, and the chapters into verses,—it would be Shakespeare all right, but there would be certain elements of confusion in it for which you could not justifiably hold Shakespeare to blame! Yet that is exactly what we have done to the work of Amos, and to the work of all the prophets whose writings have come down to us. And we complain that they are difficult to understand!

If you want to find a renewed interest in reading these Old Testament prophets, get a copy of the Bible printed without chapter and verse,—preferably one which breaks these old prophecies up into the original poems. One of the best of these is "The Bible Designed to be Read as Living Literature," edited by Ernest Sutherland Bates. But this otherwise splendid book has two glaring faults: it does not give us the whole Bible, many sections having been arbitrarily cut out; and the critical introductions which have been provided at the beginning of each book are unreliable, and in some places are terribly erroneous.

NOW, WHO WAS AMOS, and what was his message? Two years after the earthquake which shook all Palestine, and frightened prince and priest and peasant almost out of their skins,—during the reign of King Jeroboam II, the most successful monarch the Northern Kingdom of Israel ever had, there was a great feast-day in the sacred town of Bethel.

Bethel was the sanctury set up by the Kings of Israel to rival the Temple of Solomon in the Kingdom of Judah, in Jerusalem. Bethel was the spot where Jacob, in his dream, had seen the vision of a stairway leading up into Heaven. Jacob himself had given it its name, "Beth-el,",—"The House of God". At Bethel Jacob's words were remembered,—words which today are seen at the door of so many of our churches, —"This is the House of God, and this is the Gate of Heaven!"

The first Jeroboam,—the man who had divided the Kingdom of David and Solomon, and who, in dividing it, took the lion's share of it,—knew that he could not allow his people to go back to Jerusalem to worship in Solomon's Temple. So he had the image of a Golden Calf,—the same image that the people had worshipped before the giving of the Law to Moses,—set up in Bethel; and he said to the people, "This is the image of Jehovah, your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt; and this is God's Sanctuary." And he appealed to ancient tradition.

Now, this was not exactly idolatry, because they were worshipping the true God; but it was dangerously close to idolatry. It was very much the same kind of thing as the veneration of saints and images, which came into the Christian Church during the middle ages, and which to this day is still to be found in wide sections of Christianity.

In Notre Dame de la Garde, the Church on the pinnacle overlooking the city of Marsailles in France, I have seen people weeping and kissing a statue of the wounded Saviour and prostrating themselves before it in an agony of prayer. They were not exactly worshipping an idol but they were dangerously close to it. They were worshipping the Saviour; they were localizing their worship in that block of carved stone. Outwardly, at least, it was hard for me, a stranger, to tell the difference between what they were doing and what I had seen pagan people do in Japan, when they prostrated themselves before idols of wood and of stone.

CLEVER THEOLOGIANS explain it away by saying that Christian people give no more than "veneration" to statues, but give "worship" to God alone. Moses would have said that that is but playing with words; and that it is dangerous business for those who worship the true God! Moses sought to cut that sort of thing out of true religion, because he knew it was dangerous, when he commanded his people, "Thou shalt not make unto thyself any graven image! Thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them!"

The great Prophets of the Northern Kingdom never approved of the worship of God under the form of a Golden Calf. Some of them tolerated it; others, like Elijah, ignored it, and worshipped elsewhere. So far as we know, he never went into Bethel, or worshipped there. Neither did he go to Jerusalem to worship.

But the Kings of Israel maintained the worship of the Golden Calf. With them it was a political measure. They had to make their worship different in some respect from the worship of the Temple in Jerusalem. And this is the way they chose,—a dangerous way, a way which had in it a temptation to idolatry,—but they took it!

It was but a step from the worship of the Golden Calf to the worship of the fearful idols of the heathen round about them. And they, who had the best religion there was in the world, made it look dangerously like the worst. It was not a compliment to God to worship Him as the heathen worshipped their false gods; nor to bow down to the Spiritual King of the Universe under the form of a graven image, made by the hand of man. Yet every King of Northern Israel did so, from the first Jeroboam to the last King to rule in Samaria. A matter of political expedieney.

On the day of which we speak, two years after the earthquake, a gala festival was in progress in Bethel. Anyone who has ever been to an oriental city will have no difficulty in visualizing that scene;—the crowded and narrow streets; the little shops with fronts wide open, almost a part of the street itself; men from the desert, burned black by its fiery sun, stalking about; droves of goats, and sheep, and sometimes oxen, driven through the crowded way; men carrying trays of food, swarmed about by flies; children playing in the gutter; beggars, with blind eyes and twisted limbs, croaking out their cries for alms; throngs of laborers, dressed in burlap and rags, patched and patched, and patched again. Poverty everywhere.

Suddenly shouts sound in the street, and there is a mighty scurrying to get out of the way! A nobleman is going to the Shrine to pay his respects to Deity! Ten of his young men run ahead of him with sticks in their hands to beat the poor out of his way, lest he touch them and be defiled.

The great man himself rides in a litter of cedar-wood, covered with ivory, borne on the shoulders of his slaves. The canopy over him is silk, brought from the Orient. His coat is woven of the fleece of new-born lambs. In his hand he holds a handkerchief drenched with Arabian perfume, and he brings it from time to time to his face, to defend his nostrils against the odors of the poor.

AS THE GREAT one passes by, we see a man standing in the background, watching. He is a stranger in that crowd. His garments show him to be from the Southern Kingdom of Judah,—a herdsman and a fig-dresser from the wilderness of Tekoa. He is a man just past middle age, slight of build. There is a touch of grey in his beard and in his hair. But he is neat and clean in his quiet and modest dress,—not like the usual prophet of that day, who went about dressed in goat-skins, dirty, and with wild hair and tangled beard.

The man from Judah looked at the throng in the street. His eyes missed nothing. There was a firm set to his sensitive mouth, as if he were filled with a great resolve!

He followed through the street to the sacred Shrine and entered the courtyard. The great court was filled with people. Priests were rushing around the smoking Altar, preparing the next course of sacrifices. A wealthy man from Samaria was providing the whole course next to be offered!

There was a smell of blood in the air, for many beasts had died on the Altar that day. And there was the coarse odor of incense hanging over the place. A choir of Levites were singing Psalms.

There, in the Shrine itself, visible through the great door, half shrouded in incense clouds, was the gigantic figure of the Golden Bull, worshipped by these people as the Lord Jehovah. The man from Judah lowered his eyes and bit his lip. The words of Moses came back to him,—"Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of anything that is in the Heaven above, nor in the earth beneath, nor in the waters under the earth; thou shalt not bow down to them nor worship them; for I, the Lord thy God, am a jealous God!"

"These, also," said the Judean to himself, "are the children of Abraham, the inheritors of the promise, the children of the Covenant! Perverting the best into the worst! Come to Bethel and transgress,—yea, come and multiply transgressions! Shall God forget? Shall He not require it of thee?"

A beggar pulled at his sleeve,—a pathetic wreck of a man, half blind, crawling along on hands and knees,—the mark of a slave cut into his ear. Too old to work, and thrown out by his master to beg and to die in the streets!

"This, also, is a son of Abraham! For this man, God confounded the powers of Egypt, and brought His people through the wilderness with a mighty hand,—for this! That he might die a beggar in the streets of Bethel, the very House of God! Where is the freedom which God gave to the nation for its sons? What has the nation done with it? And shall the nation not pay for this crime? Should one Israelite ride in perfumed elegance through the streets, while another dies of starvation on its stone?" The Judean put his hand for a moment over his eyes.

The great area is quieter now. The rich man, whose servants had beaten a way for him through the streets, is offering his sacrifice,—to the Golden Calf! He descends from his ivory chair and bows before the shine. Ten bullocks and forty sheep he is sacrificing, for the sin of his soul. And the young men, who so short a time ago were beating the people with sticks, now scatter copper coins to the crowd as a sign of their master's beneficence; and the beggars fight for them on the paving-stones of the square.

SUDDENLY, A VOICE cuts like a knife across that Temple area, its anger and its authority freezing the blood of priest and people alike,—the Voice of Amos, the herdsman from Tekoa!

"Stop! Stop! In the Name of God, stop this mummery, this mockery!"

The whole vast courtyard was silent with astonishment.

Amos climbed up on the base of a pillar. Standing there, back to the great column, he looked out over the people. His face was pale. His hands were tense.

Listen! Listen! Thus saith the Lord! I hate, I despise your feast days; and I will not smell your colemn assemblies! Though ye offer Me burnt offerings, and meat offerings, I will not accept them! Neither will I regard the peace offerings of your fat beasts! Take away from Me the noise of your songs; for I will not hear the melody of your viols. But let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream!

"Was it worship like this that ye gave Me, saith the Lord, when ye followed Moses forty years in the wilderness? No! Look what you have done! You have changed the tabernacle of God into the tabernacle of Molech, who devours his own children,—and you do not even realize it! You have made the Eternal God into the image of such an one as yourselves!

"Will God forget it? No, He will not forget it!

"He will not forget that while you live in a house decorated with ivory, surrounded by silks and by servants, you cast your old slaves who cannot work any more out to die in the streets!

"Will God forget it? No! He will not forget it!

"He will not forget that you devour widows' houses,

Evangelical Fellowship's Statement

Men of liberal tendencies, as well as parties holding liberal views (a word admittedly in bad repute now), are often accused of being hazy and indefinite. This may or may not be true. The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, by issuing its "Statement of Purpose," published in last week's issue, has definitely gone on record with a clear statement of its aims and objectives. It has further declared to the Church, as a whole, the type of legislative program the Fellowship would like to see enacted by and through General Conventions.

We are glad that the Fellowship has so declared itself. We are living in world revolution. Clear thinking Christians know that the Church exists in the midst of tensions. We know that the world is not as yet ready to accept the Christian ideal. We know that a divided Church is weak. We know that Christians of various groups and differing shades of interpretation must pool their efforts. It seems to us that the Fellowship through its statement has made a valuable contribution in at least presenting a platform that can become a rallying point for all those within our own Church who wish to see the Christian forces of the world really become a power in shaping world affairs.

It is with delight, therefore, that we witness our esteemed contemporary the "Living Church" acknowledging the value of this document. On a first reading of the very fine editorial in their issue of June 25th, one would believe that the Anglo-Catholics were now ready to take the Evangelicals over "lock, stock, and barrel." A second reading dispels this illusion.

The Statement of Purpose says very clearly that the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship has no desire to create a partisan spirit in the Church but seeks to preserve for it both its Catholic and Protestant heritage. It is the latter that we need to preserve today. Men have and men will continue to commit errors of interpretation. There must always be those who will protest against these errors and stand true to the great main stream of Christian tradition. Surely there is nothing in this statement of purpose, that would lead one to think that the fellowship has any desire to restore medieval practices, simply because they happened to fall within Catholic tradition? The Statement rather leads one to believe that the Fellowship is looking forward to new ways God in His wisdom may use, in speaking to His children. To our way of thinking the whole emphasis of the statement is upon its insistence that preserving the best of the old, we must continually search for new channels of thought that will bring men closer to the Reality of God.

This is particularly true of the Legislative objects, which are an outgrowth of the principles as set forth in the Statement of Purpose. The Fellowship is definitely committed to work for organic unity with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A. and by implication to back the whole ecumenical movement.

Also the Fellowship feels that though a good job was done in the Prayer Book Revision of 1928, there are services that need revision now. Revision that will make more real to people the presence of the living God.

We ask our subscribers to read carefully the "Statement of Purpose." We will be glad to publish comments upon it. It is not perfect. No man-made document is. But we feel that it is a valuable contribution that will help clarify some of our muddled thinking about the purpose of God's Church in this world, and our place as men in that Church.

A Danger Sign

This is not intended as a political edtiorial. We are not advocating the election of any party candidate. We do believe that the thinking Christian should read the platforms of both major political parties carefully, and particularly the planks on foreign policy.

Frankly we are perturbed by the Republicn Party's foreign policy plank. It is couched in vague language. But not so vague that one can fail to see in it the seeds of isolationism. It is the old bug-a-boo of national sovereignty that seem to weave a magic spell over certain of our statesmen. We are not going to lose our sovereignty by pooling our efforts with the sovereign powers of other States! We still maintain State's rights in this country. This, in spite of many critics of the present regime. We could co-operate in the founding of a world state and continue to maintain our sovereignty.

Christianity is inter-national because Christianity believes in the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of man. As Christians, we should give the best thinking and use the weight of our influence to encourage our leaders to guide this nation into a place of real leadership among the nations of the world.

The danger sign is the almost unnoticed re-appearance of an isolationist spirit. God help us to think clearly and act courageously as we move into the new world that is forming.

and for a pretense make long prayers!

"He will not forget that you sell the righteous for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes!

"He will not forget that you pant after the very dust on the head of the poor; and that you eat up My people as a man would eat bread!

"Will God forget it? No! He will not forget it! Was it for this that He set you free in the land of Egypt, that you should enslave your brothers in the Promised Land!

"Therefore, thus said the Lord! I shall pass through Samaria, and through Bethel, as I passed through Egypt! And every vineyard shall be filled with wailing. And this place of hypocrisy shall be destroyed; and the house of Jeroboam shall come to an end."

I WILL LEAVE AMOS there, facing the gathering resentment and wrath of the people in that courtyard. For they were the best people,—not the worst! If you want to know what happened to him, read his own story in the Bible.

I will say but this: as Amos spoke to his own day, so he speaks to ours. The circumstances are not quite the same, but the message is the same, and it strikes home to our time,—God is righteous! He will not stand for hypocrisy! And He demands righteousness of those who worship Him!

No matter how splendid the ritual, no matter how unctious the prayers, they are worth nothing if they are not backed up by full righteousness of life!

We get no special credit from God for being Christians. Indeed, He demands more of us because we are Christians, because we have been privileged to hear His truth, because we have had the advantages of a noble faith!

If there is injustice in our social order,—if there are slums in our cities,—if there are children running about with no one taking care of them, being debauched,—if there is exploitation of the poor,—whose fault is it? The fault of the wicked? No! The fault of the best people, for they could stop it, if they would! The fault is ours, for we see these things, and we do nothing about them! Not that we take part in these things; but that we are content to live in a world where things like this exist!

Will God forget? Will He pass these things over as if they were not? Will He pass them over as if Christ had not died for those we now neglect?

Let the voice of Amos, the prophet, ring throughout this land, throughout this world,—"I shall pass through you, saith the Lord, as I passed through Samaria, and through Bethel; and houses shall be filled with mourning, and farms with wailing, until these open sores shall be abated, and hatred and oppression shall be at an end; until judgment shall run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream!"

Amen.

The Church's Immediate Challenge

Admiral Halsey Defines Task "To Satisfy Adequately Needs of Returned Fighting Men"

Hartford, Conn.—Admiral W. F. Halsey, Commander of the South Pacific Force of the United States Pacific Fleet, in a statement made for The Church Congress, urged the Church to "satisfy adequately the religious needs of returned fighting men who will seek virile spiritual help during the readjustment period."

Admiral Halsey, who is a member of the Episcopal Church, said that "The Church, without regard to denomination, has a spiritual objective in war and in peace. One can assume that in time of war the task of the Church is twofold: 1. That of maintaining the spiritual and moral standard on the home front; 2. The supplying of the Armed Forces with clergymen, so adequately being accomplished, as a means of sustaining spiritual values in the life of our fighting men."

Specifically, the Admiral said that the immediate challenge of the Church will be "the task to satisfy adequately the religious needs of returned fighting men who will seek virile spiritual help during the readjustment period. They are giving much; and, it is not unreasonable to believe they rightfully will expect the Church to meet the challenge.

"In time of national tranquillity the Church has the opportunity to inculcate its communicants with fundamental truths and vision to carry them as individuals and a people through periods of personal strain and national crises. Thus, encouraged and strengthened, our citizens, without weakening the moral fibre, should be able to continue and to endure the hardships and sacrifices both at home and in the combat area."

In conclusion, Admiral Halsey said, "The question of 'What the Church can do' in the postwar period is not alone qualitative but quantitative. In the problem of choosing the correct ways and means of accomplishing its mission to humanity; that of rendering the greatest good through service to the greatest number."

The Church Congress of the United States, an Episcopal Church organization of which the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Gray, D. D., suffragan bishop of Connecticut, is president, released Admiral Halsey's statement with the comment: "The point of view of the men in the armed services as to the work of the Church today is a matter frequently discussed. Admiral Halsey's statement is of interest and value to all Church people and Church groups concerned with plans for the postwar world."

IN THE SOLOMON ISLANDS
"Me Read Bible Too!"

When an Australian destroyer reached a port in the Solomons after many adventures, the crew was given shore leave, and a young sailor found himself free for the day. He decided to spend it quietly by himself in Bible study, and finding a quiet spot sat down to read his Bible.

So immersed was he that he did not notice, until he was already by his side, a huge, almost naked native, carrying a club. Before the sailor could cry out the native, pointing to the open book, asked, "That Bible?" When the sailor replied "Yes," the native remarked, "Me read Bible too—me Christian," and taking the Bible from the sailor he read aloud a chapter of Isaiah, "in very fair English." "Then," writes the Rev. W. H. Rainey, the British and Foreign Bible Society's Secretary for Australia, who sends this story, "he handed back the Bible with a smile and went on his way."—Church of England Newspaper.

Dr. McMaster Issues Statement

On Return From Visit to Cuba Conferring With Religious and Educational Leaders

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Vernon C. McMaster, S. T. D., administrative officer in the National Council's Division of Christian Education, has just returned from Cuba, where he conferred with Bishops and educational leaders of the Spanish-speaking missionary districts on problems of religious education in that area. Dr. McMaster, upon his return prepared the following statement for the information of Church people at home.

What can we do to secure teaching materials in Spanish for our Sunday Church schools? For many years this has been the question uppermost in the minds of Church workers in all missionary districts where Spanish is used. In order to try to find an answer for the three districts ranging about the Caribbean, representatives of Puerto Rico, Mexico and Cuba, met in Havana under the guidance of the Rev. Vernon C. McMaster from the National Council's Division of Christian Education. Those present from the three districts besides Bishops Blankingship and Salinas, were the Rev. Aristides Villafane of Puerto Rico, the Very Rev. J. F. Gomez from Mexico, and Ven. J. H. Townsend and Ven. R. Gonzalez-Agueros of Cuba.

As a basis for discussion, five questions were posed several weeks before the conference:

1. What are the everyday experiences of the children who come to the Sunday Church schools?

Lot Purchased Rowe Memorial

Total Receipts for the Bishop Rowe Building Fund Reached $45,618.85, June 1

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Bentley has purchased a plot of land for the Bishop Rowe Memorial Building. When the plan for this Diocesan House was originally announced, the Bishop said a careful study was being made, and the location would be decided later. He states now that the land purchased is in Fairbanks, an excellent location on Fifth Avenue. Price paid is $2,500.

The building and an endowment fund for maintenance, will cost $55,000. To the end of May total receipts were $45,618.85. Contributions continue to come in, and Bishop Bentley is confident that in the very near future the entire sum will be on hand. Many Woman's Auxiliary Branches are raising money for the building, and their remittances are ranging from $5 to $1,000. Parishes and individuals are contributing, many of them sending with their remittances letters expressing the depth of their feeling about Bishop Rowe and his pioneer work in Alaska.

MEMORIAL TO DR. OGILBY TO BE USED IN SUMMER CHAPEL

Hartford, Conn.—Friends of the Rev. Dr. Remsen B. Ogilby, President of Trinity College, Hartford, from 1920 until his death in 1943, are creating a memorial to him through the creation of a fund which will be used to improve the summer chapel at Weekapaug, Rhode Island.

A summer resident there for many years, Dr. Ogilby directed the Chapel, and, as Commodore of the Weekapaug Yacht Club, influenced the young people of the resort, who competed in semi-weekly races under his supervision. The Remsen B. Ogilby Memorial Fund at Weekapaug was created because many of his friends felt it would be a fitting way in which the summer colonists could demonstrate their affectionate regard for Dr. Ogilby in an enduring way.

An informal appeal to a list of some former summer visitors scattered throughout the country has brought many gifts according to Mr. James B. Slimmon, chairman of the committee in charge.

A CHAPLAIN'S BUSY-NESS ABOARD SHIP

Boston, Mass.—Indicating the busyness of a Chaplain on a warship, are statistics showing how Chaplain Francis B. Sayre, Jr., spent his time for one year. Chaplain Sayre is the son of the Hon. Francis B. Sayre, former high commissioner of the Philippine Islands and now diplomatic adviser to the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

Part of the year Chaplain Sayre was at a Base Hospital; then a term at a Naval Station, and finally board ship where he is at present. He held 82 services, with 16,249 men attending and 972 Communions. On other ships he held three services attended by 567 men. He performed three adult baptisms, officiated at one marriage and four funerals. At these services, 1,857 men attended.

The Chaplain led nine Sunday school and Bible classes attended by 210 men.

He lists some of his other activities "initiated and conducted" as including the ship's paper, radio broadcasts on shipboard; smokers, boxing bouts, Christmas party aboard ship; sightseeing parties, recreational excursions, picnics; athletic teams and competition in port; daily visits to sick bay and brig; correspondence with and for personnel of the ship; insurance officer; welfare officer; bond sales officer.

TWENTY-FIVE LAYMEN CONDUCT CONTINUOUS INVASION PRAYERS

San Antonio, Texas—Historic St. Mark's Church, which has been doing such outstanding work since the war started, with soldiers and airmen from the nine fields stationed nearby, is keeping in touch with these boys now fighting overseas through continuous prayers being led by twenty-five laymen of the congregation. Beginning on the day of the Invasion the laymen have conducted prayers for the men fighting overseas, for success of the Invasion and a just and durable peace. This is continuing each day from eight o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the evening, the laymen taking thirty minutes each. On Invasion Day special services were conducted all day in St. Mark's Church, culminating in an uplifting service that evening, for the people of San Antonio, when petitions were offered by the rector of St. Mark's, the Rev. Thomas H. Wright, D. D.

CATHEDRAL SERVICES

Special Summer Preachers

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Dr. Arthur Lee Kinsolving, Rector of Trinity Church, Princeton, N. J., will be the special preacher both at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M.

Dr. Kinsolving will be the first of the Cathedral Special Summer Preachers, and will preach on July 2, July 9, and July 16 at both 11 A. M. and 4 P. M. Before becoming Rector of Trinity Church, Princeton, he was Rector of Trinity Church, Boston; and previous to that was Rector of Grace Church, Amherst, and Director of Religious Activities at Amherst College.

Other special summer preachers will be:

The Right Rev. S. Harrington Littell, Bishop of Honolulu (retired) on July 23, at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M.

The Right Rev. Y. Y. Tsu, Assistant Bishop of Hong Kong, perhaps better known as "the Bishop of the Burma Road," on July 30, at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M.

The Rev. Otis R. Rice, Acting Chaplain of Columbia University, on August 6, at 11 A. M. and at 4 P. M.

Organ recital at 3:30 P. M.

Services of Holy Communion at 8, 9, and 11 A. M.; morning prayer at 10 A. M.; evening prayer at 4 P. M.

Chaplain Lumpkin Received Award

With Second Marine Division During Attack on Tarawa Atoll

Washington, D. C.—The Navy Department has announced that the Legion of Merit has been awarded to Lieutenant William W. Lumpkin, Chaplain Corps, United States Naval Reserve for exceptional meritorious service while Division Chaplain of the Second Marine Division. Chaplain Lumpkin was formerly rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, Charleston, S. C.

The citation follows:

"For exceptional meritorious service in the line of his profession as Division Chaplain of the Second Marine Division from October 3, 1942, to March 7, 1944. During this period, he displayed the highest qualities of conscientiousness, loyalty, unselfishness and devotion to duty in all matters pertaining to the clerical profession. He coordinated and directed the religious affairs of the Division, involving several denominations, with outstanding skill, tact, and impartiality. His spirit of cooperation and tireless energy led him to perform duties outside the field of religion far beyond what one could expect of a chaplain. His assistance and suggestions in matters of athletics and other recreation for the men were particularly noteworthy. During the attack on Tarawa Atoll, Gilbert Islands, he recovered and identified the bodies of and provided burials at sea for numerous men of the Division who had become casualties in the initial phase of the operation, and in scores of wounded and dying instilled a sense of peace and confidence by his own example and professional ability. After going ashore, he worked tirelessly and courageously directing the burial of the dead. During his entire period of service with the Second Marine Division, his tactful aggressiveness contributed materially to the morale and spiritual well-being of the members of the Division, and was in keeping with the highest traditions of the naval service."

Twenty-fifth Annual Council

Roanoke, Va.—The Twenty-fifth Annual Council of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held at Christ Church, Roanoke, the Rev. John F. W. Feild, Rector, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 16-17.

The Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., bishop of the diocese, said among other things in his Council Address:

"In these critical days as Churchmen, both clerical and lay, we must be sure we are rendering the kind of service we are capable of. It is very gratifying to know of the various plans and arrangements that have been made by congregations and by organizations of the men of the Church to contact and keep in constant touch with our men and women who are in the service of their country. There are those who need comfort, strength and consolation. The Church has much to give in the way of spiritual security and comfort. Surely we must not fail those in need at this time. Inasmuch as we have a firm conviction and belief in prayer we must use its force and power in bringing about a righteous and a just conclusion to the terrific conflict in which we find ourselves."

RACIAL MINORITIES

"We shall certainly fail in a much needed service if we do not make some contribution towards dealing with racial minorities. Anyone who does not make an effort to discourage expressions of anti-semitism is losing an opportunity of manifesting the love of the Master and of rendering a service as a patriotic citizen of his country. The personal influence of men and women who would be free should always be exerted towards giving that same right to others. When we deny justice and freedom to others we will ultimately lose freedom for ourselves."

---

"We do not have in our diocese a large colored population but we have many colored people living in our midst. I would like to know that every congregation and every branch of the Woman's Auxiliary was making an effort to see that there is formed in every community an Interracial Committee, and that members of our congregations are well represented on the committee. Surely a very practical thing would be to encourage every Chamber of Commerce to form a committee made up of the two races in which certain matters pertaining to the races could be discussed and arrangements made so that many of the civic, educational and health conditions of the colored man could receive proper and adequate attention. "Fair-minded, intelligent Christian men and women can meet and will meet successfully the problems of two races living side by side, but these problems cannot be solved when there is no intercommunication and when prejudice and ignorance are left to determine the course of action. Surely here again is the opportunity of the Church and individual members of the Church to serve constructively in bringing about that for which we pray—'Thy Kingdom Come!' "

"May we as members of this Council strive to see that our individual churches and individuals in our churches realize the greatness of the opportunity that lies before us as Churchmen and citizens of America."

TWO RECTORS OF DIOCESE HONORED

Bishop Phillips expressed gratification at honors that have recently come to two of the clergy of the diocese: the Rev. Robert A. Magill, D. D., rector of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, having been elected a member of the National Council, and Washington and Lee University at Lexington having conferred the degree of Doctor of Divinity upon the Rev. James Edwin Bethea, rector of Robert E. Lee Memorial Church, at Lexington. The Bishop did not forget that the National Council and Washington and Lee University honored themselves as well.

The Council revised the canon on the composition of the Executive Board of the Diocese so that hereafter the president of the Laymen's League of the diocese will be ex-officio a member of the Executive Board as is the president of the Woman's Auxiliary.

To the interested surprise of everybody, the Committee brought in and recommended an invitation from Grace Church at Radford, and this was accepted with appreciation by the Council.

Resolutions Adopted

The Rev. W. Carroll Brooke (of Trinity Church, Staunton), presented the report of a committee which has made careful study of the organization and functioning of the Provincial Synod. The Council heard the report with much interest and adopted this:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this Council that the delegates representing the diocese in the next Synod work for a more effective organization of the Province of Washington and that they study the report of the Special Committee on the Province of Washington before attending this meeting."

On motion of Mr. John M. Goldsmith of Radford and in line with the general thought in a part of the Bishop's address, the Council adopted a resolution requesting the Bishop to appoint a diocesan committee on Inter-Racial Relations.

The Rev. Mr. Brooke presented the following and it was adopted:

"Whereas, the Bishop of the diocese in his address to the Council spoke of the work done in many communities for the social and recreational life of youth to prevent juvenile delinquency, be it Resolved, That this Council go on record urging every parish and mission of the diocese to give all possible support to such community efforts that have been already started and to work toward the creation of community organizations for the welfare of youth where none have been initiated."

Also of especial interest and importance was a report presented by the Rev. Dr. Robert A. Magill on the recent organization of the "Virginia Council of Churches." The Council adopted a resolution approving and ratifying the Constitution and By-Laws of the Virginia Council of Churches and providing that this diocese become a constituent member of that body.

EXCELLENT RELIGIOUS MATERIAL, WRITES NAVY CHAPLAIN

Boston, Mass.—"For my own part I am extremely grateful for the excellent religious material so generously furnished, the discretionary fund, stoles, and so on," writes a Navy Chaplain to the Army and Navy Commission.

"I have not found any wholesale 'return to religion.' There is every evidence of a deep appreciation of God's nearness, however, which is expressed in what the men write in their letters and say in conversations. From my experience in a ship that has seen action, I feel that many have overdone the business of 'no atheists in foxholes.' Men are more likely to become fatalists rather than atheists after having been under fire.

"You will be interested in my use of the discretionary fund. When a man required a small loan for some reasonable purpose I told him he could repay it at his convenience or not at all. The main thing was to realize that later on others might need the money. Everyone who borrowed money soon returned it. Then the father of a youngster who was killed in action sent me a

"The War Crosses are very popular with officers and men. Every Episcopalian I have met wears one with his dog tag. The Prayer Books have been very useful. I have used the Order of Service for Morning Prayer for my general service as it is well suited for shipboard use.

"Recently our Commanding Officer awarded 99 medals or letters of commendation to officers and men of this ship. Before the ceremony he called me over to the flagship and asked me to open the affair with a prayer for our dead shipmates. 'Take one from the Book. I've always found what I wanted there,' he said."

REV. GEORGE WIELAND RECEIVED DEGREE

Gambier, Ohio—Kenyon College at its Commencement ceremonies June 24, conferred the degree of Doctor in Divinity upon the Rev. Dr. George A. Wieland, Director of the Home Department of the National Council.

The citation was as follows:

"George Alvin Wieland, priest, scholar, officer of the Church. George Alvin Wieland, after service in parishes in Ohio, Arizona, and the Diocese of Olympia, extensive experience on the Standing Committee of the Diocese and Delegate to the General Convention, you have ably directed the work of Domestic Missions of the National Council; you have earned all of the degrees in course available in Kenyon; the College takes special pleasure now in honoring your extra-curricular accomplishments. You will be presented for the degree of Doctor in Divinity."

INTERNATIONAL OBSERVANCE

Empire Day, Queen Victoria's Birthday

Detroit, Mich.—American and Canadian troops, American, Canadian and British flags, and American, Canadian and British songs were mingled at the eighteenth annual Empire Day service in St. Paul's Cathedral on the evening of Sunday, May 21. This is believed to be the only international celebration in this country of the empire-wide observance of Queen Victoria's birthday, and each year it is attended by increasing numbers of people, and participated in by more organizations.

A message was read by the Very Rev. Kirk B. O'Ferrall, D. D., Dean of St. Paul's from the Most Rev. and Rt. Hon. Cyril F. Garbett, D. D., Archbishop of York. The message that he gave to the congregation which crowded the Cathedral is largely contained in the following quotation:

"For the welfare of the human race in the future it is essential that, when the war is over and the firing has ceased, our two nations, together with Russia, China, and all peoples of good will, should stand together to solve the great problems which will arise when we come to build the peace."

of many differences in living conditions and some differences in Church emphases, there are many points at which the three districts can work together in the preparation of worship and study materials. Careful plans were therefore made for a beginning in the cooperative development of these, some of them simple enough to be usable with children who have had only two grades in public school. One of these development projects for the coming year is the translation and testing of all the kindergarten Christian Education units prepared by the National Council. This step was taken after Dean Gomez reported that he had already translated and successfully used the unit, "Getting Acquainted With the Church." Placing this translation in the hands of an eighteen-year-old Indian girl of very limited education, he carefully explained its use and the girl went ahead successfully with the group work. Mexico will translate and experiment with two more of the units, Puerto Rico with two, and Cuba with three. Then the tested materials will be passed around to committees in the three districts for final polishing before printing.

It was soon discovered that the only available material at present in Spanish is the series prepared by the Central Committee of Religious Education in Latin America. It was, therefore, agreed by all to call attention to this material as adaptable for use in our Church until such time as it is possible to print our own.

The group asked Archdeacon Townsend to prepare an experimental weekly folder of four pages with a picture, Bible passages, interpretations of the biblical passage illustrated by the picture, and other pertinent material. The District of Cuba agreed to finance this experiment for a time with the understanding that the other two districts would receive and pay for copies in proportion to the numbers in the Sunday Church schools. This leaflet is designed for use particular'y in those missions where it is impossible to secure teachers and the clergyman has to do all the teaching.

Plans were made for the circulation and study of certain courses already translated and in typewritten form. All three districts had such courses to submit. They are suitable for juniors and older. After they have been approved by committees in each of the districts, an effort will be made to get them into print.

Plans were also laid for the development of a district library and a list of suitable books and pamphlets was compiled.

Each district also agreed to develop an educational periodical in mimeographed form to be sent out to the clergy and other educational workers.

National Council for giving us this opportunity of meeting with Dr. McMaster to deal with the problem of Religious Education in Latin America.

2. It is our desire not to be considered as independent units but as a part of a coordinated plan for Latin America since we have common problems, common aims, and opportunities common to all.

3. We should like to recommend that the National Council's Division of Christian Education extend its work to include the educational problems in the missionary districts of Spanish-speaking people.

4. We are beginning to implement our work with proper tools and materials, but we are still far short of any desirable standard and earnestly request that the National Council help us to intensify our efforts.

5. We feel the need of educational workers, perhaps provided through the United Thank Offering, to be used as full time workers in religious education, to be sent from the field and trained in the United States.

6. In conclusion, we feel that the recent words of the Archbishop of York to the National Council very well explain our aims and contributions to the religious life of Latin America, when he said, "We are members of the Anglican Communion, a Communion which is most truly Catholic and yet reformed, a Communion in which we share the common sacraments, the Catholic creed, the threefold ministry and we are united by the expressions of our faith found in the worship of the Prayer Book. We face a world full of chaos and anxiety, but holding close to one another in fellowship with our Lord and in fellowship in the one Church, we ought to be able in due course to bring the nations closer to one another in the family under the one Father over all."

DEATHS

THEODORE DUBOSE BRATTON

Bishop Theodore DuBose Bratton, D. D., LL.D., retired bishop of Mississippi, died at Jackson, June 26. Bishop Duncan M. Gray, present bishop of the diocese, notified the Presiding Bishop of Bishop Bratton's death. The funeral was at Jackson on June 29.

Bishop Bratton was consecrated in 1903 and had jurisdiction until his retiremen in 1938. During his episcopate, he was much interested in educational work, and founded All Saints' Episcopal College at Vicksburg, Miss., in 1909, and in 1923 he inaugurated a successful campaign for the raising of an educational endowment for Church educational institutions of the diocese.

Of French Huguenot descent, Bishop Bratton was born and reared on a typical Southern plantation near Winnsboro, South Carolina. His early education was at his home, going from there to the University of the South, where he took preparatory work in the Grammar School, and the academic course for the B. A. degree. He taught in the Grammar School at Sewanee, until entrance upon studies for the ministry, also at the University of the South, from which he received his B. D. degree.

Born in 1862, Bishop Bratton was ordained in 1887, and after serving as rector of several parishes, he was called to the rectorship of St. Mary's School for Girls, Raleigh, N. C., where he remained until his election as Bishop of Mississippi. Just prior to his association with St. Mary's School, and while in charge of a parish, he became also Professor of History in Converse College, Spartanburg, S. C., retaining that chair for about nine years.

During the first World War, being too old for active service, Bishop Bratton enlisted for service as Y. M. C. A. lecturer, doing duty in American camps and with the A. E. F. overseas, serving in 1918 as Acting Chaplain at Fort Brest, France.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Why let today pass its load of postponements and incompletions over into tomorrow? Why not do the thing that should be done when it ought to be done? Why burden tomorrow with the non-performances of today?

The fellow with alcohol in his system is not a good witness as to the effects upon himself.—Bulletin of Chicago Board of Health.

The willingness to forgive others is one of the basic conditions of being forgiven. It takes grace to do it—to practice the hard saying.—Hardcastle.

Defeat may serve as well as victory to shake the soul and let the glory out. —Exchange.

A London newspaper awarded its prize to the following, as the best definition of "Money": "Money is an article which may be used as a universal passport to everywhere except heaven, and as a universal provider of everything except happiness."

Sometimes we find ourselves faced with circumstances that are unpleasant, difficult, and painful. A problem is never solved by running away from it, or giving in to temptation because of it. Fear unarms us. The Christian way is to deal with the facts courageously and to live with them.—Selected.

David Livingstone tells of his being threatened by savages. He goes on; "But I read that Jesus came and said 'All power is given unto me in heaven and on earth. Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations. . . and, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' It is the word of a Gentleman of the most sacred and strictest honour, and there's an end on't."

Now is the time to begin planning for a better world. The need is before us and the minds of men are in flux. This new world order, if it is to withstand new outbursts of passion and greed, must depend upon moral and spiritual power and solidarity rather than upon armaments and police power We won the last war by the power of armaments and lost it by the weakness of our moral and spiritual power.—Religious Herald.

People criticize me for harping on the obvious. Perhaps some day I'll write an article on the importance of the obvious. If all the folks in the United States would do the few simple things they know they ought to do, most of our problems would take care of themselves.

—Calvin Coolidge.

Prayer

By BISHOP WILLIAM MEADE

O most Powerful and glorious Lord God of Hosts, who sitteth on Thy throne judging right, look down upon us, thine unhappy creatures, now engaged in fearful war. O God, it is in thine own hands to judge between us and our enemies. We believe that our cause is righteous in Thy sight, and therefore do we humbly pray Thee to defend us against our enemies.

We boast not of our strength or numbers, for Thou givest not always the battle to the strong, but savest by few or by many according to thine own will. Let not our past sins now cry against us for vengeance, but hear Thy servants, humbly imploring help, and make it appear that Thou art our Saviour and mighty Deliverer. We would especially and most earnestly pray Thee for those who have taken their lives in their hands and gone forth for our defense. Protect them from every evil. Be Thou their shield and buckler in the day of battle, and bring them back to us in health and safety. We bless Thee for the comfortable assurance that so many of them are prepared for sudden death, should such be their lot. We supplicate Thy saving grace on behalf of those who have not yet made their peace with God through the only Saviour of men. Oh, preserve them that so there may be place for repentance; but if Thou hast otherwise ordained, let the mighty power of Thy grace be put forth in their behalf. Stir up in them such heartfelt sorrow for sin, and such lively faith in Thy Son Jesus Christ, as may, in a short time, do the work of many days; that among the praises which Thy saints and holy angels sing to Thy honor through eternal ages, it may be to Thy unspeakable mercy that Thou hast saved them from eternal death, and make them partakers of everylasting life.

We pray Thee, also, O God of Love, for our enemies, not for vengeance but for mercy. Turn away their anger from us, and lead them back in safety to their own homes. Make us ever hereafter to dwell together as brethren of one great family, and may our whole land be a praise among the nations of the earth.

Hear us, God of Mercy, in these our prayers—for ourselves, our defenders and foes, and for the whole human family—and grant that wars may cease to the end of the world, for the sake of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace, to Whom be praise for ever and ever. Amen.

A MEETING WITH THE PRINCESS ROYAL

Dear Father:

I'm starting my "weekly" early, as I've had a most interesting "educational experience," which will interest all at home, I believe.

As I wrote, some of us were invited by the township of —— to meet her Royal Highness, the Princess Royal—a meeting for the Allied women in the Army, Navy and Air, for the purpose—"better Anglo-American relationships."

I and nine of my nurses got "slicked up" to within an inch of our lives, and were ready when the liaison officer, a British major, arrived with a bus to take us to the big affair.

We arrived at the Town Hall soon after 11 o'clock—the whole city in holiday humor—and were met by Englishmen, who escorted us to the Council Chamber—a beautiful room, white and blue marble, with chairs around the sides.

In a short time we were divided into groups and went down the receiving line, and were presented to Her Royal Highness, who, by the way, is Princess Mary, the King's sister, who will hold the title of Princess Royal as long as she lives.

Mary is short, rather stocky. She was in ATS uniform with rank of Brigadier General. We were in a little quandary as how to greet her. We finally saluted her and shook hands, and she almost shook our hands off. After the presentations we all went into lunch and I had a grand seat where I could see everything.

The place was beautifully decorated with flowers and hand-painted flags from each state.

The Master of Ceremonies was all dressed up and did the announcing of toasts; pushed in and out Her Royal Highness' chair, and stood behind her while she ate.

The Dean of the Cathedral had on short pants and gaiters and his toothpick legs were a sight to behold!

His Worshipful, the Lord Mayor, had on his gold chain and key, and there was one man in a powdered wig and etc.

Our menu consisted of: Cream of celery soup; fresh salmon; tomato and lettuce salad; pineapple cream, spiked with rum; cheese, crackers, synthetic orange juice and cider to drink—ending up with coffee. I forgot the ever present mashed potatoes and rolls with the soup; no butter.

After we had finished eating, the toasts began, mostly compliments from the English and Americans.

Finally we went back to the Council Chamber and were divided up into groups of six each to have our pictures taken with H. R. H., the Marquis of Exeter and His Worshipful, the Mayor, whose real name is just Mr. Kelly! Look out for the pictures, for they are supposed to appear in our home-town papers.

Next we were taken on a tour of the Cathedral, a really beautiful church. The Bishop in his red robes and other clergy helped point out special things of historical interest. Immediately after we went to the gardens, and as it was a nice drizzly English day, tents, decorated with flags, were sent up with tables for tea. It really was the best British food I've had, the cakes tasted a little sweet. That ended the big affair!

I met two very nice women who asked me to come to see them; they live near, one a major who is C. O. of an A. T. S. camp. She was quite charming. A son is in Africa, and she says the Americans are so good to him there.

Our bus was awaiting us, and we all got back feeling we had been privileged to see something we would never have had an opportunity to see if we hadn't been in the U. S. Army.

I have to hand it to the British—they go out of their way to be nice and friendly with us, and I have a feeling that whatever happens in later years, the Americans who have been over here would never fight the British.

Heart full of love.

Yours, ——

SURPRISING STATEMENT

Mr. Editor:

In connection with the article I have sent you regarding the true basis of membership in the Anglican Communion—Holy Baptism—(which is the way some of the other Christian churches also determine membership)—I note the surprising, in fact unprovable statement in your first editorial of the current, June 24th issue of "The Southern Churchman": "We cannot forget that less than fifty per cent of the population of this country has any definite religious affiliation." Are we Episcopalians permitted by the Federal Council of Churches and by the official Government Religious Census to report only communicants? Are the huge Baptist denominations, whose only "full members" are adults who have been immersed, not allowed to count their children as "affiliated"? Who excludes all these, and other baptised persons not communicants, from the total number of American Christian believers? Lutherans are all reported Roman Catholics are more than accounted for. Let us strive for accuracy in statement which is hard at best, in regard to ecclesiastical statistics, but which is not obtained by careless understatement, any more than it is by deliberate exaggeration.

Mr. Editor:

Clergy, who have members of their parishes stationed at the Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Virginia (this includes the Naval Training Station), or at the Naval Air Station, Norfolk, Virginia, may wish to pass on to them the information that there is a daily celebration of the Holy Communion in the N. O. B. David Adams Memorial Chapel. On Wednesday and Sunday it is held at 7 A. M. The other days of the week it is held at 6:20 A. M.

GEORGE D. HARDMAN.
Chaplain, USNR.

The parched ground cries out for refreshing rains; the drooping plant cries out for the quickening warmth of the sun; no less urgently does the world need the witness of consecrated men and women to bring to it freshness and peace and hope.—Selected.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

Last week we promised to work along the lines of planning a day as our next theme. But first a prayer.

ALMIGHTY FATHER, who knowest the needs of all Thy children: Deepen our desires with heavenly wisdom, that we may faithfully accept and use the powers which Thou art ready to bestow; through Jesus Christ our Lord."

As we look at the day from the calm heights of the morning we see it as a whole, and are able to study the pattern of it with some degree of leisure. We can anticipate much of the difficulty that lurks along the way and can prepare to meet it. We can see the rough spots of temptation and remove all element of surprise from them and plan our strategy or refusal for any one of them. Planning the day in God's presence makes it all of one piece and not a long disconnected series of isolated moments. The average person's life falls daily into several well defined areas, although they all inevitably overlap: 1. Our dealings with self. 2. Our dealings with the family. 3. Our dealings with our work group. 4. Our dealings with various and sundry off-hour times and places.

By now we should know about ourselves, our weaknesses and our tendencies in certain directions—impure thoughts, unnecessary words, gambling, over-indulgence, self-pity, procrastination, etc. In our quiet times we can offer any and all of these possible human failings to God for Him to make strong against or to remove. The very acknowledgment of them and desire to be rid of them should carry us a long way toward complete eradiction of them in time.

We should also know the lacks and points of rub in our family life, where we fail most frequently—irritation, quick temper, impatience, criticism, loud speaking selfishness, suspicion, jealousy, etc. When we bring up these possible holes of misery in God's presence and ask His guidance about avoiding them, we are in the position to receive positive and concrete helps in overcoming any and all of them.

OUR WORK LIFE is frequently full of poison and we know it. We can put our finger this minute on the many spots of tension and rebellion and resentment which come again and again each day—a tangle over prerogatives, not enough money, too much work, not understood, another getting more credit, critical of how things are run, individualism, etc. We see evidences of these danger spots in our unhappiness, our loss of sleep and weight, in strikes, etc. What to do? Look honestly at a specific situation which has never been dealt with and which may crop up today. Ask God to open your eyes to your own failure in the relationship and what you can do to remedy and prevent. If we really mean business, God will give us a lead or two we can put into operation today.

Above all things, we should know by now our off-moment weaknesses. We are beset with so many and great temptations but we are often dumb or foolish about the methods used to combat them. When we know that fellowship with a certain parson or group leads to evil results we should know we cannot associate with them without asking for trouble. Or when we have failed again and again under the influence of a certain place we cannot continue our visits there without possible dire results. Dishonesties that attempt to cover up our off moments often mess up our other areas—hate of self, hurt of family, harm of work.

Whatever of Bible or book of devotion is read, when read with the day and its problems in mind, it will usually produce clues to conduct.

Jot down the guide lines for the day God lays before us and follow them from now until the coming dawn.

By J. BLAIR-FISH

At a time when the Episcopal Church has recently authorized a new Hymnal, and one of special merit, it is fitting that we should print a series of articles on hymns and music in worship. The introductory article refers to a few of the hymns in the new collection which are specially suited to be used in times such as the present.

The advent of a new hymnbook in any church is, or should be, an event of considerable importance; for in most churches two or three revisions of the hymnary represents the lifetime of a generation of worshippers. But a new hymnal is not always, or even often, hailed with expressions of delight and the usual comment is, "I like the old hymns best" which generally indicates that the critic is using the word "old" when "familiar" would be more accurate. Paradoxically, the new hymnal includes more of the genuinely old, or ancient, hymns and tunes than are to be found in the previous book. What is frequently designated as "old" is often found to be no more ancient than the 19th Century—which is very youthful for a hymn—and the tunes which are the greatest favorites are often those of the later Victorian composers, or revivalists, both of whom, with some exceptions, seemed to specialize in lush sentimentality. In happy contrast to the hymn tunes of that period, those of the last two or three decades have recovered much of the ancient glory of earlier centuries. In England in particular, largely due to the fine work of the English Church Music Society, there has been a great revival of church music. The present hymnbook has drawn freely on the best of all recent collections and includes both those ancient hymns which have survived on their intrinsic merits—which is the only real test—and those modern hymns whose words and music best represent the aspirations of the present generation.

Some seven years of labor have gone to the selection of the hymns now presented and the preface to the book—which should be read by all interested—gives ample evidence of the painstaking work of the Joint Commission entrusted with the revision of the hymnary. It sets out the general principles which guided the Commission in determining the fitness of the hymns finally selected. Although there may be a certain amount of regret that some favorite hymns have been discarded, church people may well be grateful for what is on literary and musical grounds a very choice collection, the proper use of which should be a very considerable aid to worship. It may be of interest to point out that some 377 of the 561 hymns in the last hymnbook have been carried forward into the new book.

Of the hymns in the new collection which may properly be described as ancient, there are forty from the Latin and six from the Greek, including thirty-three of authorship ascribed to the saints. Many of these are already familiar; others are worth getting to know. Of all the very ancient hymns, that known as St. Patrick's Breastplate, dating from the 4-5th Century, is peculiarly appropriate for use at the present time. Although it is one of those taken over from the previous book, it seems to be sparingly used and many congregations do not know it at all. But it is as full of strength and virility as it is of sound theology. One might use Carlyle's words and describe it as "An everlasting encouragement, battle word and pledge of victory to all the brave," or one might simply say that in this invocatory hymn we have the whole essence of what St. Paul put into verses ten to thirteen of Ephesians VI. The story of its origin is of more than ordinary interest. Tradition tells that it was sung or recited by the Irish Saint on an Easter Day about the year 400 A. D. as he was journeying, at great peril to his life, to confront and convert the pagan king of Tara. It is an invocation of the Trinity and all the powers of goodness; a recalling of the great essential facts of the Christian belief and a charm against all the unseen powers of evil which beset the Christian on his journey through life to eternity. The "Charm"—"Christ be with me, Christ within me, Christ before me . . . beside me, beneath me, above me," breathed as a prayer—as one version of the tune suggests—or shouted in terrible urgency, as an alternative version implies, is one that may be sung with special intent on behalf of those who are jeopardizing their lives for us at this present time; it requires but little imagination to think of the words on the lips of an Air Force Pilot in the midst of combat with a Jap Zezo or Nazi fighter when every split second means life or death and ejaculation becomes prayer. Reading the rugged verses is inspiring; singing them even more so. It might be mentioned in passing Villiers Stanford has made a fine anthem of the words and the traditional tune, so it is a simple matter to introduce the music to the congregation.

At the opposite end of the chronological scale mention might be made of G. K. Chesterton's poem-hymn, "O God of earth and altar" (No. 521) of fine and robust type set to a traditional English melody, arranged by Vaughan Williams who has given us some of our finest modern hymn tunes—the new one to "For all the Saints" is another of his. The hymn might best be described as a litany for deliverance from the materialistic forces in modern life which enslave mankind and weaken the nations. The second verse is worth quoting in full, though all are pregnant with meaning for these times.

From all that terror teaches, from lies of tongue and pen,
From all the easy speeches that comfort cruel men,
From sale and profanation of honor and the sword,
From sleep and from damnation
Deliver us, good Lord.

Which is another way of saying "In all time of our prosperity, good Lord deliver us."

One is glad to find among the new hymns five by F. L. Hosmer. Perhaps his finest hymn and one which is specially appropriate for present use is "Thy kingdom come! on bended knee the passing ages pray," but it seems a pity that it is not set to the tune "Irish" which gives more vigor and, to the writer's mind, better suits the aspiration of the words. "Irish" is how-

HOSEA

GOD'S HEALING LOVE

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

I AM GOING TO SPEAK to you today about the message of the Book of Hosea, one of the grand books of the Bible, yet, like so much of the Old Testament, sadly neglected today.

This book has been badly treated by the years, and, by the translators. Some passages in it have been so mutilated that their meaning is blurred, or lost entirely. But when you dig down under the antique phrasing you find that the Book of Hosea is the simple story of a man, of his great trial, and how he finally won happiness, not only for himself but for the one who had wronged him, through the healing power of love.

Reading this old story, it seems terribly and thoroughly modern. It might have happened yesterday. It seems almost impossible to realize that it took place thirty-five hundred years ago. It shows how basic and how changeless our human problems are, after all, and how universal are God's rules of honesty, and of justice, and of forgiving love.

In the days of King Jeroboam II, the most successful monarch the Northern Kingdom of Israel ever had, two great prophets foresaw the doom of Israel because of its sins. The average man in that day could not see that doom coming. The average man could see only the power and the glory of that rich and prosperous Kingdom. But others with deeper insight, like these two prophets, saw that Israel, through injustice to the poor, and through turning away from God, and the abasement of His worship, had broken God's holy Covenant; and they felt in their hearts that since God is righteous His retribution must fall upon the guilty nation. And fall it did!

One of these prophets was Amos, a native of the Southern Kingdom of Judah, who came into the north-country preaching God's unyielding righteousness. We discussed him last week, and I tried to sketch a picture of him for you, and of the times in which he lived. The other was Hosea. Although just as strong in his condemnation of the sins of that unruly nation, and in his appreciation of God's righteousness as Amos was, Hosea also preached the Gospel of God's forgiving love.

THIS UNDERSTANDING of God's love for Israel, in spite of Israel's sins, came to Hosea through a bitter personal experience. He married a wife whose name was Gomer, and he loved her very much. She bore him three children, two boys and a girl. He was very happy, and showered her with gifts, and with good things; but she was selfish and vain, and cared very little for him. Finally she left him, and ran away with another man who flattered her and filled her ears with false promises.

Hosea had known for some time that her love for him had cooled. He could sense her growing indifference to him, but his love for her was so strong that he kept making excuses for her faults, and forgiving her, and trying with every good gift and every kindness to make her love him more. But she thought more of the man who flattered her, and whispered sly promises to her, than of her husband whose love surrounded her and made her life secure. So she left him.

There was no longer any cloak for her unfaithfulness, and Hosea, realizing that she was unworthy of his love, tried to put her out of his mind and heart. He divorced her, and said to his children, "She is not my wife any longer. She has repaid my love with faithlessness, and my care and kindness with untruth. I will withdraw my protection from her. I will forget her as though she had never been." And this he tried to do.

As for Gomer, she soon found that things were not as she had imagined they would be. All the promises that she had believed, and that had led her away from her husband, turned out to be lies. The man who had taken her away really cared nothing for her and soon began to treat her unmercifully. He squandered all the money that she had taken away from her husband's house, and he took all her jewels and sold them, and used the money for himself. He laughed at her for a fool, and beat her, and finally sold her into slavery as though she were his property, and no one cared enough about her to help her.

She had never imagined that anything like that could happen to her, yet it happened!

The slave-trader to whom she had been sold carried her away to a foreign city to sell her in the market as a servant. And in all her anguish and distress no one came to help her, and no one cared at all what happened to her. She had brought all this distress and ruin upon herself, and now realized it, but too late!

That is, no one cared but Hosea. He hal tried to forget her, but he could not. In spite of the shameful way she had treated him, he loved her still. He had learned in some way of her plight. He journeyed to the foreign city where she was, and sought out the slave dealer, and bought her back, and made her his wife again.

As for Gomer, she had learned her lesson,—the hard lesson that selfishness which hurts other people without thinking or caring, and unfaithfulness which is the same thing as living a lie, always brings a reward of anguish and shame and sorrow. It was only because Hosea loved her in spite of her unfaithfulness that she was saved and restored. If his love had not been there all along in spite of everything that she had done, there would have been no way for her out of the terrible fate which she had brought upon herself.

In thinking about this after it had happened, Hosea, the prophet, saw that it was, in reality, a perfect parable of God's love for unfaithful Israel. God had chosen the Children of Israel for Himself. He had brought them out of the land of Egypt, and had planted them in the Promised Land. He had set His love upon them, and had caused them to prosper. His good gifts were all around them, fruitful fields and pleasant trees and vines bringing forth an abundance of food, many cattle upon the hillsides, and peace and prosperity at home. The reign of Jeroboam the Second was a good reign in Israel. Not since the Hebrew Kingdom had been divided, so tragically, by the foolish stubbornness of Solomon's son, Rehoboam, had the borders of the land been so wide, its enemies more powerless, or its richness and prosperity so great.

THIS GOODNESS, showered by the good God upon His people, was little appreciated. They took it as a matter of course. Instead of being thankful to Him, and faithful to Him, they had forsaken His worship, or else had corrupted it, and had gone off after the gods of the heathen round about them. Many of them openly worshipped idols, and bowed down before the host of heaven. The nation continued to serve the Golden Calf, which the first King Jeroboam had set up at Bethel, and at Dan, calling it by God's own name, Jehovah. And they had forgotten mercy and justice, and in their lust for wealth had made a mock of God's commandment against covetousness. They oppressed and exploited the poor, keeping them back from their right. They made of religion a costly show, with lights and processions, choirs and trumpets, and endless sacrifices offered upon their smoking altars; and they cast out their old slaves to starve and to die in the streets, when they were too old to work any more. Not all of them did it, but it was possible under the system, and those who did not do it, did not restrain those who did. And this was not new. It had been going on for a long time. Yet, because of His love God had not put them away from Him. He had made excuses for them. He had shut His eyes to their wickedness. He had turned aside His wrath.

But the inevitable reward of unfaithfulness must come, though it be long delayed. It could not be warded off forever. With every new favor from God, Israel's unfaithfulness became bolder. There would come a time, surely, when unfaithfulness would overstep itself, and could no longer be winked at. Then God would be forced to put the unfaithful nation aside, and to say, "You are My people no longer! I can no longer abide your wickedness!"

Then, like the unfaithful Gomer, Israel would be at the mercy of those false gods whose deceitful promises had led them astray. The pleasant fields and vines and fruit trees would pass to another people, and Israel, set at naught, would be led into slavery in a foreign land.

In the anguish and the shame and the sorrow of that exile there would be none to care what happened to them, and none to help them. All the things in which they had trusted, and for which they had forsaken God, would fail them in that hour of need; and Israel, in ruin would realize its sin,—but too late!

Too late, except for the love of God. He cannot turn from His people forever. Even in exile His love would seek His own, and buy them back for Himself, and bring them home again. And Israel, the bitter lesson learned, would then serve God in faithfulness forever, and once more be His people, as in the days of old! This prophecy, which Hosea made so many centuries ago, is a wonderful foreshadowing of God's redeeming love as we see it in the life of His Son, our Saviour, Jesus Christ. Truly Hosea was a pioneer for God, marking out the path God's love would take in the redeeming of His own.

BUT MORE than that. Hosea's prophecy is a warning for us here in America today.

Surely, we have been blessed by God. In a world full of turmoil and suffering, such as has not been for ages, we have been largely exempt. We have our troubles, but they are small compared with the troubles of other people beyond the seas. We are rich. We have more than half the gold in the world,—buried in a hole in the ground out in Kentucky. But our real wealth is not in that gold,—it is in our farms, and our forests, and our mines, and in our industries which are the wonder and the envy of the world. There is food enough in our land for all, if we will share it; and work enough for all, if we have the sense to organize it, and the will to do it. What nation was ever so blessed as ours?

God in His infinite goodness has showered blessings upon us; yet as a people we turn from Him. There are some who are faithful in America;—there were some who were faithful in unfaithful Israel,—but where are the multitudes today? Are they listening to God? I say that they are not, and you know that I am right!

OUR CHURCHES are ill-supported, and half empty. Sunday has ceased to be a day of worship, and has become a day without a purpose, more of a menace than a blessing. Dishonesty walks abroad. Selfishness and covetousness devour our people. Exploitation and political corruption scarcely hear rebuke. Slums rot the heart out of our cities and the neglect of the nation's children casts a blight over our hope for future years. All this at home, while we face deadly and determined enemies across the seas!

How long will God put up with us? How long before unfaithfulness will overstep itself, and God,—who has been so good to us,—will be forced to say,—"You are My people no longer! Your selfishness and your sin is an offense to Me! I can no longer abide it!"

CONSIDER YOUR OWN LIFE, as I do mine. Think of the tremendous blessings with which God has filled your days. Of course we all have our troubles, and sometimes they seem very great to us,—and sometimes they are great,—but how about the blessings? Are they not there, too? Have you not been blessed beyond your deserving?

Then, what have you done to show your appreciation to God for the good things that He has given you? Have you gone forth in His service? Have you been instant in His praise? Have you filled your life with His righteousness? Have you filled your heart and your mind with His love? Think, before it is too late! Think, before He has turned His favor from you. Think, before you turn from Him to follow the false gods of this world about you,—false gods that can only lead you to moral and spiritual ruin!

Even in our unfaithfulness, God loves us. Even while we turn from Him, His love follows us. He holds out His hands to us, pierced upon the Cross for our salvation, trusting that His deep sacrifice for us will draw us back again.

Will you turn? Will you follow Him? Will you make His cause your cause, His battle your battle, His sacrifice your sacrifice?

In the Name of the Merciful, the Compassionate, the only wise God our Saviour, I beseech you, let us give our whole lives in loyalty to Him! Amen.

ever available and is set to another Hosmer hymn, No. 444. Of similar character is John Milton's great hymn, "The Lord will come and not be slow," but to get the full majesty of the words the tune set in the Scottish Church Hymnal seems more appropriate. The individual's taste in regard to hymns and music naturally varies but personal preferences are really a secondary consideration. Those who have the strongest preferences are not always the most competent to judge the merits of one hymn or tune against alternatives available. The measuring stick should be what is worthy to be offered to God, rather than what we ourselves like. To quote the words of a modern writer on hymnology, "A tendency to be unduly subjective, to concentrate on the moods and the needs of the human ego, rather than on the splendor and beauty of God in His revelation in Christ" is an all too common weakness which in excess reduces religion to mere sentimentality.

Youth and the Church

We hear a great deal today about the emphasis of our generation being placed upon youth. Accent on youth is a pertinent phrase. There is a tragic significance in the fact that our armed forces are composed largely of youth. They are performing a bitter task. What lies ahead for them when they return? One major political party is publicizing the fact that it has endorsed a young man for leadership in our nation. We are very sympathetic to this approach.

The real basis for emphasis upon youth, from our Christian approach lies in the churches. Therefore we are much encouraged by the splendid reports that come to us from the youth meeting held at Lakeside, Ohio, June 27th-July 2. This Christian Youth Conference of North America was held under the auspices of the International Council of Religious Education. One thousand young people were in attendance. They came together from forty-four states and four foreign countries. They represented forty-two Protestant denominations, twelve inter-denominational agencies, and one hundred and seventy-five state and city councils of religious education. Back of them were 10,000,000, Protestant youth. This is a partial picture of the United Christian Youth Movement that is an outgrowth of the whole World Council of Churches. Because we believe this movement bears watching and is highly significant, we take the liberty of quoting from several of the addresses given at the Conference by outstanding Christian leaders. If 1,000,000 young people have been exposed to this type of leadership it is bound to have some influence on the Christian life of the communities which they represent.

Dr. Henry Smith Leiper, Secretary of the World Council of Churches, in an address entitled, "What is the Church Doing?" called attention to the new attitude toward foreign missions. This was due to the fact "that in the minds of those who know of the 132 instances in which our fliers in the Pacific area have been saved by Christian natives, as likewise in the case of those who have been able to observe the work of medical missions in difficult places among underprivileged peoples," a new interest has been aroused. This global war is bringing into clearer perspective the obscure work of consecrated missionary heroes. This appeals to youth.

Dr. E. K. Higdon of Indianapolis, in an address, entitled "What Is the Church Doing in the Far East?", closed with these words: "Can you name any nation on the face of the earth where Christians practice reconciliation more effectively than they do in China? Without exception, Christian observers there declare that they have never heard a sermon or a prayer tinged by bitterness or the spirit of vindictiveness." The young Church of the East has much to teach us, and our youth will understand the language they speak and the avenues of Christian friendliness they desire to open.

Another speaker, Dr. John H. Elliott, of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, speaking on the topic, "Healing America's Divisions," said that he knew "Christian young people are eager to heal the human rifts." He suggested five ways to increase inter-faith, good will.

"1. Recognize that God has made people different, given them different colors of skin, different languages, different ideals, and different faiths. Don't blame differences on man's perversity, but on the creative wisdom of God, who has made us not identical but individuals.

2. Disarm your own minds of prejudice against other religions and social groups.

3. Learn about Judaism and Roman Catholicism from first hand sources and not prejudiced propaganda.

4. Speak up for goodwill whenever and wherever you have a chance.

5. Act through your church to bridge the gulfs that divide us."

All of this was advice given to youth. But it applies to those of us who have reached adulthood. In fact our responsibility is greater. For surely our experience teaches us that it is only men of goodwill who can bridge the gulfs that separate us. We know from our own Christian experience that the work of the often unnoticed missionary is God's work, and God in His Wisdom will bring that work to the light.

It is our hope that the Christian Youth in attendance upon this great conference have returned to their homes inspired with a new vision which they will pass on to many of us.

One more thing: in their closing service the conference delegates committed themselves as opposed to discrimination against any group: Negro, Japanese-American, Jew or any other, in our Churches, in Schools, in housing, in transportation and in employment. This is a challenge to all of us. Youth can lead the Church into new fields of Christian endeavor.

Address to the American Guild of Organists

At the Spring Music Festival, May 17, 1944, U. S. N. R., Midshipmen's School Vesper Service, Riverside Church

By C. LESLIE GLENN

I VALUE THIS opportunity to say a few words tonight. There are few ministers who would not welcome the chance to talk to a company of church musicians. We have suffered many things at each other's hands, clergymen and organists, and we tend to walk warily with each other. It is about this that I want to talk.

Music is all important to the church, and the church has had a great influence on music. Lord Dunsany wrote that the marks of the divine in man were benevolence, extravagance, and song. Music occupies at least half of the time of the average church service. One theologian has defined the church as simply a company of people singing. That may not be technically correct, but it is a true definition. Every minister knows this and treasures above all things, an organist and choirmaster who can make it possible. Why then do we sometimes appear not to get along?

Is the difficulty that most ministers are not musical and some musicians are not religious? Partly, yet we could not propose that all clergy study music. Perhaps some of you have suffered from a violin-playing parson who wanted "Humoresque" as a Prelude. Nor do I think it is much of a solution that all organists should be amateur theologians, quick to detect heresies in word and liturgy. It is easier to veto selections of music made in the name of good music than selections made by a pious organist in the name of the Almighty.

What I venture to suggest is that the relation between minister and musician should remain one of tension. Their interests are not the same, and the best results may come when each tries to serve his own interest in the happy realization that his partner is a critic who will not let him exaggerate it.

The church musician wants the best music he can get. All excellence is of God, and beautiful music beautifully played is conducive to worship. For this reason he generally would rather have it sung by a choir of experts than by a congregation of the unmusical.

The clergyman, on the other hand, wants participation, which is the heart of worship. All liturgy with its responses is a device for making the people take part.

"The Lord be with you" "And with thy spirit."
"Lift up your hearts;" "We lift them up unto the Lord."

In very informal services the same principle is applied when the preacher says,

"Amen, brethren?"

and the people reply:

"Hallelujah, brother!" or "Praise the Lord!"

THE IMPORTANT THING is that the people must not be left alone as if they were at a concert. Consequently, the clergyman wants them all to sing the hymns. What he and the choir do they do as the leaders of the people, not as performers to the people. The choice of hymns will always be a tension between the best and the most familiar. The organist must try to raise the standard and the minister must try "to raise the roof." In an ideal situation, the quality of the hymns will always be improving but participation will never be lost. What can be done depends in some measure upon how permanent the congregation is. If there are many transients, the hymns must be those familiar to the people from other parts of the country. Such is our situation here in the Midshipmen's School, where we have 3,000 new men every four months drawn from all over the United States. We must find hymns they will sing or we can't possibly bind together into corporate worship men of all denominations and all sizes of churches.

The question of what proportion of the service should be taken by the people and what proportion by the choir again will always be in tension. One extreme is for the people to sit quietly with occasional intervals of standing to flex the muscles, while the minister and choir carry on a beautiful, remote duet. I said this was like a concert, but it really is less worshipful than a concert, because in the concert hall, we have applause, and the people at least participate by clapping their hands. The other extreme is for the enthusiasm of the worshippers (and remember, enthusiasm means "filled with God") to be so articulate that there is no pause for beautiful music which takes expert preparation to lead the minds of the listeners to God.

AT WHAT PRECISE point a service intended for worship turns into a sacred concert is a delicate question which minister and musician must solve together. Generally speaking, it is fair to say that most college chapel services resemble the concert, so that it is commonly said, "If you want to hear good music, go to the college chapel; if you want to say your prayers, go to one of the nearby village churches." This hard choice ought not to be forced on anyone. We may hear good music and say our prayers in the same building if minister and musician will fight for what they want in a happy tension.

The college chapels I speak of have raised the standards of musical taste in America, but if those who attend them give up worship, their improved taste in music will help the symphony orchestras throughout the country, but not the churches.

Sometimes the reply to this is that the good music which has been restored to the church through college chapels is from ancient liturgies, that it is the austere, unworldly music of the ages of faith. Hence, how could it lead to a decay in worship? The answer is that it is not corporate worship unless the people participate. Before or after the beautiful, difficult thing is sung, the congregation must have something to do. If they don't, it becomes a performance and worship dies.

The second article of the United States Navy Regulations says the "commanders of every ship shall cause divine service to be performed on Sunday." This choice of words is singularly unfortunate; you and I would agree that divine service is not "performed" as if it were a public spectacle. This unhappy phraseology is probably due to some clergyman who was advising an admiral friend in writing the regulations. So that everything I have said tonight about musicians applies to ministers in double measure. And after all a sacred concert is better than a sacred monologue. If we do nothing but sit quiet, it had better be to some lovely music than to some voice going on and on. So I will stop.

THE MIDSHIPMEN'S SCHOOL is honored that the American Guild of Organists should want to attend one of its services. This honor belongs to the choir, but since the choir is the same for only six weeks at a time, it belongs even more, as you all know, to Grover Oberle who trains and leads it. Mr. Oberle was the first specialist for welfare enlisted in the navy to lead church music. Just today he was advanced to the rating of Chief Petty Officer, a well-deserved honor. He has made a distinguished success of his work, which is due not only to his superb musicianship and leadership of men, but also to those sincere qualities of mind and spirit that keep him patient with tiresome ministers, and firm in his musical ideals. He is one example of a happy tension with the clergy, and, both in the Navy and in a Parish, I am glad to have been the fortunate clergyman associated with him.

AN ENQUIRY

In the 1st verse of the 10th chapter of Zechariah it is written, "Ask of the Lord rain." In the 18th chapter of I Kings we are told that, after prayer, Elijah cast himself down on the earth and said to his servant: "Go up and look toward the sea." He returned with: "There is nothing." "Go up again seven times." At the seventh time he reported: "Behold there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea, like a man's hand." Elijah said: "Prepare thy chariot and get thee down that the rain stop thee not, . . . and there was a great rain." What is the matter with our Episcopal clergymen? Have they lost the faith of their fathers? Eight years have I lived in Richmond and not once have I heard a minister pray for rain, even when the drought in the country, from which comes the city's sustenance, has been acute, has been critical. How blessed to have been reared in those far off days, when "family prayers" were in evidence! In my home in Mathews County my father, a busy doctor, with horse and buggy only as means of transportation, would have sooner gone without his breakfast than without "family prayers," and at those prayers, throughout a drought, we daily heard the familiar words: "Send us, we beseech Thee, in this our necessity such moderate rain and showers that we may receive the fruits of the earth to our comfort, and to Thy honor, through Jesus Christ our Lord." When, without a rector, as was often the case, we repaired to the Parish Church, where two or three were gathered together on Sunday morning, we again approached the Mercy Seat, pleading for rain. So strong was their faith, the colored cook would say: "I has reserved 'fore now, that when de doctor go up to Christ Church and pray for rain, 'tis most in ginerally po'ring down 'fore he gits home." "Believe ye that I am able to do this?" "O thou of little faith, wherefore dost thou doubt!"

Out-of-Door Preaching Services

Cathedral Church on Boston Common Holds Services Sunday Nights During Summer

Boston, Mass.—Out-of-door preaching services on Sunday nights at 7 P. M. are now in full swing at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, as for many summers past. For the past two years, however, the sponsor has been not merely the Cathedral but the Boston Area Council of Churches, the full roster of Protestant Churches, with clergymen of the different denominations preaching. With thousands of service men thronging Boston Common, which the Cathedral faces, it is appropriate that there is a strong patriotic as well as religious interest in the programs. There is a brass quartet and the organ music is brought to the Cathedral porch by a clever amplification arrangement. Thanks to the interested cooperation of the Traffic Division of the Boston Police Department, busy, bustling Tremont Street is closed to vehicular traffic for the half hour service on each Sunday night. The program began on May 28, when Dean Edwin Jan Van Etten spoke on "When D-Day Comes". And now since D-Day has come, the services continue on through the first Sunday in September with their searching, slightly spectacular but deeply sincere appeal to the "man on the street" and "the man on the Common".

Rev. F. M. Morris Summer Preacher

Boston, Mass.—The Rev. Frederick M. Morris, rector of Trinity Church, Newton Centre, will be the Sunday morning preacher at the Cathedral Church of St. Paul throughout the summer. He carries on the tradition set by his predecessor in the Newton Center parish, for the Rev. Dr. Edward T. Sullivan was "summer dean" at the Cathedral for nearly twenty years, and a deservedly popular preacher.

Mortgages Burned

Boston, Mass.—Burning the mortgage has been the popular sport in some parishes in the Massacnusetts Diocese. The latest to participate is St. Stephen's Church, Fall River, where the Rev. Herbert L. Johnson, who on July 1 officially became the Archdeacon of New Bedford, preached for the occasion on June 25 at invitation of the rector, the Rev. G. Raymond Shaffer. Among the other parishes burning their mortgages have been All Saints', Methuen, the Rev. Will Ashley Hawley, S. T. D., and All Saints', Stoneham, the Rev. David A. Pearson.

Appeals for Hungarian Jews

Information Through Switzerland Reports Extremes of Persecution

New York, N. Y.—Acting on the basis of information received by radiogram from the headquarters of the World Council of Churches, Geneva, Switzerland, Rev. Samuel McCrea Cavert, General Secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, has made a public appeal in behalf of the Hungarian Jews now facing extremes of persecution and wholesale deportation.

The dispatch from Switzerland which prompted the protest declared that trustworthy reports reaching Geneva from Hungary indicated that 12,000 Hungarian Jews are being deported daily to Upper Silesia and that the number already deported is estimated at 450,000. The message further said that travel conditions for the deportees were such that many died on the way and others were killed and cremated after arrival.

Pointing out that indifference to such cruelty toward the Jews as is reported from Hungary "would leave a black

Convocation in Indian Field

Every Reservation in South Dakota Represented

Greenwood, S. D.—The 73rd Convocation of the Niobrara Deanery (Indian Field) in South Dakota was held at the Church of the Holy Fellowship, on the Yankton Reservation, June 22-25. Following their regular custom the main services were held in a big booth, the women and young people meeting in their respective big tents, and the children in the Church.

In spite of the difficulties of traveling approximately 700 Indians, representing every reservation in South Dakota, were present. This is about half the size of the ordinary Convocation, but it was a remarkable attendance considering not only the transportation difficulties, but the large number of Indians who have entered war service, both with the armed forces and defense industries. It was one of the most united and forward looking that has been held.

The special guest and speaker of Convocation was the Rt. Rev. Douglass H. Atwill, D. D., Bishop of North Dakota.

Each year the Indians present at Convocation the offerings which they have earned and given during the previous year. In spite of adverse conditions they made an all time record, presenting over $8,000. This was $1,900 more than their previous record of last year. At a special memorial service honoring the boys and girls who are serving with the armed forces, a special offering was taken for the Army and Navy Commission.

The Convocation next year will meet at Good Shepherd Chapel on the Standing Rock Reservation north of Glenn Cross.

YOUTH RECREATION CLUB A BIG SUCCESS

Louisville, Ky.—The St. George's Church, at 26th and Oak Streets, has launched a "Gremlin Corner" to help the city reduce juvenile delinquency. The Parish House is located right in the heart of the Parkland District, where it attracts young people from a large surrounding territory. It was financed by the Community Chest of Louisville. Twyman Humphrey, chairman of the Youth Recreation Committee, commented, "All I know is that it is a big success"—an opinion seconded by Miss Ruth Higgins, the full-time recreational advisor.

A policy-making committee of teenagers has drawn up the rules for Gremlin Corner and public opinion is the big stick that enforces these rules. This is the first recreation club in Louisville that is run independently and on a full-time basis. On opening night it threw its doors open to more than 420 young people. Of that number, 270 were members, while the remaining 150, a limit set by the club for opening night, were visitors. For those wishing to become members the rules are few and the dues small. The initiation fee is 50 cents and dues 10 cents a week. Smoking on the dance floor, liquor, running and gambling are ruled out. An age limit of 14 through 18 kept out a girl who came back three times.

All decorating was done by the youngsters, who chose rose, pink and blue as a color scheme; provided tables, a snack bar, indirect lighting, a juke box and an orchestra. There is a game room in the basement equipped with a pool table, two ping pong tables and several other game tables. Eighty-six played pool, ninety-eight ping pong, and forty-five such games as pit, checkers and rook.

On opening night Meyer Wilson Wyatt visited the Club and was introduced by Miss Ruth Britton, the 17 year old Chairman of the Policy Setting Committee. He complimented the young people on their quick action and predicted that their club will be a model for future clubs which he felt confident would be formed soon.

The boys and girls said they were crazy about the club. Asked what they did nights before the club opened, they listed movies, bowling, pool and "gangs," while one girl said she knitted. A girl said that sometime ago her boy friend was "—beat up and nearly kicked to death, while gang fighting."

The club plans to have dancing classes every Saturday afternoon and one evening a week, also plays and floor-shows and dramatics.

This is where the Episcopal Church has pioneered again to make itself felt in a community where delinquency has been rampant for some months. In the very near future another of our churches expects to open a similar center in another part of the city of Louisville.

CHAPLAIN DONALD ALDRICH APPRECIATES MATERIAL

Boston, Mass.—Chaplains do appreciate the supplies provided by the Army and Navy Commission. One example is a letter from Chaplain Donald B. Aldrich, written rfom the United States Naval Training Station at Bainbridge, Md., saying, "Your generous gift of Prayer Books has allowed for their distribution in the four Regiments where they are being used as the Order of Service for the Holy Communion by the different Chaplains of every denomination. This has been brought about in good measure by the fact that only the straight Prayer Book service is used at the main Chapel. It has set a fine standard for the Communion Services through the Station.

"The blue cards with Durer's 'Hands' and the verses from Psalm 139 cut to fit each man's billfold, go at the rate of about 500 a week.

"On the Pastoral side, I have been seeing from 25 to 75 men a day in the office. A free evening for the men recently gave me the opportunity to swing a Get-together for 1,500 men. It proved to be, as I hoped, a fine medium for acquaintance with some 2,000 new men from the several training stations. We had a sing-song, then I threw out about 100 packages of cigarettes for a scramble, and finally we had an 'Information Please' Quiz. The height of the evening was when a boy from Boston was the only contestant who knew the date of the birth of Robert E. Lee!

"Hospital and dispensary calls go on daily and involve daily telephone calls over the country. I saw 420 sick boys last month and had a real chat with each one of them."

Make America Christian Nation

Declares Bishop Horstick at Consecration as Second Bishop of Eau Claire

Eau Claire, Wis.—The majestic words and music of "I bind unto myself today the strong name of the Trinity" began the Consecration Service of the Rev. William Wallace Horstick as second bishop of the Diocese of Eau Claire, on St. Peter's Day, June 29, in Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire.

The Bishop-elect was attended by the Very Rev. E. J. M. Nutter, dean of Nashotah House, and the Rev. Edward S. White, rector of the Church of the Redeemer, Chicago, where the Rev. Mr. Horstick had at one time served as curate.

Bishop B. F. P. Ivins, of Milwaukee, who had ordained the Bishop-elect to the diaconate, was the celebrant. The Rev. Joseph S. Minnis and the Rev. B. Norman Burke, close friends, were deacon and sub-deacon.

The Presiding Bishop was consecrator, with Bishops Harwood Sturtevant, of Fond du Lac, and Edwin J. Randall, suffragan of Chicago, as co-consecrators. Bishop William L. Essex, of Quincy, preached the sermon and read the Litany. Bishops W. H. Ziegler, Wyoming, and Howard R. Brinker, Nebraska, presented the Bishop-elect, and Bishop Frank A. McElwain, retired Bishop of Minnesota, read the consents of the Bishops.

An interesting feature was the blessing and presentation by Bishop Ivins, of the Pectoral Cross, the Ring and Pastoral Staff used by the late Bishop Frank E. Wilson and the gift of Mrs. Wilson.

The Bishop's vestments were given by the congregation of Trinity Parish, Aurora, Illinois, and the Bible and Prayer Book by friends. Other gifts included an oil stock given by Bishop Horstick's class at Nashotah House, and a purse of money by the clergy of the diocese.

Representatives from every part of the diocese filled the Cathedral.

The entire service was broadcast by remote control over station WHRO, Aurora, Illinois.

Following the Consecration a luncheon was served to about 500 guests from all parts of the diocese. The Very Rev. Victor Hoag, dean of Christ Church Cathedral, Eau Claire, acted as toastmaster.

In his address the Presiding Bishop paid a warm tribute to the late Bishop Wilson and called upon the new Bishop of Eau Claire to lead his people in the great and sorely needed task of making America a Christian Nation that the Church may be ready to give to the world the Gospel of Christ.

The Very Rev. E. J. M. Nutter, dean of Nashotah House, in his address stated frankly that if the world is to be won for Christ it will be won by men willing and ready to live dangerously, and he called upon Bishop Horstick to accept the challenge.

Dr. Clark Kuebler, president of Ripon College, in addressing the luncheon gathering affirmed his conviction that the Christian cause is the only one worth while, but that it can only be successful through the acceptance and practice of the full Christian faith, and that in Bishop Horstick would be found a stalwart defender of the Faith. For this the whole Church had just cause to thank God.

"We shall accept as our first responsibility the missionary work in the Diocese of Eau Claire," said Bishop Horstick. "We shall accept the call of the Presiding Bishop to help make America a Christian Nation."

CHAPLAINS SEND REPORTS

Chaplain Clingman—Somewhere in the Jungle

Boston, Mass.—Chaplain Robert C. Clingman tells the Army and Navy Commission that where he is located "one cigarette or a packet of matches will buy a wife any time, but we ordinarily settle for a guide to the next village or some cocoanut milk."

The Chaplain reports that the last month was spent mostly on patrols in the jungle, with many contacts with the men, which he hopes were helpful. 'The countryside is straight up one side of a ravine," he says, "and straight down the other. The ash is slick and going down hill resolves itself usually into skiing down, without benefit of skis, on the seat of the pants, or whatever hits the trail first.

"Native towns consist of anywhere from three to thirty huts, clinging precariously to the side of the trails. We shoot parkeets, emus, lizards, snakes and boar for the black folks, who give us in turn papaya, pandanus, bananas and clams. Some of the natives speak fair English, most get by with pidgin, which baffles even Brooklynites at first. 'Me ketchum papaya next sun? All same girl Mary make pandanus kai-kai (food), Oh, boy, do they feed the preacher! After a service, at which a native village turned out and chanted our hymns after the soldiers, they fed us a royal feast of roasted snails or slugs, we couldn't tell which, but they did taste okay, since we were living on papaya and C ration. Breadfruit baked with a piece of wild boar, and a wild fruit approximating the mango was the extent of the meal. And by no means exotic, with the oppressive, unbearable heat of the jungle, native smells, a sullen drizzle, and the prospect of a brutal march back to bivouac near the ocean. But life is all right, as long as we are alive!

"In a month I have had 21 services, five Communions, attended three Roman Masses, had four services with another Chaplain and administered to some 900 men in those services. Made three hospital visits, one Divisional Chaplains' meeting, 51 pastoral contacts of personal, moral or domestic nature, three welfare cases, and saw at least for a few minutes weekly all the men in my battalion."

REV. J. CLEMENS KOLB RECEIVES HONORARY DEGREE

Philadelphia, Pa.—The honorary degree of doctor of sacred theology was conferred by the University of Pennsylvania upon the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, chaplain of the University and Boardman Lecturer on Christian Ethics, at the University's 188th Commencement on Saturday, July 1.

Dr. George William McClelland, president of the University, presented Dr. Kolb for the degree and it was conferred by Dr. Thomas S. Gates, chairman of the University. The exercises were held in the Irvine Auditorium on the University campus in Philadelphia. The following citation was read by Dr. McClelland in presenting Dr. Kolb for the degree:

Son of Harvard University and the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge.

Clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal Church, you are now the Chaplain of this University.

In the three years that you have served as Chaplain, you have demonstrated your devotion to God and man.

As a classroom teacher your scholarship is respected, as a preacher your eloquence inspires, but as the University Pastor, your understanding of youth and their problems has given them an understanding of religion which has won for you the affection and love of all.

Dr. Kolb was appointed chaplain of the University of Pennsylvania by the executive board of the trustees of the University in March, 1941, and began his work on the campus several months later.

A native of Elkhart, Ind., Dr. Kolb was graduated cum laude from Harvard with the degree of bachelor of arts in 1925 and received the degree of bachelor of divinity from the Episcopal Theological Seminary, Cambridge, Mass., in 1928.

Following his graduation from the Seminary, he was curate at St. Stephen's Church, Lynn, Mass., and then became rector of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Mattapan, where he served for ten years before going to the University of Pennsylvania.

TWO AGENCIES MERGE

New York, N. Y.—Commenting upon the merger of the Sheltering Arms and the New York Child's Foster Home Service, the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the National Council's Division of Christian Social Relations, said: "The Sheltering Arms Children's Service, which is the name of the new organization, is to be congratulated on having merged the traditions and resources of two fine agencies into a single unified program expressing the best in Church social work. Through the new agency more children will be given better service than was possible before. It is a forward-looking step in every aspect."

The two agencies which merged were among New York's oldest child-caring agencies. Thomas M. Peters, former head of the Sheltering Arms, was elected president of the new corporation. Paul Cushman, who has been president of the New York Child's Foster Home Service, was elected vice-president of the new organization. Mrs. Harold C. Richard, vice-president; Devereux C. Josephs, treasurer, and Ronald Eliot Curtis, secretary. Miss Margaret Barbee is the executive director of the new agency, and Miss Helen A. Day, associate director.

Mr. Peters announced that the new agency will care for non-Roman Catholic children made homeless due to the war, and its accompanying social upheavals, and also be ready to provide for children who will need special help in the post-war period.

The Sheltering Arms headquarters have been closed, and the staff has located into the offices of the New York Child's Foster Home Service at 305-307 East 86th Street, New York. After alterations have been completed, it is planned to remove to 122-124 East 29th Street.

The Sheltering Arms was founded in 1864, while the predecessors of the New York Child's Foster Home Service go back to 1823. Both agencies weathered several wars and now in the midst of the greatest war of all, they have united and are committed to keep faith with the men overseas by giving the utmost in care to children at home who are in desperate need and also together are laying plans for a more flexible agency to be ready to serve New York's homeless children in peace days to come.

JUNE FESTIVAL AT MARINERS' CHURCH

Detroit, Mich.—One hundred fifty friends of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission braved the hottest June 28th in years to attend a musicale and June festival at Mariners' Church and Institute from four to seven o'clock on that day. Special features of the occasion included the dedication of the "Upper Room," which is to be used as a psychiatric adjustment clinic, and a beautiful picture of the Christ, "Come Unto Me," for Mariners' Institute. At the same time, there was formally opened a new recreation room containing facilities for dozens of games, for the inmates of the Institute.

The Rev. David R. Covell, L. H. D., Rector of Mariners' Church and superintendent of the Detroit Episcopal City Mission, unveiled the picture and opened the game room. The Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Michigan, dedicated the "Upper Room."

One of the most interesting medical instruments in Michigan is the century-old organ in Mariner's Church. This instrument has recently been rehabilitated, and during the musical portion of the program, was played by Mrs. Mark Stevens, who as a little girl used to play the organ for services in Ma-

FORGING AHEAD

The statement of collections to July 1 is one of the best ever published in so far as it concerns the percentage of expectations paid. We must remember, however, that in spite of the large advance in missionary giving promised for 1944 we are still far below the total given fifteen years ago.

Receipts in June were $187,568.54, a sum materially in excess of one-twelfth of the amount due annually.

The total from January 1 to July 1 is 122% of the amount due after allowing one month for collections and remittances.

Out of 98 dioceses and districts 87 have paid 100% or more. Of the 11 which are behind 5 are foreign, some of which have special methods of payment.

Have just returned from two weeks in Cuba where the Church is making fine progress.

Thanks for the cooperation so freely given by the treasurers of the Church.

SERVICES IN FRENCH

New York, N. Y.—Protestant Episcopal French Church Du Saint Esprit, Old Huguenot Church, 109 East 60th Street, started Sunday, July 2, 1944, and running for ten Sundays through September 3, 1944, services consisting of morning prayer and sermon, held at 9:30 A. M., instead of the present hour of 10:45 A. M.

This time enables us to escape the extreme heat in the middle of the day. The Church can be kept cool at this hour with the use of the fans and permits worshipers to enjoy the services in comfort. All are invited to attend these services which are in French.

A LESSON IN COOPERATION

Washington, D. C.—A Navy Chaplain, member of the Disciples of Christ, went through the Panama Canal Zone with his ship recently, and enjoyed the distinction of being, with one other officer, the only member of the crew permitted to go ashore.

The Chaplain utilized his time by locating a portable organ badly needed for his services, and found one in a shop—only to discover that it was the property of the Archbishop of Panama. Calling on Archbishop Juan Jose Maiztegui and explaining his need, the Archbishop graciously gave them the organ at a very nominal cost.

Next call was on the Rt. Rev. Harry Beal, bishop of the Episcopal Church's Missionary District of Panama. To Bishop Beal the Chaplain told of his lack of a Communion Set. Bishop Beal immediately gave him a fine silver Communion service, declining to accept any payment.

Something in the way of a lesson in cooperation here.

DEVELOPMENT IN MOTION PICTURE SERVICE

New York, N. Y.—Announcement of a new development in the field of religious motion pictures is made by the National Council's Visual Service. The Religious Film Association, an interdenominational service agency of which the National Council is a member, has taken over distribution of the entire film library of the Harmon Foundation, and will distribute these together with other films through four newly established depositories in New York, Chicago, San Francisco and Dallas.

The new arrangement also opens to parishes the library of the Y. M. C. A. Motion Picture Bureau, which includes a large number of free industrial films and United States Government films available for a small service charge. Most of these films are of high technical quality and have educational value. In addition the "Y" list of educational and entertainment films will help to supplement the religious films now offered in the catalog of the Religious Film Association, thus providing a complete service for Church and Community.

Another feature of the new service is the offer of an indemnity plan to protect film users from loss due to damage of film. For a small service charge the user is "insured" for one year against such losses up to $50.

A new eighty-page catalog is being issued by the Association this summer. Requests for it as well as orders for films should be sent to the Department of Promotion, 281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

STATEMENT ON AMERICAN AID TO CHURCH OF ENGLAND

London, Eng.—American aid to British Missions was discussed at the recent meeting of the Central Board of Finance of the Church of England. The Board adopted a statement for release to the press, as follows: "Since the early part of 1941 British Missions have benefitted to an extent of £146,388.10.6 from gifts from Church people in America. The money has been received by the Central Board of Finance and has been distributed on the instructions of the Missionary Council of the Church Assembly. This generous help has been very greatly appreciated, representing, as it does, a practical expression of the interest taken in the missionary work of the Church of England by the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States."

CONFIRMATION SERVICE HELD IN JUNGLE

Along the Ledo Road—Chaplain William H. Fryer, who has been stationed in India for the past fifteen months, recently arranged the only Episcopal Confirmation service yet held in the China-Burma-India Theater. Officiating at the ceremony, which was held in an attractive pukka chapel built in the heart of the jungle, was the Rt. Rev. George Clay Hubback, British Bishop of Assam.

Prior to volunteering for service with the armed forces, Chaplain Fryer, who was graduated from the University of Utah and the Philadelphia Divinity School, was in charge of Holy Sacrament Mission, Upper Darby, Philadelphia. He is now attached to a hospital unit along the Ledo Road, which American engineers constructed to supply Lieutenant-General Joseph Stilwell's Chinese forces in the Mogagung Valley, and which will eventually meet the old Burma Road in China.

RECTOR SELECTED TO REPRESENT GENERAL PUBLIC

Visalia, Calif.—Workers, employers and a representative of the general public are all taking part in the administration of farm wage ceilings under a wartime project of the War Food Administration of the federal government. The purpose is to control inflation through stabilizing wage rates, food production costs and food prices.

In Tulare County, California, such committees have been in operation on the raisin picking order, the cotton picking order, and the Valencia orange picking order. In all these cases, the Rev. Duncan G. Porteous, rector of St. Paul's Church, Visalia, has been selected to represent the general public. In explanation of his appointment, W. E. Gilfillan of the Agricultural Extension Service, Farm Advisor's Office, at Visalia, said:

"His position on these committees has been that of conciliator or referee inasmuch as workers and employer representatives are interested parties not always unbiased in their decisions. Mr. Porteous was selected because he was pretty well known throughout the county and has a practical approach to problems of human relationship. It has been his job on these committees to see that neither the worker nor the employer representatives get undue advantages in the administration of the wage ceiling." (Quoted from a report by Mr. W. E. Gilfillan, Agricultural Extension Service, Farm Advisor's Office, Box 990, Visalia.)

IMPRESSED WITH REALITY OF MISSION WORK

New York, N. Y.—The Most Rev. Campbell West-Watson, D. D., Bishop of New Zealand, has written to the National Council expressing thanks for "the most generous help which the Episcopal Church in the United States has sent to our Melanesian Mission." The Bishop says that he is happy to think that "the contacts which American troops have made with Melanesian Islanders has impressed at least some of them with the reality of the work which the Mission is doing."

New York, N. Y.—After a long interim without a doctor, Dr. Frank K. Mears, Jr., will be in charge of St. Timothy's Hospital, Cape Mount, Liberia. He has been appointed by the National Council and plans to go out in August.

Dr. Mears is 26 years old, a native of Philadelphia and a member of the Religious Society of Friends. He is a graduate of Haverford College and the University of Pennsylvania Medical School. He served his interneship in the Pennsylvania Hospital, Philadelphia, and has been, since the first of this year, resident physician at Delaware County Hospital, Drexel Hill, Pa.

Nashotah, Wis.—For the first time in its more than 102 years of history there is a summer session at Nashotah House. It opened a few days after the regular commencement at the end of May, and will continue until August 26. The holding of this session was necessitated by a government directive requiring that all professional training for those preparing for the ministry, be greatly accelerated.

The regular faculty is in attendance to give the instruction, and a considerable student body is in residence. Fifty-five persons are registered, distributed throughout the three seminary classes.

and lighted, the bells calling to prayer —and many attended, both of parishioners and others. Special services were held at intervals through the day and evening and some of the clergy celebrated the Holy Communion.

The Presiding Bishop's request for the immediate opening of all Churches for special prayer when the Invasion started was given to the diocesan convention in April, and later Bishop Wing sent a letter to all clergy reminding them of Bishop Tucker's request and sending them each a supply of the leaflet, "A Call to Prayer," which was carefully used.

Special prayers continue daily and are added in regular services.

What Will the Seminaries Do For the Peace

Your theological faculties do not pretend to have a quick and simple formula for solving all the world's ills. Yet theological schools have much to do with the coming Peace.

They must train men who in the days to come will minister both to people bewildered and downcast by the war, and to those who must take on the heavy post-war responsibilities. Tomorrow's clergy have to furnish inspiration and hope to the laymen who make historic decisions, and to set forth the moral principles on which these decisions should be based. Such ministers need all the Theology, Bible, Church History and Practical Theology they can get. As enrollments drop, the faculties are "tooling up" and planning to make their curricula as effective as possible.

DEATHS

Mrs. Arthur B. Rudd

Late in the evening of July 1 Mrs. Arthur B. Rudd died suddenly.

Mrs. Rudd had been instructing in reading and speech at the College of Preachers for nearly twenty years and at the Virginia Seminary for over a decade. In both institutions she had won the deepest confidence and affection. Her death is a great loss to both, not only because of the competence of her teaching, but also because of the attractiveness of her personality and the contagious quality of her Christian faith. To study under her was not only to be given a great deal of excellent technical counsel; it was also to be shown insights into the services previously unnoticed by the vast majority of clergy, it was to be given a new sense of the dignity and responsibility of one's task, it was to have one's awe in the presence of God deepened. She was an artist through and through; she was also a profoundly religious woman.

Mrs. Rudd was the widow of the late Arthur B. Rudd, for several years rector in Elmira, New York, subsequently Canon of the Washington Cathedral and rector in Rockville, Maryland.

stain on the record of any country which wants to be regarded as Christian," Dr. Cavert, on behalf of the Federal Council, appealed to leaders of the Christian churches in Hungary to "refuse to be silent in the presence of this crime and to do everything possible to aid and comfort the Jewish victims."

The statement also called upon American Christians to pray for the Hungarian Jews subjected to "such inhuman treatment," and added: "Even if we see no practicable way of going to their assistance, we must at least cry out in protest and identify ourselves in sympathy with the victims of an un-Christian racial policy."

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"If you are too busy to pray, you are too busy."

Freedom is not ours by a kind of divine right to squander; it's ours by the divine right in every generation to create it anew.—Dr. Paul Sherer.

"I don't know how else God works except as one by one we begin to stand by the best we know."

A man is on the way to become genuine and noble when his ideals draw near and make their home with him instead of floating before him like summer clouds, forever dissolving and reforming on the distant horizon.—H. W. Mabie.

There is a real grace of character in forgetting the things that disturb the harmony of life. On the threshold of the future life one must pass through a great wave of forgetfulness; it were better for us all if heaven were nearer to us by reason of the swift oblivion to which we consign the wrongs we suffer in this brief burning of the candle of life.—Selected.

"Men advance life's frontiers, conquer life's temptations, lay the foundations of life's noblest buildings, win the prizes of freedom, not by jaunty easy-going, but by prolonged effort. Not without cost are life's prizes won, and the wisest among us will see that part of the prize is the very conflict itself."

The unaccomplished mission of Christianity is nothing less than to reconstruct society on the basis of brotherhood.—Bishop Gore.

Christianity is not a religion of averages, and it does not flourish by guarding the doctrine of a golden mean. It lives and thrives only so long as its apostles and ministers are heroic adventurers, brave pioneers, ready to go with their Leader the dangerous way of the cross.—Dr. Rufus Jones.

There is properly no history, only biography.—Emerson.

The business man, the laborer, the farmer, the housewife, necessarily absorbed in a variety of practical concerns, without perhaps a great gift for expression, nevertheless may have as real a spirit, real experience in their fellowship with Jesus as has ever been had by anyone.—Dr. H. E. Luccock.

"The universe is too vast for the girdle of thought; it sweeps away immeasurably, and fades out of imagination in the splendor of uncounted suns. But there will be safe paths through it for men of reverance and humility."

Once the whole Christian movement depended upon a few men around a supper table in an upper room; but now a great heritage is ours and millions of us have caught at least a little of His Spirit and meaning who sat that night at the table's head. What if we were shaken now out of our indifference about Christian faith and life, shamed from our negligence and carelessness, shocked into a new appreciation of what it would mean to have not Anti-Christ, but the Master's spirit predominatingly influential in the world? That would matter.—Dr. Harry E. Fosdick.

Mr. Editor:

I was very much impressed by your recent editorial in THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN entitled "The Beginning of Liberation," in fact, so much so, that I am reproducing it in the next issue of our Diocesan Bulletin which is about to go to press,—of course giving THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN a credit line. I am assuming your approval of this, and so extend my thanks to you.

TAKEN FROM THE CHRONICLE JUNE, 1944

The Southern Churchman recently carried an editorial on a matter which deserves wider reading than merely by the subscribers of that excellent weekly, so we are reprinting it here. The editorial: "We dislike finding fault with any of our Christian brethren. We must admit that we are becoming a little irked by the assumption of an unwarranted use of terms by the Roman Catholic hierarchy. On Easter Eve the press carried and gave prominence to a statement by Archbishop Spellman of New York. With what the Archbishop had to say no one could find fault. We do object to the continued use of the title 'Military Vicar to the Armed Forces.' This is misleading. The armed forces of our country have no military vicar. There is a Chief of Chaplains for the Army and Chief Chaplain for the Navy. As it happens, the present Chief of Chaplains of the Army, Brigadier General Arnold, is a Roman Catholic priest. All Protestant chaplains with whom we have talked, state without exception that the Chief of Chaplains is eminently fair. We are certain that Chaplain Workman, the Navy's Chief Chaplain, who is a Protestant, exhibits the same fine spirit. We wish that our Roman brethren and the press would make it clear that the Archbishop of New York is military vicar to the Roman Catholic members of our armed forces. A title which he certainly has a right to by his Church. He is not Military Vicar to all the armed forces. This is a gross misuse of terms. It certainly does not aid in building up a united front." In this connection it is interesting to learn from one of Archbishop Spellman's assistants, Bishop William T. McCarty, C.SS.R., that there are more than four thousand Roman priests now in service in the United States Army and Navy. So far as we know this figure has never before been released, nor has the War or Navy Department released figures on Protestant and Jewish chaplains. All we have seen is that the Army has about seven thousand chaplains and the Navy has almost two thousand. This makes nine thousand. If it is true that the Roman Church has four thousand chaplains in service then almost every other chaplain in service is a Roman priest. This is rather an eye-opener, we should say, since of the country's one hundred and thirty-one million people, only twenty-three million are members of the Church of Rome. Of course, some of the Roman publications have been boasting that the Army and Navy is composed of fifty per cent Roman Catholics. Washington, naturally, does not reveal any figures on religious preferences of service men and women, so there is no way to verify the Roman claim. But it does seem astonishing that almost half the chaplains should be Roman Catholics.

DEAN MOOR RECOMMENDS WACS

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Dean N. R. H. Moor, of Holy Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, joined with Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish leaders in appealing to women to join the Woman's Army Corps.

Dean Moor said: "It gives me a great deal of pleasure to recommend the splendid organization of the WACS. It is not simply that this organization is able to release men for the fighting fronts, but it also does work that it can only do by the very nature of its organization.

"This finely disciplined organization is one that every intelligent American should be proud of and I am most happy to recommend it to anyone."

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

AN INCIDENT that happened one Sunday night still looms large in my mind. I tried to jump over the back of a rocking chair but my foot caught and I fell squarely on the seat and smashed the chair to bits. Not even a sore spot showed up. But a lesson did and I remember it. Several familiar phrases made themselves a nuisance as I lay there amid the wreckage giving thanks I was still intact. "Look before you leap." "Act your age." "Heaven's not reached in a single bound." "The wonderful one horse shay." "All that goes up is bound to come down." "The Fall of the House of Usshur." Strangely enough several Biblical phrases also came to mind. "Man's pride shall bring him low." "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." "Rejoice not when I fall." As I lay there with both legs bolt upright and everyone was trying to figure out how "dignity" got into the dust and whether or not I would rise again, I got an angle of perspective to my host and hostesses' house that brought forth another phrase.

"The beauty of the house is order. The blessing of the house is contentment. The glory of the house is hospitality. The crown of the house is godliness."

Since only the chair was hurt and since the incident soon passed after a bit of jollity, the whole thing might as well be forgotten—of course, only after the chair is replaced. But this lesson I mentioned should not be forgotten. In my youth I could jump over almost anything. I literally Douglas Fairbanked my way through my early and middle teens. The impulse to hurdle obstacles still exists. That is what hit me Sunday night and I followed the impulse as if I were still in my teens, forgetful of an accident that had taken the spring out of my feet and put stiffness into one leg. The old desire was there but the physical equipment was not the same and I did not make the grade.

ALL OF THIS IS on the physical side and yet it reminded me of the spiritual which works in the opposite manner. The resources increase almost in proportion to our desires. Whereas the nimbleness of our feet and the spring of our muscles decrease as the years increase, and the body grows less and less capable of physical strain; the spirit of man increases in resilience and obstacle hurdling power through the years. It used to be I could gauge the height of an obstacle I wanted to jump by an inner certainty. Something in me told me it could be done even though the obstacle seemed beyond my springing ability. I never once fell until last Sunday night. My physical eye and certitude are not what they used to be. But to compensate I have discovered the things I used to fear or dread or think impossible (during the years of my greatest physical development) are now a part of each day's life. The inner instinct as a jumper has given way to an inner certainty of one who has learned just a little about faith. Jesus implied many times that we could jump as high as our faith and that whenever we made a leap and fell it was either because of insufficient faith or an overtaxing of our limits. Even with faith we are not able to do more than clear the hurdle that stretches us to our highest powers.

I am rather glad of the incident, although sorry for the broken chair, because it brought me a vivid contrast between my past and my present, and that even though my days of Douglas Fairbanksing were over, I still had in store the highest jumps of my life. God is the soaring power of our souls and He presents to none of us heights beyound our power to attain.

Collect for the Seventh Sunday after Trinity.

Lord of all power and might, who art the author and giver of all good things;

Graft in our hearts the love of thy Name, increase in us true religion, nourish us with all goodness, and of thy great mercy keep us in the same; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Ordination Sermon

Preached at the Virginia Seminary, June 16, 1944

By FREDERICK J. WARNECKE

Acts 11:26: And it came to pass that a whole year they assembled themselves with the Church, and taught much people. And the disciples were called Christians first in Antioch.

IT HAPPENED at the very beginning of our Lord's ministry. The Spirit, writes the evangelist, drove Jesus out into a wilderness place. There for many days He tested His vocation.

The climax of the story as told by St. Matthew comes when Satan takes Jesus to the top of a mountain. From this vantage point can be seen all the kingdoms of the world and their greatness.

There is a pause as they gaze upon the scene. Then Satan speaks: "This is all mine. It has been delivered to me! I can give it to whomever I will. It shall be yours if you will worship me!"

As we look at the world today, there seems to be much to confirm the Evil One's boast: "It is all mine!"

We echo today the answer of Jeremiah when the Lord asked him what he saw: "I see a boiling cauldron!" said Jeremiah. We are engaged in warfare which scourges the innocent and the civilian as well as the military. The unmorality of our economic life is so entrenched that not even the high call of patriotism has been able to cleanse it. Personal morals have so largely broken down that there was a wave of sentimental approval when a married American soldier became the father of illegitimate quadruplets in England—revealing our common conception that quantity can always make up for lack of quality.

Further, if there is no active hostility to religion in our own land, there is an even more deadly apathy. People on the whole do not care enough about religion to fight against it.

The Archbishop of Canterbury has summed up our age in a phrase: "We are living in a disordered chaos."

In the midst of this chaos, what shall be the answer of the Christian Church and of its ministry?

There are those who would have us withdrawn from the scene. "The world is very evil," say such, "but, I'm but a stranger here! Heaven is my home!"

But there are no spiritual bomb-shelters in which the Church can sit out this storm. The Church may be driven into the catacombs, but it dare not abandon the streets of the city for the catacombs!

The Church then inevitably must accept the conflict. Accepting, it will not minimize the depth of the challenge. "There is no use patching up a way of life that has changed into a way of death."

IN THE FIRST CENTURIES, the Church marked clearly the edge of the precipice upon which it fought. "The Apostolic Traditions" of Hippolytus give a whole list of "occupations which those who wish to be baptized must leave off!" Some of these can easily be recognized as immoral: an adulterer, a panderer, an aborticianist. But other occupations are condemned simply because they are socially useless and non-productive of good. For example, there is "teaching horse-racing." The Church obviously was not conforming her practice to that of the world about her. She did not come hat in hand, prepared to conciliate and make compromise for the sake of converts. She recognized the conflict. She sharpened rather than modified the difference between the Christian way of life and the ways of society. IN the world those early Christians were; but OF the world they were not.

What then shall be our guiding principle today? When Barnabas and Paul ministered to the Church at Antioch "a whole year" . . . they . . . "taught much people." It is more sentiment than scholarship, but I like to think there is a cause and effect relationship between this statement and the more familiar following line: "The disciples were first called Christians in Antioch."

"They taught much people!" The Christian minister must above all else teach today—teach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ as the only salvation for a world of chaos. Only when the Spirit of God moved on the face of the waters did light come from darkness and life and order from chaos.

This sounds at first prosaic and mild as against the lightning of battle and the thunder of new ideologies. "To teach" seems like typical theological timidity. But before soldiers can fight, they must be trained. We have expected our Christian soldiers to fight for the Lord without training, without teaching.

I do not think Dr. Bernard I. Bell exaggerated recently when he said that "our young people (are) composed to the extent of about 80 per cent of religious illiterates." President Hutchins of Chicago has said it somewhat differently: "Our educational system has taught the tricks of the trade, but not the capacity to think or to make moral judgments."

IF TO CALL PEOPLE religious illiterates seems harsh, every parson will agree that the religion of all too many good folks is tragically immature and confused. This is the reason it breaks and is powerless to help them in time of crisis.

We have been like the pagan Isaiah describes. "He goes out into the woods and cuts down a tree. He hauls it home and there cuts it into smaller pieces. Some of them he uses to heat his house. Some he uses to cook his roast. Other pieces his wife uses to bake bread in the oven. . . . And with the residue he makes himself a god to whom he prays."

We have worshiped "god the residue". The results have been as religiously unsatisfying today as they were 3000 years ago when Isaiah concluded with these words: "Such feed their souls on ashes."

Among these ashes the minister of God must find the divine spark and bring it into glowing flame. He must teach His people to know the living fire of the Holy Spirit of God.

The necessity for this ought to weigh upon the heart of every minister each day as he awakens; every time he enters the pulpit; each occasion on which he stands before the Altar of God. There are young men in our congregations today going out never to return. There are families burdened with problems of loneliness and grief, of sorrow and strain. There are minds tortured by piercing questions. There are hungry hearts asking, "What must I do?"

Let him who will waste his ministry in promoting the Church's bureaucracy. Let him who will be concerned with the niceties of ecclesiastical millinery. Let him who will get wrought up over either sub-Roman or super-Methodist ritual. Let him who will dare stand in the pulpit and mouth nice pious Pollyanna generalities.

We are ordained to teach the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ! It isn't the Episcopal Church that will save the world. It is the Lord God omnipotent! As Stanley Jones so frequently says, "We are not the issue! He is!"

In your ministry, teach Him! Teach your people to love Him thru worship. Teach them to serve Him in their corporate parish life. Teach them to understand Him by your preaching. Teach them to mold their lives into His likeness by your pastoral work. Always teach Him who came to "Cast fire upon the earth".

But do not teach as in a class-room! You must teach with a sense of concern that our Church has all too much lost. We who are the children of this Hill owe a deep debt to the evengelical tradition. An important part of that tradition was a concern for souls, a sense of spiritual adventure, a crusading for souls that has almost burned out in the Church. A member of my parish whose father was a clergyman of the Church said to me, "I can remember how father used to yearn and pray and suffer over those he thought of as lost souls."

TODAY WE CALL UPON world leaders to be daring and courageous, but we are cowardly and expedient. We ask the nation to view the globe as "one world", but we ourselves are timid and apolgetic about Christian unity. We talk of the need for world fellowship, and quibble about our picayune gifts to missions.

Dr. Wm. Hudnut says that as realists we ought to revise "Onward Christian Soldiers." He suggests these lines:

Like a halting caravan
  Moves the Church of Christ
We are feebly faltering
  Toward our timid tryst
We are all divided
  Many bodies we Kept apart by doctrine
  And lack of charity
Careful, Christian pilgrims!
  Walk in doubt and fear
With the Cross of Jesus
  Bringing up the rear!

WE SNEER AT the so-called "fanatic fringe" of Christianity, but these Pentecostal sects and gospel halls have a concern for souls our ministry has largely lost.

Is this because we ourselves have failed to remain teachable? One of the professional temptations of the ministry is arrogance. Woe unto us if as in the days of Jeremiah "the priests bear rule by their means."

It is hard for one who is constantly teaching others to remain teachable himself. If we teach with any authority—and what other teaching has any value?—that very fact tends to clothe us in a shell as protective as that of the tortoise. Like the tortoise, teachers tend to become hard-shelled and slow-moving.

The only way we can remain teachable is by staying close to the Christ whom we proclaim. He is the Vine, and except we abide in Him we cannot bear fruit.

In "Old Jules", Marie Sandoz' biography of her pioneer father, she tells how he taught his neighbors a lesson in horticulture. He took two bundles of cuttings from the same fruit trees. One bundle he carefully grafted on an apple three. The other bundle he equally carefully tied on the trunk of the apple tree with a cord. It is obvious what happened. Those tied on died. The others, as the life of the tree flowed into them, lived and grew.

You are not being tied on to the trunk of the Church this morning, my brethren. You are being grafted into the life blood of the Lord Jesus. May you remain in that life-giving relationship thruout your ministry.

It will not be easy. It will call for repeated rededication. It will ask many sacrifices. But if you are faithful, you may well help open the door to that new world of which men are dreaming today.

Perhaps you have read T. S. Eliott's "Murder in the Cathedral," the story of Thomas A. Becket. You will then recall that dramatic scene in which the Archbishop speaks to his clergy who are trying to save his life by barricading the doors of the Cathedral against his enemies. A Becket speaks:

"Peace! Be quiet! Remember where you are and what is happening.
No life here is sought for but mine,
And I am not in danger: only near to death.

Unbar the doors! Throw open the doors!
I will not have the house of prayer, the Church of Christ
The sanctuary turned into a fortress.
The Church shall protect her own in her own way—not
As oak and stone. Stone and oak decay
Give no stay. But the Church shall endure!
The Church shall be open even to onr enemies!
We are not here to triumph by fighting, by stratagem or by resistance.
Not to fight with beasts as men. We have fought the beast
And have conquered. We have only to conquer
Now by suffering.
This is the triumph of the Cross.
Open the door! I command it! Open the door!"

You too are not to triumph by shrewd strategy, by resistance. You are to take up the Cross of the Lord today and triumph in and thru Him.

May you ever be faithful. May your ministry open many doors in this world of chaos to Christ.

Then perhaps some day, you will have the great blessedness of knowing that in the place where you ministered, "the disciples were called Christians!"

LIFE'S UNANSWERED QUESTIONS. By Harold Cooke Phillips. Harpers. $1.50.

This book is based upon eternal questions found in the Bible: "Can Ye Not Discern the Signs of the Times?" "Where Art Thou?" "Canst Thou by Searching Find Out God?" "Why Seek Ye the Living Among the Dead?" and so on. To sixteen of these questions, Dr. Phillips addresses this book of sermons. These sermons are longer and more developed than most, and they have a fullness about them that makes for good reading, although they would have to be cut to be used by a lay-reader in the Episcopal Church.

DREAMS COME TRUE. By Charles R. Brown. Macmillan. $1.50.

Dean Emeritus Brown of Yale is still one of the master preachers of America, as this book of twelve sermons abundantly proves. The grasp of Biblical exposition, closely related to modern human situations, with God's truth illuminating tomorrow's decisions—this mixture makes good preaching and good reading. Lay-readers take notice.

ISAIAH

THE MESSAGE OF GOD'S HOLINESS

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

OF ORDINARY PEOPLE there are born not a few: genius is born into the world scarcely once in a generation. Isaiah was a genius.

In the first place, Isaiah was a statesman. Always near the center of authority in the Kingdom of Judah after his rise to prominence, he was the adviser of four kings; and had they always taken the advice he gave them, Jerusalem would have been saved much grief. He was one of those rare creatures, a strictly practical prophet. He always spoke to the problem in hand; and he always spoke with due regard to the world as it is, not losing himself in hazy visions of the world as it ought to be. Yet he never compromised his belief. He knew the world of his day, and the people of his day; and because he knew them, he knew with considerable accuracy what they were going to do.

Isaiah arrived at that knowledge through great pain and trouble of mind and of spirit. And he continued to grow, mentally and spiritually, throughout his whole life.

Because Isaiah was one of the world's great masters of the written word, he has left us a magnificent account of himself, of the problems he faced, of the world in his day, and of the people in it. And he gave to the world the first considered statement of what the theologians of today would call the "otherness," the "apartness," of God. The Christian Church has a more familiar word for it. We call it "the revelation of God's HOLINESS."

The idea that God is holy was not new in Isaiah's day. It went all the way back to Moses; but Isaiah saw in it a new meaning,—a meaning which has been carried over into the New Testament, and which finds its place in the Lord's Prayer,—"Our Father who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy Name!" There is no more important teaching than this in our Revelation, for men are not apt to rise higher than their idea of God.

As Isaiah's life began to ripen he saw with increasing clearness that Jerusalem was going to be destroyed,—not so much because of the wrath of God, but because the kings of Judah and their people were trying to build the kind of Kingdom in which God was not interested. That was a tremendous discovery, but Isaiah could not tell it to anybody in his day, because they simply would not have believed him.

WHAT KIND OF KINGDOM did God want? Isaiah was not sure he knew; but one thing he did know,—it was not the kind of Kingdom the Kings of Judah and their people were building! And out of this Isaiah discovered a curious truth, that a man may be tremendously religious, and zealous for the faith that is in him, and at the same time, wrong; and that his religion, and his zeal, will not save if he is wrong. Jeremiah had to face that same problem a generation or so later, and he had to face it in terrible form. And the Lord Jesus had to face it when He met the hard and mistaken zeal of the Pharisees,—in this same Jerusalem,—and said to them, "Have you not heard that it was written, 'The zeal of thine House hath eaten me up.' "

Jerusalem was going to be destroyed. And Isaiah was a practical man. So he set himself to do something about it. He could not turn the nation, but he could turn a small group in it. And he trusted that this small group, holding to the ideals which he had set, and following what he had taught them, would be the "righteous remnant" that would come through the destruction and the terror, and re-establish the Kingdom,—the true Kingdom,—the Kingdom that God really wants.

Thus we see that the idea of the Church,—the righteous minority" in the midst of a pagan world, destined one day to save the world,—first came to birth in the mind and heart of Isaiah. Isaiah's "righteous remnant" saved Israel through the Exile that he foresaw and expected. And this was one of the chief threads picked up from the Old Testament by the Lord Jesus. His followers were to be "in the world, but not of it",—a "righteous minority" in a pagan world, destined to save the world. Seven hundred and forty years before Christ was born, we begin to find these strong threads which were woven into the New Testament and its Gospel.

NOW,—I SHOULD LIKE to spend the rest of my time with you this week, talking,—not about Isaiah's message, for that is in the Bible, and you may read it for yourself;—but about what made him, what went into the making of a man like that.

The key to the man's life is found in his own account of his call, which is in chapter six. The first five chapters are a sort of preface to the book, written by the prophet at the end of his long life, and put where it is, when he gathered his works for publication. The man himself first steps on the scene of history with the story of his call.

Isaiah begins his own account of his call to be a prophet of the Almighty, with the words,—"In the year in which King Uzziah died—." Now, that was more than a date! For the young prophet, it marked an epoch, the turning point in his life, and in the life of his nation!

Who was this King Uzziah? He was the most commanding, the most dominant, the most successful monarch to sit on the throne in Jerusalem in all the centuries since Solomon.

Most of the time since Solomon's glory in Jerusalem, the life of the Southern Kingdom of Judah was bound in shallows and miseries. The hard task of rebuilding the nation's prestige had been begun by Uzziah's father. He had fought his way through the desert, southward, and had re-opened King Solomon's copper mines; and had begun to rebuild King Solomon's port town,—Elath,—on the Red Sea,—the port through which the riches of Africa, and of the East had flowed into King Solomon's treasury, at Jerusalem.

WHEN UZZIAH CAME to the throne, he was sixteen years old. His Kingdom was scarcely larger than Baltimore and Harford Counties. It had one city, Jerusalem, and twenty or thirty villages, without walls for their defense. But Uzziah was a worker, and his father had laid down a good plan. The young king knew how to fight. He was an organizer. He built up an army,—small, but tough; and soon his encroaching neighbors felt the strength of it.

The desert tribesmen made a raid on his copper mine. He pursued them, caught them, defeated them.

Juvenile Delinquency from the Scottish Angle

We are sometimes prone to think that our local problems and difficulties exceed those of our neighbors in other parts of the world. We have a problem in juvenile delinquency. It is not confined to one section of the country. It is nationwide. It is a serious problem. We are not going to discuss the many reasons for the rise in juvenile delinquency. Those reasons vary from section to section of the country. We all know the problem exists. We thought it might encourage some of us to see that our neighbors in other parts of the world are facing this same difficulty. "Misery loves company!"

We pass on to you a part of a report given by the Social Service Board, before the Representative Church Council at their meeting in Edinburgh, Scotland, on May 10th last. This Council is the highest governing body of the Episcopal Church in Scotland.

Dr. E. W. M. Balfour-Melville, the chairman of the Social Service Board, speaking under the topic "Youth-Welfare Work'," said, "Young people should not be encouraged into thinking that they were going to get everything for nothing; that probably young people from 15 to 18 years of age were about the richest in the country today. Personally he knew of one boy of fifteen who was earning over three pounds a week, and he had no doubt other members of the council could give more striking instances of the "new rich." "Youth Today," proceeded the speaker, is under a searchlight. We are told again and again that this is the age of youth, and that the future is with them, and so on. That may be quite true, but certain it is, that under the searchlight, the youth of today does not come out so very well, because, as most of you know, a great deal has been said about juvenile delinquency. Within the last six months a conference was convened by the Secretary of State for Scotland. It was held in Edinburgh and the Churches were represented. The position today was somewhat criticized and it was represented that juvenile delinquency was largely a religious problem. It seems to me that in the narrower sense it is a moral problem. I have had some experience of voluntary probation work over a period of from fifteen to twenty years, and comparing notes with other people, I have come to the opinion that one of the largest causes of juvenile delinquency is due to broken homes. The real and fundamental reasons for juvenile delinquency are to be found in these broken homes I have referred to, where one or other of the parents has deserted, where in the home tie, there is no Christian field of marriage, and no proper sense of parental responsibility. It might be that the State through education and in other ways can accomplish much, but the State must never be allowed to supplant family life. It seems to me that the Church must be wary and watchful and we must look critically at any extension of state action where youth and the children are concerned."

There is much food for thought in this statement of our Scoth brethren. The Christian ideal of the family is the crux to the whole problem of juvenile delinquency. The State has its part to play, but the State without the moral and spiritual influence of the Church is powerless. This is true in Scotland and it is just as true in the United States of America.

Thedore Bubose Bratton

The retired Bishop of Mississippi, Dr. Theodore Dubose Bratton, whose death occurred a few weeks ago, was one of the great leaders of the Church. Beloved by his fellow bishops and the clergy and laity of his diocese, he was likewise held in high esteem by his Christian brethren of other denominations.

Bishop of a diocese, largely rural and one that still felt the pressure of a pattern of life that has long ceased to exist in other parts of the South, Bishop Bratton was a fearless and courageous leader in the field of better race relations. We quote from an editorial in the Jackson Daily News of June 28th.

"He was keenly interested in the spiritual welfare of the Negro race and among the membership of the Negro mission churches he founded in Vicksburg and Jackson will be found some of the finest Negroes in our commonwealth."

The South can ill afford to lose at this time such fearless leaders. Though he had retired, Bishop Bratton had continued a deep interest in all the social problems of his adopted state. We believe that the continuing influence of this Christian leader will be felt, in the field of better race relations, not only in the State of Mississippi, but throughout the whole South. To this problem Bishop Bratton brought the courage of honest Christian conviction.

The esteem with which he was held is attested to by the two-column editorial in the Jackson Daily News, quoted above. The real strength of the man lay in his gentleness. As this editor writes: "Gentle of voice, gentle of manner, gentle in preaching and teaching, Bishop Bratton was truly an ideal servant of God and Christian gentleman—a gentleman by birth, by choice, by training, by instinct—a nobleman richly endowed with all the qualities of heart and mind that inspire love and veneration among fellow beings."

This is a beautiful tribute, richly deserved. Theodore Dubose Bratton, God's noble soldier, has heard in reality the gentle voice of One saying to him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

He burned up their tents, and killed their men, and took their cattle, and their sheep, and their camels for his own, and their women and children for his slaves. And the desert tribesmen raided him no more.

The men of the ancient Philistine cities, on the rich coastal plain, laughed at his envoys who came down from the hill country to reassert the authority of King Solomon's successor, and to collect the tribute money, —an authority which had long since lapsed, and a tribute which had not been paid for many years. They regretted their refusal. Uzziah's tough little army breached the walls of their cities. And he confiscated their treasures, laid a heavy ransom on their wealthy men, and planted a dozen Jewish colonies in their land.

Uzziah built a navy, to operate on the Red Sea. His miners were digging copper out of the hills, and he had a big smelter going at Elath, ruins of which may be seen there to this day. Copper, smelted at Elath, went out in the ships for trade, and soon the ships were coming back, from Sheba, which is at the end of the Arabian peninsula; and from Ophir, where gold is found; and from the far away tropic coast of Africa; and even from India and the East. Soon traders were bringing back apes and ostrich feathers, peacocks and ivory, silks and spicy woods and slaves for the enrichment of the king who sat on David's throne in Jerusalem.

JERUSALEM BEGAN to look up, and to lift up her head. And her larger neighbors in the north began to be jealous. Samaria was very prosperous and strong, just then,—and Damascus was under the thumb of Samaria. King Jeroboam II was not averse to picking up a little loot in Jerusalem, if it could be had easily. But he was growing old, and he did not want a hard war. When he made a motion in the direction of Judah, he discovered that Uzziah was already ahead of him. His seasoned fighting men, no longer just a small group, were already massed on the borders of the Northern Kingdom, waiting. The King of Samaria changed his mind.

King Uzziah was not only a good soldier, and a good builder,—he was a good farmer. He loved husbandry, and he workekd his little kingdom like a garden. He had thousands of cattle on the hillsides which were his own,—and if a man did not take care of his farm, Uzziah warned him; and if he paid no heed the king took the farm away, and gave it to someone who would take care of it.

And he made the villages take care of themselves, and fortify themselves against invasion. By the time he died he had put walls around forty-six little towns in his kingdom, thus making them into forts. He had the nation hard at work; and he reigned fifty-two years in Jerusalem. In that time many changes were made,—and some of them were in the people, and some of them were in the king himself.

Now, what was behind all this? Here was a man who was lifting himself and his nation by the boot-straps! A hard, dominant personality, naturally,—a man born for leadership,—but what was inspiring him? This! Uzziah was possessed by the religious conviction that he must restore the kingdom, and the power, and the glory to Jerusalem. Ever since the division of the Kingdom, and the abasement of Jerusalem, there had been a deep and underlying sense of shame, and of frustration among those people. Jerusalem was David's city! Its Temple was God's true home! Yet ten of Israel's twelve tribes had deserted it! And there grew up in Judah a deep-seated conviction,—a religious conviction,—that this was a punishment upon Jerusalem for the sins of Rehoboam, Solomon's son, and,—perhaps,—for the sins of Solomon himself,—at at least for the idolatry of his foreign wives. And there was the passionate belief that God's anger would not,—could not last forever,—and that some day He would restore the whole Kingdom to a Son of David, in Jerusalem. This was the beginning, —the very beginning,—of the great and enduring hope for the "Messiah" in Jewish hearts.

King Uzziah wanted to be that "Restoring Monarch." He was filled with the religious conviction that he was building God's Kingdom; and that he must build it! He was a Son of David! He was restoring God's Domain!

And Uzziah carried the people with him. They caught his vision. The miserably poor little Kingdom began to grow rich under this zealous care. Land owners bought slaves, and did less and less of the work themselves. Their children did none at all. Merchants built fine winter houses in the city and summer houses in the hills. They began to ape the manners of the rich land-owners and nobles in Samaria who had been wealthy for three generations. They decorated their houses with gold-leaf and rode through the streets in ivory chairs, borne upon the shoulders of their slaves. They were enjoying their new prosperity; this, they were convinced, was but a foretaste of God's "Messianic Kingdom." This was what God had brought them out of Egypt to enjoy! And when the Kingdom should be fully restored, north and south one kingdom again, centered at Jerusalem, that glorious Kingdom would be but an intensification of this!

But what of the slaves? What of the sons of Israel who were enslaved? What of the poor who had nothing ahead of them but slavery? And what of the great and seething nations of the Gentiles, lying in the shadowy depths beyond the borders of Palestine? Nobody thought of them!

OUTDOORS WITH GOD

By T. O. Chisholm

I love to roam the fields with God,
Beneath the blue of summer skies;
What myriad forms of life are there,
On which to feast my wond'ring eyes!
And all in unison proclaim
Their God and mine to be the same.

I love to take a walk with God,
At morn, along the garden path,—
Each bud and leaf, each spear of grass,
Still dripping in its dewey bath.
While drinking in the lovely view,
I think how God loves beauty, too.

I love to tramp the woods with God,
Where stately trees their leafage spread
To form a curtain 'round about,
An em'rald canopy o'erhead;
Shut in with Him, I kneel in pray'r,
Find blessed sanctuary there.

I love to spend a while with God,
Outdoors, beneath the quiet stars;
Hold sacred fellowship with Him,
Feel soul-uplift, surcease from cares;
This world recedes, "that world" seems nigh;
We two alone—just God and I.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Motion Picture Film Available

Will Be Part of the Fall Campaign Material for Use in Every Diocese

New York, N. Y.—A motion picture film now in preparation will be part of the Fall Campaign material available for use in every diocese and district throughout the Church.

It is a professional film made in Hollywood, production by Cathedral Films, outstanding in the religious film production field, and, while it is expected to be of the greatest value in helping the Every Member Canvass, it contains no direct reference to the Canvass, nor to any church or any clergyman.

The locale is the Southern Pacific, and the film shows how seed sown by devoted missionaries has flowered in the lives of Christian natives, who have been ministers of mercy to many of our men in uniform.

The film title is "Sometimes We Receive," which keys in with the printed Canvass material now being prepared. It will be available on September 1, and is 16mm. sound film, black and white; one reel only, requiring about ten minutes to show.

Each diocese will be given the opportunity to buy at cost of print only, as many prints as are necessary to show the picture in every parish and mission during the 30-day period preceding the Canvass.

The film is to be used, in every instance, in conjunction with a speaker, whose address should follow the picture immediately. Suggested text for an address is provided.

The purpose of the film is explained at Church Missions House as being "to show some of the reasons why we should support the work of the Church in all fields; and to do this so convincingly that both the uninterested and the active opponents of missions will be brought to a desire to maintain and expand this effective Christian service."

This is the first film of its kind ever to be made for Episcopal Church purposes, and many dioceses have already expressed their interest and intention to use it in their Fall Campaigns.

THE EXECUTIVE BOARD IS REORGANIZED

Roanoke, Va.—Under its rotation system the terms of four members of the Executive Board of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia expired at the time of the annual Council of the diocese in May and, since diocesan canons forbid reelection within a year, four new members were elected in their places.

The Diocesan Council at its recent session adopted a canonical amendment providing that hereafter the President of the Laymen's League of the Diocese will be ex-officio a member of the Executive Board as is the President of the Woman's Auxiliary. However, the present President of the Laymen's League is Mr. James J. Izard and he is already one of the elected members of the Executive Board.

In a meeting of the Board on July 6, the Bishop announced his appointment of the members of the several departments of the Executive Board as at present constituted. Persons from outside the Board were then elected associate members of two of the departments.

The Executive Board adopted a Missionary Program for 1945 in the sum of $36,116. This figure will be the goal in the Every Member Canvass in the diocese in the coming fall and includes $12,000 for the missionary work of the General Church, $250 for the Theological Seminary in Virginia and $23,866 for missionary work within the diocese and contributions to St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute at Lawrenceville, Va., and to Religious and Educational Work in State Institutions.

STUDIES AGRICULTURE

Rev. Ralph Webster Leaves for Mission in Puerto Rico

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Ralph K. Webster, who has been adding some special study in agriculture to his preparation for work at the Church's mission and farm school at Quebrada Limon, Puerto Rico, has left for his new field. Temporarily he will be stationed at St. Andrew's Mission, Mayaguez, but he hopes to proceed in the near future with the agricultural development which Bishop Charles Colmore has long planned and desired at Quebrada Limon. Mr. Webster worked in Puerto Rico for some months before entering General Theological Seminary. He graduated from Hobart College in 1940, from the Seminary in 1943, spent the winter of '43 studying at Cornell, and since then has been teaching at Christ School, Arden, N. C. He was ordained priest last October.

The work at Quebrada Limon has a great potential value for the whole island as authorities agree that nothing is more basic for the relief of Puerto Rico's special problems of seasonal employment and undernourishment than the development of diversified subsistence farming. Children of the Church throughout the United States are interested in the work at Quebrada Limon as it was the objective of a recent annual Birthday Thank Offering. Among the equipment and resources Mr. Webster is taking with him is a gift of forty-two cents from the kindergarten of Christ Church, Corning, where he was baptized and confirmed and where he assisted during his diaconate.

Mrs. Webster will join her husband in Puerto Rico shortly.

Chaplain's Report To Commission

Like the Housewife, Work is Never Done

Boston, Mass.—"The work is more rugged and this kind of warfare takes everything I have even to keep up with the men," reports Chaplain Joseph T. Walker to the Army and Navy Commission. "But I love it," he continued, "and the genuine support I receive is sometimes even a little embarrassing. The one man whom the men respect above anyone else, the one man for whom they will do anything, is the Chaplain. They do everything they can for my comfort and seem to feel a great confidence when the Chaplain is around. Sometimes after a long, treacherous hike in the blackness of the night, over mountains, through fields, across rivers, climbing over blown-up bridges, being wet and getting dry several times (I mean letting the clothes dry on us) added to all this, the tension caused by enemy shelling and the constant alertness watching for trip wires or booby traps; then seeing one or more of our men wounded by these various means, attending to their spiritual needs and catching up with the column again; when daylight comes and we have a rest or time out to eat cold C rations, the men will look to me and ask for one of those grand big smiles.' I am not sentimental, but as I reflect this happening so many times, that tired and wet and sleepy though I may be, a smile from me brings such cheer and confidence to the men, I humbly thank God for the privilege to serve in whatever way I can."

"Like the housewife, the Chaplain's work is never done," Chaplain Walker concludes. "He trains with the men, he cares for the men during their rest periods and then he conducts services. In battle he hikes with the troops, cares for the wounded at First Aid Stations, goes out to assist in picking up and burying the dead which often must be done at night, and when there is a lull in the battle this is continued for both our own and the enemy. As soon as this is accomplished he then has to take services and for the most part these have to be little isolated groups to prevent unnecessary crowding and attracting the enemy's observatioon. This means that he must take many times the number of services than when the entire group can be assembled.

"Of the 22 Chaplains that formed the original Division Group in February, 1941, only the Division Chaplain and myself remain. Two have been killed by booby traps recovering bodies, three others transferred for reasons of their own.

"And my thankful feelings for all that Bishop Sherrill, Dean Washburn and the rest of the Commission has done and is doing for me and for all Chaplains.

Reports On Combat Experience

Boston, Mass.—Chaplain Robert C. Smith, SSJE, reported to the Army and Navy Commission on his first actual combat experiences. "I find it to contain difficult, sad and exciting aspects," he said. "The difficulty of it all is enhanced in this theater of operations by the terrific heat and torrential rains. Sleeping in a foxhole is wholly unlike a night's rest on an innerspring mattress and the noise of artillery fire is not a restful lullaby.

"Last Sunday I celebrated on a ration box and my assistant made a Cross of two sticks. Somehow I felt the Presence of Our Lord more closely than on some other occasions with all the usual 'trappings'.

"Attendance at services is increasing. Men seem to think more seriously here. At services I have observed their expressions of reverence and gravity as the issue of life and death is so graphically brought before one in war."

35TH ANNUAL CONFERENCE ST. AUGUSTINE'S COLLEGE

Raleigh, N. C.—More than 150 delegates and leaders, representing the states of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Ohio, Tennessee, Arkansas and Texas, and from 19 dioceses of the Episcopal Church, attended the 35th annual St. Augustine's Conference for Church Workers, held at St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, May 29 through June 2. Registration included 39 clergymen and 52 delegates to the young people's division.

The general theme of the conference, "Life in the Christian Community," was carried out through a special lecture course of the same title, given for the entire conference by the Rev. D. A. McGregor, Ph. D., executive secretary of the Division of Christian Education of the Church's National Council, and was the basis of the special courses offered for clergymen, laymen, women, and young people and youth workers.

Among the distinguished leaders and specialists on the conference faculty were: The Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, D. D., bishop of North Carolina, and the Rev. Bravid W. Harris, national secretary for Negro Work, Parish Organization and Program; Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins, Division of Christian Education of the National Council, Religious Education; Miss Edna B. Beardsley, associate secretary, national Woman's Auxiliary, "Today's Vocation for Women"; Rev. John M. Burgess, rector of the Church of St. Simon of Cyrene, Lockland, Ohio, and member of the Youth Commission, Youth Program; Dr. Preston C. Johnson, Virginia State College, "The Layman's Viewpoint,,; Dr. Beverly M. Boyd, rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, Va., and representative of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, Group Relationships; Prof. Theodore C. Mayo, director of music, St. Augustine's College, church music and group singing; Mrs. F. J. Carnage, director of the Tuttle Community Center, Raleigh, "Practical Problems in Youth Work."

The conference is sponsored jointly by St. Augustine's College and the American Church Institute for Negroes.

Liberty Ship Honors Bishop

Bishop Gray, South Florida's Great Missionary Leader, Has Liberty Ship Named In His Honor

Jacksonville, Fla.—Honoring William Crane Gray, first Bishop of the Missionary Jurisdiction of Southern Florida as one of the great missionary leaders, the new Liberty ship launched in Jacksonville on July 12th bears his name. Mrs. Louie W. Strum, wife of Federal Judge Strum, of Jacksonville, and a niece of Bishop Gray, was sponsor, and her sister, Mrs. J. Hilton Holmes was co-sponsor and her daughter, Miss Orphelia Gray Strum, great-niece of Bishop Gray, as maid of honor. Another great-niece, Mrs. Parker Enwright of Orlando, shared the impressive ceremonies. This vessel was the 49th Liberty ship built in the Jacksonville ship yards. One of them was named for Edwin Gardner Weed, Bishop of Florida before the statewide diocese was divided, and continuing his charge of the present Diocese of Florida until his death.

Bishop Arthur Lea, retired, and now acting rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, gave the invocation, and a brief address on Bishop Gray's life and work was given by Hon. Raymond D. Knight, formerly chancellor of Florida, who was a classmate and fraternity brother of Bishop Gray's son, the late Bishop Campbell Gray, when attending the University of the South. Born in Lambertville, N. J., September 6, 1835, Bishop Gray was rector of the Church of the Advent, Nashville, Tenn., when elected bishop of the newly formed missionary jurisdiction of South Florida in October, 1892, was consecrated in his parish church on December 29 and took charge of his pioneer field on January 5, 1893, giving himself with self-sacrificing zeal and boundless devotion for 21 years to upbuild the Church in what was then an undeveloped region.

With autos and good roads alike unknown, a few railroads and few trains, Bishop Gray's constant travel included use of mail wagons, stage, oxcart, horse and buggy, horseback and bicycle, steamer, rowboat and sailboat, with often long tramps on foot, his diary giving various hardships with no word of complaint. He ministered to all within his reach, without regard to race or creed and was beloved wherever known. He made difficult trips into the Everglades to help the Seminoles and was said to be the first white man ever admitted to their sacred feast, the Green Corn Dance. In 1900 he founded the Cathedral School for Girls, Orlando, Fla., a venture of faith which he nurtured through its early years, and which continues to carry his high ideals.

Feeling that a younger man was needed to meet the increasing opportunities for the Church amid the rapid increase of population, Bishop Gray resigned in October, 1913. The formal transfer of his work to his successor, Bishop Cameron Mann, was made in the convocation of January, 1914. Bishop Gray and family made their home again in Nashville, where he died in 1919.

Fort Pierce, Fla.—St. Andrew's parish, the Rev. William L. Hargrave, rector, has completed payment of all indebtedness, including a building debt of $1,000, incurred 19 years ago, and making this parish free of debt for the first time since 1925.

Churches Sponsoring Junior Officers' Club

Fort Pierce, Florida—Congregations of the Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist, Jewish, Presbyterian and Christian churches are uniting to sponsor and maintain a Junior Officers' Club for the several hundred young officers of the Army and Navy stationed at the Amphibious Training base nearby. This is a major activity of St. Andrew's parish, one of its laymen (Mr. F. B. Ivey) serving as general chairman of the interchurch committee, while the operating chairman is the rector, Rev. William L. Hargrave. The equipment includes a lounge, writing rooms, pool and ping-pong tables and a canteen for refreshments.

Record Attendance at Camps

South Florida's diocesan camps, held at Camp Wing-Mann, near Avon Park, have each had a record attendance, with keen interest shown. The conference for adult leaders met June 4-10, with Rev. W. Keith Chidester of Winter Park as director and Rev. James Sterling of Gainesville as chaplain. Others on the staff were the Rev. G. W. Gasque of Miami; Rev. Cyril N. Sturiup, Miss Rosalie Winston of Winston-Salem, Miss Avis Harvey, National Educational secretary of the W. A., and Miss Alpha Nash, provincial representative on the National Council. The general theme was "The Church a Living Fellowship."

Camp St. Mary, for younger girls, had more applications than could be accepted, but 96 girls had a happy and helpful camp, June 12-24. Miss Alcesta Tulane was director and the Rev. Mason A. Frazell of Lake Worth was chaplain.

Camp St. Andrew, for small boys, was held June 26-July 8, with Morton O. Nace of Tampa as director and the Rev. William L. Hargrave as chaplain. Camp St. Mark, for the Y. P. S. L., was held July 10-22, with the Rev. Martin J. Bram of Tampa as director.

ST. THOMAS' CHURCH AT ABINGDON IS CONSECRATED

Abingdon, Va.—In the mountains of Virginia, in the old town of Abingdon, is located one of the most beautiful little Episcopal churches in the United States. On December 27, 1924, fire destroyed the little frame church and all its furnishings. The small band of faithful communicants went to work immediately, and, with the aid of the diocese and the American Church Building Fund Commission, soon replaced the frame building with the present beautiful stone church at a cost of $20,000, exclusive of furnishings. The final payment on the indebtedness was made in December, 1943. On Sunday, April 16, 1944, this church was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D. D., bishop of Southwestern Virginia. This was a most impressive service, witnessed by many of the old communicants who had returned for the occasion and by a host of friends who have watched with interest the progress of the church. Clergymen from all the neighboring parishes were present and the ministers from the local Protestant Churches were special guests.

An address was made by the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd, who was rector at the time of the burning of the former church building and the erection of the new one, and by the Rev. John S. Wellford, who succeeded Mr. Boyd. Mr. Boyd spoke most interestingly of the burning of the old church and the construction of the new one. Mr. Wellford spoke of his work as successor to Mr. Boyd, saying, "It was easy enough for Mr. Boyd to build this lovely new church, but my job was getting it paid for, and that was something else again!" Mr. K. P. Birkhead, Warden and Trustee, read the Instrument of Donation. As a fitting climax to the occasion the Rev. M. D. Ashbury, present rector, presented a class of eight candidates for confirmation.

Following the service the ladies of the church served a delicious buffet supper to the congregation at "Mont Calm," the lovely home of Mrs. W. E. Mingea, Sr., on one of the hills overlooking the town of Abingdon.

The Rev. Beverley M. Boyd was rector of St. Thomas' Church from 1924 to 1927. He is now rector of Grace and Holy Trinity Church in Richmond, Virginia. After a vacancy in the rectorship, the Rev. John S. Wellford succeeded Mr. Boyd and served from 1928 to 1937. The Rev. Albert E. Sanderson followed Mr. Wellford at Abingdon and served from 1938 to 1941, at which time he transferred to the Diocese of Washington. In May, 1942, the present rector, the Rev. Maurice D. Ashbury, took charge.

EAST CAROLINA
Sixty-First Annual Convention

Washington, N. C.—Addressing the 61st annual convention of the Diocese of East Carolina in St. Peter's Church and the 30th over which he has presided, Bishop Thomas C. Darst of Wilmington reviewed the accomplishments of the church during the year just past, the opportunities for greater service in the year ahead and urged a "reconsecration of all our powers to the service of God."

"Our soldiers and sailors and airmen, our sons and daughters who are representing us in this mighty struggle for the preservation of a decent world, must find God in the churches and in our lives when they come home," he said.

Bishop Darst voiced his deep and humble gratitude to the clergy and people "for their kindness and tender solicitude during my long and trying illness" and placed in the permanent records "my heartfelt thanks to my brother bishops (Penick, Gribbin, Jett and Littell), who so gladly and willingly came to my assistance."

Churches Established, Built, Repaired

He mentioned new churches established, others soon to be built, still others repaired and announced that the diocesan debt had been discharged. He spoke of the expanding service of churches in military areas and the demands upon the clergy because of the inroads upon its ranks for chaplains.

He commended the services of the Rev. W. R. Noe, who added many of the Bishop's duties to his regular work as executive secretary, treasurer, secretary of the convention and editor of The Mission Herald, besides conducting regular services at several missions and churches.

He praised the progress of Negro churches in the diocese and expressed confidence of greater progress in them.

His annual address closed with an earnest plea for the sound and right improvement of the opportunities that peace will bring. "At the close of the war," he declared, "the United States will stand as the most powerful, the most influential and possibly, unless our leaders are very wise, the most feared nation in all the earth. The Church of the living God must play its fine, constructive part in seeing that the power of our nation shall be beneficent and that its mighty influence shall be exerted for the good of the world.

"There is truly a great day ahead for men who sense their responsibilities as sons of God, for men who believe that the program of Jesus is the only foundation on which we can build a decent world. Our vision must be the vision of a new world wherein righteousness shall be perfectly at home—a world of men of one blood, heirs of a common heritage, united in a common task, brothers in spite of race or clime, because the vision of Jesus has been realized in the world-wide acceptance of the sovereignty of the God and Father of us all."

The Rev. Israel Harding Hughes, Chaplain of St. Mary's School, presented the report of the school and stated that St. Mary's was now trying to raise $500,000 for necessary repairs and equipment. The Rev. E. F. Moseley, chairman of the Department of Christian Education, moved that the plan for raising this fund be endorsed and this was adopted.

The report of the Thompson Orphanage and Training Institute was presented by the Rev. John G. Grainger, a member of the Board of Trustees. He stated that the Orphanage would like to raise $50,000 for its work, and, on motion, this was approved.

Thirtieth Anniversary Will Be Celebrated

The Bishop was authorized to appoint a committee to make arrangements for the meeting of the Convention in 1945, when the thirtieth anniversary of the Bishop will be celebrated.

The Rector of Christ Church, New Bern, invited the Convention to meet there in 1945, and this was accepted.

After a statement by the Bishop in regard to his future plans, a resolution offered by Mr. F. F. Fagan of Christ Church, New Bern, was adopted unanimously by a rising vote as follows:

Resolved, That we have been deeply impressed by the statement of our beloved Bishop of his intention to retire on his thirtieth anniversary as Bishop of this diocese, should his doctor advise such action, and that it is the earnest desire and prayer of this Convention that he will be so greatly improved in health by next January, that he will be able to continue his active services to this diocese which have been so faithfully and lovingly performed during the past thirty years.

THE CHURCH PENSION FUND WAR LOAN BONDS

New York, N. Y.—Subscriptions to the Fifth War Loan in the amount of $1,445,000 have been made by The Church Pension Fund and its Affiliates of the Protestant Episcopal Church, it is reported by Charles D. Dickey, Treasurer of the Fund. This brings the total purchases of these organizations of the Church in the various War Loan Bonds up to $8,630,000.

DR. FRANKLIN REPORTS ON VISIT TO CUBA

New York, N. Y.—Dr. Lewis B. Franklin, treasurer of the National Council, has returned from his visit to Cuba, where he spent about ten days. He reports that there is an almost unlimited opportunity for the Episcopal Church in that country.

As a result of newly enacted laws which restrict foreigners in the holding of jobs, the work among American and English citizens is not likely to show any growth and there seems to be no need for an increase in the number of American clergy, now limited to Bishop Blankingship, Dean Gooden and Archdeacon Townsend.

Work among about 50,000 West Indian Negroes is active. Many of these people have been brought up in the Church of England and the Episcopal Church has a real responsibility for them.

The most important work is that among the Cubans and many growing and enthusiastic congregations have been organized. The chief need is for an increase in the native ministry and for modest churches, parish halls and rectories.

Dr. Franklin will submit a formal report on various financial matters to the National Council at its October meeting.

BISHOP BEAL ATTENDS ENTHRONEMENT

New York, N. Y.—Bishop Harry Beal of the Panama Canal Zone has advised the Overseas Department of the National Council that he took part in the service of enthronement of a new bishop at Belize, British Honduras. The "new bishop" is the Rt. Rev. William James Hughes, bishop of British Honduras. The enthronement took place on St. John's Baptist Day, June 24, in the Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, Belize.

Bishop Beal preached in the Cathedral Sunday morning the 25th, and in St. Mary's Church, Belize, that evening. He was in Belize five days.

TWO NEGRO CHURCHES MERGE
National Council Designates New Church as Birthday Thank Offering Project

Savannah, Ga.—Deeds were recently filed at Chatham County Court House, Savannah, recording the purchase by the Rt. Rev. Middleton S. Barnwell, D. D., bishop of Georgia, of the large lot at the corner of Anderson and West Broad Streets. A Church, parish house, and rectory will be built here to take care of the congregations of St. Stephen's Church and St. Augustine's Mission, the vestries of which have voted to merge to form one large Negro parish, St. Matthew's. Building plans are now being drawn and a campaign is under way to augment the gift from the National Council, and to raise enough to renovate the Christ Church Community House in Augusta, and to build a combined parish house and rectory at Jesup, Georgia.

The National Council has designated the new Negro Church, parish house and rectory as the project for this year's Birthday Thank Offering.

MRS. H. N. MANNEY PASSES IN NORFOLK

Mrs. Mary Wilson Manney, sister of Mrs. L. W. Lane, Jr., died last Saturday morning in a Norfolk hospital following a long illness. She was the wife of Colonel H. N. Manney, Jr., USMC (retired), of Virginia Beach.

Her death brings to a close a promising career in the fine arts. A former student of Miss Glenna M. Latimer, Mrs. Manney's paintings had been accepted for State and national exhibits at the Virginia Museum of Fine Arts.

Mrs. Manney was born in Norfolk, the daughter of the late George W. and Mrs. Ada M. Wilson. She had lived at Virginia Beach for a number of years, attended the Galilee Episcopal Church there, and was a member of the Virginia Beach Garden Club.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Manney is survived by a daughter, Mrs. Camillus A. Nash, III, of Norfolk; a son, H. N. Manney, III, U. S. Army; a granddaughter, Diana Nash; four sisters, Mrs. John W. Oast, Jr., and Mrs. Robert S. Johnston, both of Norfolk; Mrs. Lane and Mrs. Hunter Brown, of Pensacola, Fla.; one brother, Rear Admiral Barry Wilson, USN, and a number of nieces and nephews.

Funeral services and interment were conducted privately Sunday afternoon.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA

Conference of Young People at Hollins

Roanoke, Va.—A successful Conference of the Young People of the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia was held at Hollins College near Roanoke from June 12 to 16, under the leadership of the Rev. Frank V. D. Fortune as Director. Including the faculty and staff there was a total attendance of 204. Forty-two churches in Southwestern Virginia were represented and 15 of the young people came from 4 churches in West Virginia. Other officers assisting the Rev. Mr. Fortune were: The Rev. Dr. Robert A. Magill of St. John's Church, Lynchburg, Assistant Director; the Rev. Dr. Carleton Barnwell of St. Paul's, Lynchburg, Head Counselor; the Rev. Richard H. Lee of Amherst, Chaplain.

Lectures were as follows: "The Doctrine of Man" by Rev. Charles F. Magee of Clifton Forge; "Interracial Understanding" by the Rev. Beverley M. Boyd of Grace and Holy Trinity Church, Richmond, and Dr. Robert A. Magill of St. John's Church, Lynchburg; "The Gospels and the Church" by the Rev. G. Ronald MacClintock of Altavista, the Rev. Maurice D. Ashbury of Bristol, and the Rev. Wilfred E. Roach of Radford; "Lives of Great Christian Witnesses" by the Rev. Edgar T. Ferrell, Jr. of Marion, the Rev. John S. Wellford of Covington, and the Rev. W. Carroll Brooke of Trinity Church, Staunton; "United Movement of the Church's Youth" by the Rev. John F. W. Feild of Christ Church, Roanoke, and the Rev. G. William Beale of Rocky Mount.

The Rt. Rev. Henry D. Phillips, D.D., Bishop of the Diocese, spoke to the Conference on Tuesday evening. Another of the high-lights of the Conference was the banquet on Thursday evening, when a splendid address was made by Lt. Col. Clifford K. Titus, Chaplain and Public Relations Officer at Woodrow Wilson General Army Hospital at Staunton, Virginia. Following this, Miss Elizabeth A. Tice, president of the Young People's Service League of the diocese, presented preacher; and the sermon topic—the

EPISCOPALIANS PLAN SCHOOL FOR YOUNGSTERS

Alexandria, Va.—A new private school for boys from the third through the seventh grade will open here on September 14, the Rev. Edward Tate, rector of Emmanuel Church and headmaster of the school announced today. The school which will be named at the first meeting of the board of directors tomorrow will be sponsored by the Episcopal Church school system of the diocese of Virginia.

The school will be housed in the residence of the late Frank Michelback at 2405 Russell Road where alterations are now being made to provide classrooms and athletic fields.

Filling a widely-recognized need for a private school for grammar school boys, the school will enroll but 70 during the first year, in order to maintain the educational standard for Episcopal schools in the state.

Although the plan calls for a masculine teaching staff for the duration of the war teachers will be women, Mr. Tate stated.

The curriculum will be the same as followed at St. Agnes and the boys now in the third and fourth grades of that school will be transferred to the new school.

The board of directors will elect officers as well as select a name for the new venture.

Church representatives on the board are: Stanley King, St. Paul's Church; Clyde C. Lamond, Christ Church, Charle Pulman, Grace Church; Maj. Allen Chidsey, the Chapel of St. Clement; Comdr. Walter Karig, Seminary Chapel; and Mr. Tate who will represent Emmanuel Church pending appointment of a lay member.

Applications for enrollment will be received at St. Agnes School on Russell Road, or by Mr. Tate at his residence in Presidential Gardens. Mr. Tate stated that 35 applications have already been received.

ST. COLUMB'S CHURCH JACKSON, MISS.

Jackson Miss.—St. Columb's is the work of a strictly rural field. The Bolton field is composed of many missions. In the establishing of St. Columb's, we have this statement to make: A City ished by a Rural Field. The organizer and first priest-in-charge, the Rev. Val H. Cessions, Bolton, Miss., took charge of the work in February, 1941, at the request of the late Bishop William Mercer Green, with the distinct understanding that he would not take it unless it was placed in the Rural Field. There were thirty members in 1941. The Congregation rented a Lutheran church for the afternoon services. In February, 1942, St. Columb's Church-Parish House was opened. It is a large building, the chancel is separated from the rest of the building by walls and across the front by a curtain. When a service is held, the curtain is thrown back and then it is a sanctuary, chancel, nave. But when a party or what-not is held, the curtain is drawn, it is then a parish house. There is a rector's study, a Sunday school and choir room and kitchen in one end, and in the front there is another Sunday school room. The Rev. Dr. Sessions had to retire on account of ill health recently. From February, 1941, to September, 1942, the congregation had grown from 30 members to 195. They had a lovely lot on three streets—money to buy lot was an agreement with the trustees of the diocese concerning another piece of property set aside for St. Columb's to be years ago. There is only a small debt on the building. Less than $3,000.

St. Columb's was a dream of the 2nd Bishop of Mississippi, Bishop H. M. Thompson. A church in West Jackson to be the Cathedral of the Diocese.

The 3rd Bishop of Mississippi also tried again and again to get an organization in West Jackson. The fourth Bishop saw St. Columb's with a congregation standing on its feet, the fruit of the Bolton Field.

When the first rector, the Rev. Dr. Sessions resigned, the Bishop of the Diocese called the Rev. Paul E. Engle to succeed him. Mr. Engle is known over

MATERNITY CENTER STARTED ON SOLOMONS

New York, N. Y.—One of the worst infant mortality rates in the world is that of the Solomon Islands, where the mission doctor and nurses have assessed it at two out of five—400 per 1,000. The mission staff long wanted to do something about this and in 1940, on receiving a grant from the American Church's aid to British Missions, they started a maternity center to train native women for work in the villages to combat the high death rate. This was at Siota, which is normally the "See city" for Bishop W. H. Baddeley and the Diocese of Melanesia.

The center had been at work for eight months, with a nurse and teacher and twenty Melanesian girls, when the approach of war in the Pacific led them to trnsfer it to another island and finally to disperse it, but the nurse and several trainees continued working from a station in the depths of the bush. Siota was so badly bombed that the center will have to be built again, along with the cathedral and much else.

In a recent letter acknowledging the 1944 gift from American Churchmen, Bishop Baddeley writes that the money will be used to equip again and to resume this maternity work on behalf of mothers and babies.

Palm Beach, Fla.—The Rev. Tage Teisen, D. D., rector of Bethesda Parish, gave an encouraging report of parish work and offerings through their season of seven months, which closed the end of May, and stated that the vestry had decided to reopen on October 1, this a month earlier than has been customary During this summer repairs and improvements will be made on the Church building, also the organ will be overhauled and cleaned. Dr. Teisen said that last year this parish gave $5,465.22 for work outside the parish, and this year they gave $7,082.86. The Mite Box offering this year was $1,495.96. The Church School sent two of their teachers to the diocesan adult conference at Camp Wing-Mann, Avon Park, Fla., early in June and has arranged for six young people to attend the diocesan camp for the YPSL in July.

ORDINATIONS

Priests—Deacons

Four men were ordained to the diaconate and one to the priesthood by Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill on July 11 at 10 A. M. in Trinity Church, Boston, Mass. To the priesthood, the Rev. Otto Robert Riemenschneider, presented by the Rev. David W. Norton, Jr., was ordained. Mr. Riemenschneider will continue as curate of St. John's Church, Waterbury, Connecticut, where he went immediately upon his recent graduation from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge. Those ordained to the diaconate and their presenters were: George Keirstead, presented by the Rev. Charles C. Wilson of Cohasset; Allen Floyd Kremer, presented by the Rev. Ivol I. Curtis; Marion Leonidas Mattics, presented by the Rev. Whitney Hale; and Charles Alfred Parmiter, presented by the Rev. Charles F. Lancaster.

Mr. Keirstead became minister-in-charge of Trinity Church, Bridgewater on July 1; Mr. Kremer continues in charge of St. James' Church, West Somerville; Mr. Mattics hopes to do missionary work among the Spanish speaking people of Puerto Rico; Mr. Parmiter will be minister-in-charge of St. Andrew's Church, Framingham—all parishes being in Massachusetts for three of the newly ordained deacons.

The Rev. Dr. Theodore P. Ferris preached the ordination sermon; the Litany, Epistle and Gospel were read respectively by the Rev. Gardner H. Shattuck of Trinity's staff; the Rev. Harold E. Kocher, rector of the Church of the Good Shepherd, East Dedham, and Charles A. Parmiter.

Conrad Myrick was ordained to the diaconate, July 2, 1944, in the Church of the Advent, Birmingham, Ala., by Rt. Rev. C. C. J. Carpenter, bishop of Alabama; the sermon was preached by Bishop Carpenter; the candidate was presented by Rev. John C. Turner, rector; he will continue on the staff of the Church of the Advent.

Mr. Charles Carson Liggett was ordained to the diaconate on Saturday morning, June 10, in St. Stephen's Church, Wilkinsburg, Pa. He was presented by the Rector, the Rev. William Porkess, D. D., he being his sixth man for ordination during the present rectorship. The Bishop of Pittsburgh, the Rt. Rev. Austin Pardue, LL. D., officiated, Mr. Liggett being the first man ordained by him. A large representation of the clergy of the diocese was present, as well as a large congregation of the parishioners. Mr. Liggett is a recent graduate of the General Theological Seminary and will serve his diaconate at St. Luke's Church, Germantown, Pa.

The first ordination service in the more than 300-year history of Varina Church was held at 10 A. M. July 14, when the Rev. A. W. Horstman was ordained into the priesthood.

The celebrant was the Rt. Rev. F. D. Goodwin, bishop of the diocese of Virginia, assisted by the Rt. Rev. W. Roy Mason, bishop coadjutor. The Rev. Dr. Stanley Brown-Serman, of the University of Virginia, delivered the sermon. The Rev. Stamo S. Spathey, former rector of Varina Episcopal Church, read the Litany. The lessons were read by the Rev. Beverly M. Boyd and the Rev. W. Preston Peyton.

Among the visiting Virginia clergymen were the Rev. Dr. John G. Scott, a former rector of the church; the Rev. Fred Warnecke, the Rev. Palmer Campbell, the Rev. Dr. Churchill Gibson, the Rev. John Page Williams, the Rev. Dr. Samuel B. Chilton, and the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan.

Mrs. Charles Evans

Mrs. Charles H. Evans, formerly Miss Lena Thomas, died on July 10, after a long illness, in Claremont, Calif., where she and her husband had been living since his retirement in 1940 after forty-four years' work in Japan. Mrs. Evans was born in Melbourne, Australia, in 1870. She went to school in England but her home was in Tokyo at the time of her marriage in 1896. They had no children.

With her husband, who survives her, Mrs. Evans lived in Tokyo and in three other cities of Japan. Dr. Evans' work on the Tokyo Council of Advice, and as treasurer of the district, deputy to five General Synods of the Japanese Church and editor of the Japanese Church paper for nearly twenty years, gave them both a wide and intimate knowledge.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

The faith to make a dream a living thing;
The worthiness of heart to follow Him;
A gentleness of soul, a spirit meek;
The nobler life. These are the things I seek.

—Christine Lund.

"If we could understand the universe through and through, what a small and meager universe it would have to be!"

"I cannot appropriate the love of God unless I communicate it to someone else."

"All power is given unto Me." That is the claim.

"Go ye into all the world." That is the command.

"Lo, I am with you always." That is the promise.

"As you have faith in God, confidence in Christ, joy in the Holy Spirit, give them away. You will be surprised how much more you will have to give."

Our Christian unity is unbroken even by the tragic fact of widespread war. We cannot too often remind ourselves that those who are in fellowship with the Father and with His Son, Jesus Christ, are in fellowship one with another. That God-created Oneness cannot be ruptured by any human or subhuman powers.—Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke.

If I from my spy-hole, looking with purblind eyes upon a least part of a fraction of the universe, yet perceive in my own destiny some broken evidences of a plan, and some signals of an overruling goodness; shall I then be so mad as to complain that all cannot be deciphered? Shall I not rather wonder, with infinite and grateful surprise, that in so vast a scheme I seem to have been able to read, however little, and that little was encouraging to faith?—Robert Louis Stevenson.

Slowly we are discovering that each of the historic communions has a profound and significant insight; and that the man who has learned the universality of Christ must make all these insights his own, discovering in the great fellowship the riches of grace in Christ Jesus. Such a man is at home in all places where men lift their hands in prayer, and he belongs to all churches, so far as they keep that precious thing which is the life of all and the treasure of each.—Dr. Joseph F. Newton.

COINCIDENTS

Mr. Editor:
The Southern Churchman, bearing date
July the 24, received:
My birthday, and I can relate
God's Grace 94 years perceived.

On the front of this number, too,
Is Hymn on Service, and again
Is likeness, for Christ did endue
Me with desire Men's souls to gain.

Brought to the Saviour while a boy,
Led by the Spirit souls to seek,
They did in Sunday School employ
My help, although still young and weak.

In young manhood, lay-preaching gave Me work for Christ, and converts streamed,
I told how Jesus men could save
And pointed to Him Who redeemed.

During the 80 years since then,
When busy duties let me go,
I have sought strayed and sinful men
The Cleansing Blood of Christ to to know.

Now is my 95th year come:
I urge hearers of every kind,
To seek in Jesus their soul's Home,
And teach others that Rest to find.

WILLIAM OLNEY,
Missioner.

AN APPEAL FOR MEMBERS

Mr. Editor:

I should like to call the attention of your readers to the possibility of participating in the work of the Virginia Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

This Commission was started toward the close of World War I. It has been making steady contribution to good relations between the races in Virginia. The policy of the organization is always to keep down friction. It works not by coercion but by understanding. It can build bridges of understanding and establish patterns of action now which will do much to prevent trouble after the war.

The Commission seeks as members citizens of both races, who will commit themselves to support harmonious relationships between the races by seeking to find and spread truth, combat rumors and support orderly movements for more fairness and understanding. Through its state director, the Commission stimulates and coordinates the work of committees and other local groups in the communities of Virginia. These committees work for greater cooperation in terms of the needs and conditions of their own communities.

Members of the Commission pay annual dues of $2.00 as regular members and $5.00 as sustaining members. Twenty-five percent of the dues will be available for local committees. At the present time the Commission needs financial help to meet its budget and additional contributions or emergency memberships ($25.00 dues) are sought from those who can afford them.

Applications for memberships, with checks, should be addressed to Thos. C. Allen, Director, 715 Central National Bank Bldg., Richmond 19, Va. Inquiries are invited and further information about the work of the Commission will be furnished on request

Yours truly,
Chairman.

A Letter From the Orient

Tsingchen, Kweichow,
June 9, 1944.

My dear folks:

By actually getting aboard the Fast Mail on June 2nd at Chungking and continuing my trip after Tsen Yi, I finally completed my grand tour of episcopal visitation according to the schedule laid out and without anything approaching an accident.

My last week in Chungking was a very busy one. On Sunday twelve people were confirmed in the Community Church in the morning. In the afternoon a large number of Boone men gathered for the Archie L. T. Ts'en memorial service. The most striking thing about the service was the way in which every man joined heartily and tunefully in the singing of the hymns. It took one back to Archie's Boone. I have heard that my Buddhist Abbot in Wuchang has died as well as the Taoist friend.

On Monday I went up for the night to I Hsuin and Griffith John. They are at the top of the third ridge on the south bank of Chungking. I was given a royal reception. They feel very much cut off and appreciated to the full my fellowship in going to them. They hope to have the Rev. S. C. Huang go up to baptize some of the students. Several of the students would like to go to Hua Chung, but it is too far away in these days of high costs of transportation. I expect that I will be anchored here at the school for the duration as it is impossible to afford the cost of travel. My friends got me a place to spend the night at the South Bank. The next morning I discovered that this kindness cost me N. C. $330. I would have been willing to stand up during the night for that amount.

Tuesday, I clambered down the mountain by another way to have lunch with Miss Waddington at the Canadian Mission Hospital. It was an extremely hot day. On the way home I called at Li Jui & Sons' office and then home by bus.

Wednesday I married Yen Lo-i to the son of Dr. George Leo, who has for many years carried on a tuberculosis sanatarium in Peiping. It was a very pleasant affair with many young doctors and nurses present and many of the parents' friends. Thursday noon, Michael Liu and Wellington Liu gave a luncheon for the bride and groom and Mrs. Wellington handed me $10,000 which she had collected for Saint Hilda's and which I carried in cash back to the school.

I had been anxious to meet Wilfrid Ling. Wednesday noon Charley Ts'ao invited me to dinner at the Sino-American Club and, just as I was leaving, Wilfrid rushed out to greet me. This made me very happy. At the hos-

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

In our Thursday morning Bible class someone asked this question: "If a husband and wife quarrel, can it harm their little boy on the roof of the house fixing an aerial?" I could not quite "get" the question at first. I thought she meant it figuratively or that the quarreling would be loud enough for the child to hear and would frighten him so he might fall off the roof. But she did not mean that. She meant it literally, that the parents' quarreling, no matter if the child were a thousand miles away, would harm the child at the very moment the words were blistered back and forth. The whole thing seemed rather far-fetched and a bit oldwivesy and I so declared it to her, that this was probably not the exact manner in which the sins of the father and mother were visited upon their sons and daughters—which incidentally had been the general subject under discussion.

I am convinced, however, that a state of tension between father and mother is sensed by the child whether or not the child witnesses the quarrel and hears the words of it. We cannot hide our loveless attitudes towards each other. They show up negatively through indifference and positively through cruelty of one kind or another. In this manner the sins of the parents are visited upon their children through many long years to come. Quarrels and misunderstandings allowed to go on unsettled lead to divorce and broken homes and often irreparable harm to the children.

The point is this: Whenever gaps in the family circle occur, deal with them under God's guidance at once. The way to settling them is open. In the quiet of God's presence we can ask what we should do and if we really want to know, the answer is usually not long in coming.

The hidden hurts of many hearts are kept within for years and the peculiar alchemy of them permeates a home insidiously and produces an intangible atmosphere of unhappiness that keeps everyone in the household at misery-tide.

God is the Divine Confidant and can be trusted with every care. We should not delay uncovering to Him the dark and lonely places of our hearts, especially the unsolved problems of home life that make life more of hell than of heaven.

"Come unto Me all ye that travail and are heavy laden and I will refresh you." (Matthew 11:28.)

"So God loved the world, that He gave His only begotten Son, to the end that all that believe in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3:16.)

In spite of this invitation and this promise, men continue to hug their burdens and refuse to believe enough to let God take them and dispose of them. We want release, we want happiness, we want to come to Him, but not yet sufficiently to move in the direction which leads away from the centered "I" and toward the centered "Thou". In home difficulties, many of long standing, the roots are all embedded in "I" and not "Thou". Just as an inner goitre must be literally torn out by the roots before it ceases to grow and harm, so must the evils that beset us and would destroy both our homes and us.

The First Legislative Assembly in America

JAMESTOWN, 1619

By REV. G. MACLAREN BRYDON

Historiographer Diocese of Virginia

July 30, 1944, will be the 325th anniversary of the convening of the first meeting of the first legislative assembly that ever met in America: the General Assembly of Virginia, which began on July 30, 1619.

As one examines the original records of the settlement of Virginia by the London Company, it is clearly possible to perceive the purpose of the leaders of the Company to establish a self-governing colony in America as an extension of England overseas; and to see the steps by which this plan was put into effect. The legislative assembly which met at Jamestown in 1619 with representatives from eleven separate boroughs or elective districts as its central feature was not the result of a change in plans of the Company or something that had recently been thought into being, but was the culmination of a plan whose first steps were shown in the very beginning of the earliest settlements.

The London Company consisted of a large number of stockholders who under their charter of incorporation elected an executive officer to serve as both Treasurer and President, and an executive committee called the Council which handled the affairs of the corporation between the quarterly meetings, or the Quarterly Courts, of the stockholders. Sir Thomas Smith was the first and for many years the continuing Treasurer and executive officer, and Sir Edwin Sandys was almost from the very beginning a leading and most influential member of the Council. Eventually Sir Thomas Smith retired as Treasurer and Sir Edwin Sandys was advanced to that position. To many students of the history of the London Company, including this present writer, all the available evidence seems to point very conclusively to Sir Edwin Sandys as the one who led in the formulation and in the putting into effect of the plan to establish in Virginia not a series of trading posts for trade with the natives, or mining camps to dig for gold and silver, but a self-governing colony,—a bit of England transplanted across the ocean, with its own local life and government.

The London Company established in Virginia four settlements to each of which, either at the beginning or later as the plan developed, they gave the name of "city." These four were James Town, which later was called James City, Kecoughtan, which was changed to Elizabeth City, the City of Henricus, and Charles City. By the year 1618 these four had been given the title of the Four Ancient Corporations, and bore the names of James City, Charles City the City of Henricus and Kecoughtan, which in 1621 had its name officially changed to Elizabeth City.

The very use of this word "city" expressed the idea which was in the minds of Sir Edwin Sandys and his fellow members of the Council of the London Company. Anyone who is at all familiar with English life and customs is aware that in England a community, no matter how large its population, is not called a city unless it has a cathedral and the seat of a bishop. It thereby becomes the see city of his diocese. As the London Company had no intention of bringing four bishops to Virginia and establishing four dioceses, it is quite obvious that the Council was not thinking of the term city in its English connotation. They had looked otherwhere than England for the idea they had in mind.

Sir Edwin Sandys, and many of his associates among the prominent men of his day, had gone to the City of Geneva in Switzerland to study after they had completed courses in the English universities. The Puritan party within the Church of England, to which party all or practically all the leaders of the London Company belonged, had always looked to Geneva, as the home of John Calvin and the center of Calvinism for all the Protestant churches of western Europe, as the norm of the reformed faith to which many of them desired the doctrine and worship of the Church of England to conform. Apart however altogether from the Calvinism which centered there the City of Geneva in its political government was a free self-governing community as a unit in the government of Switzerland. The unit consisted of the town and the suburban territory surrounding it. Sir Edwin Sandys said upon one occasion that "If ever God Almighty established a form of government upon earth it was the government of Geneva."

It would seem to be very clear that when the term was given to raw little settlements in Virginia the idea back of the term was that it was to be a self-governing unit in a larger scheme of government. Exactly the same plan was later adopted in the New England colonies where the town with its suburban territory under the name of "township" instead of "city" was the unit of political self-government.

The next step in the development of the colony of Virginia after the establishment of the four first cities was the plan adopted by the London Company of giving to different groups of stockholders definite amounts of land in Virginia, 100 acres of land for each share of stock, with the understanding that this group would establish a settlement and send over a continuing flow of settlers to organize and develop the new community. A group holding 200 shares of stock for instance would be given 20,000 acres of land, or a little over 31 square miles. This 31 square miles would then when settled become what the Company called a "Particular Plantation" or what was called in Virginia a "Hundred." This term still exists as a place name in Virginia in Bermuda Hundred and Flowerdew Hundred, both on James River. Under the plan adopted by the Company a Particular Plantation or Hundred was to have exactly the same status as the earlier "Cities." Each one was to consist of a settlement or town with its suburban territory, and each one was to be a self-governing political unit.

The final step in the establishment of civil government in Virginia occurred in 1619. A new charter of rights and privileges of the colony in relation to the Council of the London Company in England was put into effect in November, 1618, in which it was directed that there should be a legislative assembly to meet at Jamestown and enact laws for the government of the local affairs of the colony. This legislative assembly, following the precedent of the English Parliament, should consist of two Houses, one a Council of State of persons appointed by the governor, (and later by the king), as representing the crown and the royal government and the interests of the colony as a whole, and a Lower House, consisting of burgesses elected by each borough or elective district in the colony.

When the newly appointed governor, Captain George Yeardley, arrived in Virginia in the early spring of 1619, he brought the precious charter of legislative government with him. There were then in active existence the four "cities" and seven "Hundreds." The date of meeting was set and the official summons went out to each city and hundred to elect two representatives. As elective districts each one became automatically a Borough, and during the whole colonial period the elected representatives in the General Assembly were called Burgesses.

So the representatives were elected, and so they came together on the appointed day, July 30, 1619, and held their first session in the little Church at Jamestown. The Governor sat in state in the chancel, the members of the Council of State and the 22 elected representatives around him in the upper part of the Church. One may picture the rest of the church being filled with eager citizens as the rector of James City Parish, the Reverend Richard Buck, opened this most momentous assembly with prayer for divine guidance. Who could foresee on that day that three hundred years later there would be, as the outgrowth of English colonization forty-eight state governments in America united under one strong government including them all, and each one based upon the ideals of self-government and self-determination that were first brought into active political organization in America by a little group of Burgesses representing eleven little settlements in England's first colony.

It was fearfully and unbearably hot in Jamestown during those six days from July 30 to August 4 in which the General Assembly was in session. One of the burgesses died, presumably of heat prostration, while the Assembly was sitting, and the other members incontinently closed the meeting and fled from the heat before all of the work they had in hand was completed. But the tremendously important fact still remains that the General Assembly as the legislative body of the colony had organized and held its first meeting, and enacted its first laws. It has continued in existence ever since, as the foundation-stone of our self-government in Virginia, in spite of every danger that has assailed it in the course of these three and a quarter centuries. It still exists as the oldest legislative assembly in America, and today, as in 1619 the little "cities" of James City, Charles City, Henrico and Elizabeth City, now grown into counties, still elect their own representatives to the biennial meetings of the General Assembly. These four are the oldest self-governing elective units in America.
elect their own representatives to the biennial meet-

The ideals of self-government which animated the minds of the settlers in Virginia in the organization and perpetuation of their own legislative assembly were the same that animated the English settlers who first came to each of the original thirteen colonies. These ideals were not born first in Virginia, but came from the very heart of England itself, and their establishment and growth in each American colony is the highest tribute to the true greatness of the English character. Each colony had to fight tyranny and aggression in one form or another during its period of dependence, and the history of each one will show the occasions in which it fought its own battles and won greater measures of freedom from overseas domination. Finally all thirteen stood together, shoulder to shoulder to fight and to win the battle for full independence; and then, having attained that goal as a new starting point, came together into union for the protection, support and extension of the same ideals.

The weak little Union of 1789 has become the great strong nation of today because of the strength of those ideals. Please God, they will always continue to dominate our life. Self-government, self-determination, freedom of initiative, civil and religious liberty, moral worth, justice, righteousness, honor, fair-dealing and religious faith: in spite of all the changes and chances of the passing generations, and notwithstanding all the temptations and glittering promises of other modes of thought, these old ideals are still fundamental in our American way of life. They are in very truth the heart of America.

CHURCH PENSION FUND

New York, N. Y.—With an annual pension roll of over $1,400,000, the Church Pension Fund of the Protestant Episcopal Church reports assets of $37,629.423, as of December 31, 1943, according to its Twenty-sixth Annual Report just issued. This represents an increase of $1,358,126 in the assets of the Fund during the past year.

In his report as President, Bishop Cameron J. Davis states that the year-end market value of the Fund's investments exceeded their book value by approximately $2,200,000. He calls attention to the fact that United States Government Securities owned by the Fund represent approximately 31 per cent of the total investment portfolio and that the Fund's participation in the First, Second and Third War Loans amounted to $3,545,000.

The Fund is maintained by the Protestant Episcopal Church for the purpose of providing pensions for the retired clergymen and for the widows and orphans of deceased clergymen. It was founded in 1917, and has paid out a total of approximately $23,600,000 in pension benefits since then.

The report emphasizes the fact that as the assets have grown, so have the liabilities, which amounted to $34,649,409 at the end of 1943. The Fund is administered on an actuarial reserve basis under the supervision of the Insurance Department of the State of New York. Included amongst the liabilities are the reserves which are necessary in order to carry certain additional benefits now amounting to more than $300,000 a year which are being paid to beneficiaries in excess of the original promises.

The present Treasurer of the Fund, succeeding the late J. P. Morgan, is Charles D. Dickey, Vice-President of J. P. Morgan & Co., Incorporated, who includes in his report a detailed list of the investments, showing a market value of $1,152,263 compared to $1,083,981 in the previous year. The report states that the unpaid pension assessments for the entire history of the Fund since March 1, 1917, amount to less than one-third of one per cent of the total payable during that period.

The Church Pension Fund has three wholly-owned subsidiaries. These are The Church Hymnal Corporation, which publishes hymnals and prayer books for the Church, Church Life Insurance Corporation, which offers insurance and annuity facilities at low rates to the clergy and active lay workers of the Church, and The Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation, which insures property belonging to or closely affiliated with the Church. It is stated in the report that a consolidated balance sheet of The Crurch Pension Fund and its Affiliates would show total assets of $44,317,164.

THE MESSAGE OF GOD'S HOLINESS

EVERY YEAR, in Judah, the line between the rich and the poor, the privileged and the unprivileged, became more marked. Every year the luxury and the idleness of the rich increased, and the poverty of the poor grew deeper. The women of wealthy families wore silks and jewelry from India, and rings of the gold of Ophir; Egyptian hair-dressers did their hair, and they imported lip-rouge from Sidon to make them beautiful,—while the children of the poor fought for scraps in the narrow streets.

And young men, who had begun to drink before noon, went roaring through the streets at night; and woe betide the late farer-abroad, alone and unprotected, who met them!

This was "God's promised Kingdom!"

But the nation was still strong and prosperous. Did these things amount to so much, after all? Why make such a fuss over them! God was never more wonderfully worshipped! The beautiful Temple of Solomon was restored. The gold which had been hacked off its walls by conquerors from Egypt had been replaced. A great golden vine, symbolic of the True Israel, cunningly wrought, twined up the columns, and spread itself over the door of the Sanctuary. Morning and evening the silver trumpets sounded over the city, to call the people to the worship of the sacrifices. And the climax of that worship was not the offering of the blood of the slain animals upon the Altar,—as some suppose,—the climax was the offering of incense upon the Golden Altar of Incense in the Holy Place, before the door of the abode of God, the Holy of Holies. This incense, rising before God the Almighty, symbolized the united prayers of Judah, before the face of Judah's God. This Sacred Office might be performed only by a priest, and the priest was chosen each day by lot; and only once in a life-time might the privilege be his.

All day long the restless and the careless feet of thousands trod the great court of the Temple, before the smoking Altar, and before the Holy Place of God.

Growing up in the midst of this, and himself a part of it,—feeling the terrible determination of the King to restore the throne of David to power and to glory, —seeing his success, and the length of his reign, filled with patriotism, and love of his land,—was Isaiah! Uzziah was his hero, and his beau ideal! All that God's King ought to be.

Isaiah loved Jerusalem with a fierce and abiding passion. To him it was the center of the world, and God, in its Sanctuary, was the Universal King. The gods of the heathen were but deceitful shadows, and whatever happened to the children of men took genesis in the Sanctuary in Jerusalem.

Although it is not so stated in the record, I have reason to believe that Isaiah was the son of a priestly family,—one of those who might some day inherit the right to offer the holy incense in the Holy Place in God's Temple.

As for Uzziah, he was approaching the end of his reign; and the realization was upon him that, though he had accomplished so much, he could not accomplish all. He was not yet an old man,—just sixty-six,—he was as vigorous as ever,—but there must have been some premonition in his flesh,—some restless warning within him which he did not himself understand. He knew that he would not live to see the united Kingdom for which he had worked so hard; and he wanted some magnificent, some crowning honor to make up to him, before the people, and in his own mind, for the glory he had coveted, and would not live to gain.

What could he do? He the victorious king, would seize the fire from the Altar, and stride into the Sanctuary, into the presence of Judah's God, and there offer the Holy Incense,—the United Prayers of the Nation,—no other king, not even Solomon, had done that! That would make a fitting climax to his reign!

It did.

Impetuous, not to be denied, the King snatched the golden censer from the hand of the priest appointed for the day, and went into the Holy Place.

Awe and fear fell upon the congregation!

The High Priest, and twenty of his bravest, went in after the King to stop the sacrilege; and they withstood him in bitter quarrel before the very door of the Holy of Holies!

The King's face flushed red with terrible rage at this interference with what he had planned to be the climax of his glory. And there, in the middle of his hot, flushed forehead, shone a pale, white spot! Leprosy! His rage showed it up for the first time!

The horror-stricken eyes of the priests, and the awed words upon their lips,—"the living death!" filled the king with horror and dread; and he went out in haste and fled from that place! For him it was the end! He spent the rest of his days in a pest-house; and Jotham, his son, reigned in his stead.

Even before his death Jerusalem forgot him! He was but an incident. A king had overstepped himself. Jerusalem went on as before.

But there was one in Jerusalem who could not forget,—Isaiah! At first it was like the end of the world to him! Why, this King had been righteous! He had been zealous! He had built up God's Kingdom! Was God unjust? Was He fickle, like a man? Why should Judah's God strike down with hated leprosy the man who had done more to restore Judah's glory than all the kings of Judah put together, back to Solomon? Why? Why, Why?

Put yourself into that young man's place. Try to imagine the turmoil in his thinking,—the rebellion in his heart, and in his mind, and in his soul! He was no ordinary fellow. He had a mind; and he had a heart! And gradually,—through pain and turmoil of soul,—he saw this thing in its true meaning. He knew what was going on in the world. He saw the gathering power of Assyria, and knew the true menace of it; now he saw another, and to him a terrible truth.—it was not God's purpose to make the little kingdom of Judah rich and fat, and then to defend it against all adversity,—God's purpose was vaster than Judah,—far vaster than a restored Davidic Kingdom,—God's purpose is world wide!

"Make the heart of this people fat, their souls

A Disturbing Letter

We publish this week, in the "Letters to the Editor" column, a letter from a layman in the Missionary District of Wyoming. To our way of thinking this is not only a revealing but a very disturbing letter.

Fortunately we are a democratic Church. We recognize that there are differing approaches to God's truth. We accept the realism of groups within the Church, which groups each in their own way emphasize some particular approach. It has always seemed to us that the genius of the Anglican Communion has been its ability to hold within one fold widely divergent groups. This means that within his canonical rights the Bishop of the Missionary District of Wyoming may if it seems wise in his judgment to emphasize a particular aspect of the approach to catholic truth. With that we have no quarrel.

But, and it is a large but, when he permits a clergyman or minister in charge, to make such unwarranted statements, as these that are quoted in the letter in question, that the only difference between the Protestant Episcopal Church and the Roman Catholic Church is a political difference that in doctrine they are identical; it is time to protest. One's Protestant heritage comes to the fore. Of course such a statement is a part truth, and by the unthinking is absorbed as the whole truth. There are many points of doctrine that are similar in the two bodies, but to say they are identical is going far wide of the mark. We do not fault this layman in his alarms.

Again to make such a statement that the evangelical clergyman is practically extinct in the church, is the height of absurdity. We hasten to assure our correspondent that the Diocese of Virginia is still alive, and the majority of its clergy are both liberal in their approach to other Christian Communions and evangelical in their preaching and ministry. We are also certain that there are many other dioceses that are of the same stripe, with Bishops directing them, who are definitely "evangelical". As disturbing as it may be, to be told that we are extinct, we know that we are not.

Furthermore, the large part of the missionary giving of our Church, comes from dioceses that are evangelical in tradition. We dare say a good bit of the funds received from the National Council, by the Bishop of Wyoming, for expenditure in his district, come from good evangelical sources. The monthly report of the Treasurer, Mr. Lewis B. Franklin, will reveal this to be true.

We are not pleading for partisanship. We believe in fair play, and honesty. Until General Convention so orders, our official title is the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the great majority of our communicants are proud of that part of our heritage which comes to us from the Reformation of the 16th Century.

Perhaps we are not as much disturbed as amused by the statements, quoted in our correspondent's letter.

To Make Us Think

We reprint in its entirety an editorial from the New York Times of Sunday, July 23. We believe it to be timely and to contain the type of information that should make us think.

We as Christians talk a great deal about sacrifice. What do we mean by sacrifice? Surely up to this time we have made, in the mass no great sacrifices. There are Saints in every community who put the cause first, and self second, but in the large most of our sacrifices are but petty inconveniences.

Here is the editorial:

Wartime Constraints

"Most Americans are resigned, if not cheerful, under the restrictions imposed by the war upon their pursuit of happiness. Some complaining is heard, nevertheless. There is murmuring at the scarcity of such things as whisky, chewing-gum, nylon hosiery and touring gasoline. The need of waiting in line at the butcher's for a bit of meat is the subject of a good deal of conversation. Yet these "sufferings" could be worse. If we lived in Great Britain they would be a whole lot worse."

"Consider some of the wartime constraints the British endure, as listed by The Outpost, American publication over there. A citizen of that land can be prosecuted for setting out milk bottles that have not been washed; for wasting a piece of string; for throwing away a scrap of paper even as small as a bus ticket; for tossing a crust of bread into the garbage bin, forgetting that food costs sailors' lives."

"Able-bodied civilians who drive to work, doctors and clergymen only excepted, commit misdemeanors. Those entitled to drive may be haled into court for driving along a route served by buses or trains. And the waiting bus passenger who elbows his way aboard ahead of his turn faces a heavy penalty."

"To sell an American lend-lease alarm clock to a person who has no permit to buy one is unlawful. To change jobs without Government authorization is forbidden. Likewise to ice a cake. And pub keepers who run out of stock must still keep their places open till the official closing time, since a pub, with or without drinks, is a social club needed by working people."

"The moral for us Americans with our few petty wartime discomforts ought to be plain. It will be time enough for us to grouse when we are called upon for real sacrifices."—The New York Times.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

gross, their ears dull! See how they choose the lower, rather than the higher! How shall they hear? How shall they turn? How shall they be saved?

While Isaiah was thinking thus,—thinking, growing,—in his own heart, and in his own soul, the old king died. And almost in the shadow of that death there came to Isaiah, in the course of his priestly office, the opportunity to offer the incense in the Holy Place.

Priests were chosen for this great privilege by lot. In the morning, before dawn, the priests to serve that day gathered in an ante-room of the Temple, and the work of the day was determined by the drawing forth of markers which had been shaken in a bag. But if the lot to offer the incense fell on one who had offered it before, the lot was drawn again. This day the lot fell on Isaiah.

The young man was stunned! Serving what was, perhaps, the first course of his life in the office of priesthood, the finger of God points him out to present the prayers of the nation before the Mercy Seat,—to perform the act for which King Uzziah,—his hero,—was smitten with the living death!

"Am I better than King Uzziah, that I should do this thing?"

Come! Come! Wash yourself at the holy place of washing, as the other priests are doing! Put on the priestly garments!

"Will an ocean of washing wash out the sins of this people? Are my priestly garments better than rags in the sight of the Holy God?"

Ready now! The holy words are said! The sacrifice is slain! The blood is in the golden basin, and the priest is pouring it in the mystic pattern upon the Holy Altar, to buy a way for you to present the prayers of the nation before the Mercy Seat!

"God! O God Eternal! Can the shed blood of beasts suffice to take away the sin of a nation's soul!"

Quick. The time has come! With the tongs snatch the living coals from off the Altar,—into the Golden Censer—and swinging it to keep them alive, up, up the broad stairway, and into the dreadful Sanctuary! There is the box, filled with sandalwood and spices,—take it,—sprinkle it upon the coals! The pungent clouds rise up before the curtain which hides the Mearcy Seat! . . . .

Suddenly, like silent thunder, the curtain, the roof, the walls fade away! And there, high, high,—lifted up beyond earth's pain and passion is the Heavenly Throne,—and Him who sat thereon, from whose face the Heaven and the earth might flee away! And about Him the Heavenly ministers, veiling their faces from His glory, and their feet, that they might not soil the dread apartness of His Sanctuary.

The whole place seems filled with smoke, so that he cannot see the Vision sharply, clearly. And he understands that this is the veiling of his sinful flesh! And the young priest falls to his knees, stricken to the heart,—and cries in the anguish of his soul,—"What shall I do? What shall I do! For I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell among a people of unclean lips; and mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of Hosts!"

And one of the winged messengers snatched up a burning coal from off the Altar and touched it to his lips. And he felt the fire of it running through all his veins. And he heard the messenger say,—"In the fire thy sin is purged!"

Then he heard the Voice of the Eternal speaking; and the very ground he kneeled on shook with the Voice of Him that spoke,—"Whom shall I send? And who shall go for us?"

And Isaiah answered: "Here am I, Lord! Send me!"

When he went back out into the sunshine, there were the people, standing silent, waiting for the priestly blessing. Nothing had disturbed them. They had seen nothing that he had seen. But for Isaiah, nothing in life was ever the same again.

And because he was faithful to that call, we are gathered in our churches, as it is this day.

Amen.

Concerning the Relationship of Words and Music and What Constitutes a Virile Christian Hymn

By J. Blair-Fish, Washington, D. C.

To suggest that a familiar combination of words and music are not perhaps in the best taste or indeed suitable at all for public worship, generally results in a howl of execration from all and sundry. The writer or critic must, like Agag King of Bashan, tread delicately. Yet the subject is of supreme importance, if only because some of our finest hymns have been adventitiously linked and associated with quite second rate music. The reverse is, I think, seldom the case. The words are of course of more importance than the music (though it is curious that people will sing the silliest words if they like the tune to which they are set). It is the business of the music to clothe and heighten the value of the words and enhance the beauty of them. Much of our confusion is due to the habit of hymnbook compilers for providing alternative tunes in too much profusion, no doubt in an endeavour to please as many people as possible. If we think of tunes as merely clothing the words of a hymn there is no reason why a hymn shouldn't have as many suits of clothes as any man or woman normally possesses. But if we think of the conjunction of words and music as a fusing together in marriage, one might argue that as the church does not countenance polygamy, it would be only consistent to insist on one tune only for each hymn! For the joining of words and music is a marriage of the most sacred kind and as such shoulr only be dissolved by the death of one of the partners. It is perhaps fortunate that some tunes die earlier than the words with which they have been hastily or inadventitiously joined and the words then get a second chance. This idea may perhaps seem somewhat fanciful to some, but it is instructive to note that many of the finest hymns of the church, the great Christmas and Easter hymns for example, and the traditional carols for both seasons, are indissolubly associated with particular tunes and no one would for an instant consider alternatives. It is significant that, almost without exception, hardly a single tune in the categories referred to is less than two centuries old and the original words in many instances are centuries older.

The hymn writer has always plenty of good tunes to set his words to, provided that he sticks to the common meters for his verses. It is just as well, for the ability to produce good verses does not imply equal ability to compose music. A common authorship for hymns and music is therefore, rare and generally disappointing where it occurs. The most notable exception to this—and possibly the only one—is the case of Martin Luther whose great Reformation Hymn "A Mighty fortress is our God" (No. 551) set to his tune Ein Feste Burg has cheered and inspired generations of Christians, and never more than in these present times. There are several and rather different translations of the German original. The strongest and most rugged is perhaps Carlyle's version—unhappily not the one included in the new hymnal—for it seems to characterize Luther the author more than the others do. The last lines of this translation are worth quoting, if only for their appropriateness to those who are enduring oppression in Nazi occupied countries today.

For though they take our lives
Husband and children, wives;
Yet is their profit small.
These things shall vanish all;
The city of God remaineth.

Really good hymns serve successive ages and belong to no particular country or generation of men. The words and music of this great hymn, forged out of the depths of Luther's soul in his defiance of a corrupt church have come to have a fresh meaning four hundred years after Luther's time. For consider this: three years ago, when the people of Norway were turned out of their churches because their bishops refused to obey the orders of the Quisling Government, they stood on the church steps and sang these great verses to Luther's tune at the Nazi soldiers. One does not know how the German words are translated into Norwegian, nor whether the import of such lines as

And to this world, with devils filled,
Should threaten to undo us;
We will not fear, for God hath willed
His truth to triumph through us.

penetrated to the dulled Nazi intelligence; but the hearers of the defiant tune with its hammer like notes —a tune which every German boy must have heard at some time—must have sensed something stronger, deeper and more full of certainty than anything in the Nazi philosophy of life. Here was faith—a living faith willing to be offered up; a living church though a disinherited one born to receive blows, not to give them; "an anvil which has worn out many hammers."

Luther's hymn lives today, with others of like character, because it is a virile, challenging hymn and so expresses what should be distinctive of all Christian believers. The truly sincere hymn should never be sentimental or escapist, though too often such hymns are preferred to those which express adoration and praise. It is inevitable that some hymns which are both fine and popular contain weak or secondrate lines. The lines of Charles Wesley's Jesus, Lover of my soul, for instance

Hide me, O my Saviour hide,
Till the storm of life is past, are just sheer escapism and unworthy of a Christian. The effect of them is rather heightened by the cloying Dykes' tune to which the hymn is usually sung. The hymn is not the most admirable of Wesley's but sung to the rugged alternative Welsh tune "Aberystwyth" it is strengthened and becomes acceptable. There one has the marriage idea again—the stronger partner helping the weaker one.

CHARACTERISTICS OF GOOD HYMNS—III

It is a little difficult to find a definition of what makes a good hymn when by good we mean that which is worthy to be offered to God as part of our public worship. The words must be sincere but something more even than that; they should have literary dignity which should bear some comparison with the literary excellence of the Bible in the Authorized Version. The tures which clothe the words should have simplicity, aspiration, and the same rhythm and character as the words. It is not just a question of finding a common metre for words and music; it would be just as sensible as assuming that two people are fitted to make a perfect marriage because both of them have fair hair and are five feet seven and a half inches high! There is a delightful 16th Century Madrigal by Thomas Morley entitled "The Merry Month of Maying" which exactly fits the metre of "The Church is one Foundation", and is decidedly a more cheerful tune than Wesley's Aurelia to which that hymn is invariably sung; but although a coloured congregation might perhaps sing it with gusto, I imagine that staid Episcopalians would rightly decide that the tune is too frivolous for the words. But compilers of hymnbooks do not seem to give sufficient attention to the desirability of selecting tunes which really suit the words, and the new book is not free from fault in this particular. Hymns about judgment or justice for instance, obviously need a solemn tune and St. Leonard, which is used for H. Scott Holland's fine hymn "Judge eternal, throned in splendor" (No. 518) is entirely lacking in solemnity —though otherwise a fine tune—and nothing like as suitable as the Welsh Traditional tune which is to be found in The English Hymnal.

Sometimes strength and emphasis is imparted to the words by a note repeated three or even four times, a common device which all the great composers from Bach to Handel up to the present time have used. Examples of this will be found in Luther's Ein Feste Burg, already mentioned, in Nun Danket the tune to which we sing "Now thank we all our God" (No. 276) Oriel, the tune for "To the name of our salvation" (No. 326), and Lauda Anima, the fine tune by Sir John Goss to which we sing "Praise my soul the King of Heaven" (No. 282). It is only necessary to substitute an alternative tune to such hymns as these in order to discover how much of added strength and dignity the repeated not gives; but this is true only if the tune is of sound musical composition; if otherwise —and unhappily many instances could be given—the repeated notes simply irritate. (Perhaps the worst example that could be cited is A. L. Peace's tune to "O Love that wilt not let me go-o" (No. 458) which simply isn't music at all.)

It is difficult, if not impossible, to set any absolute standard for judging whether a hymn is good, bad or indifferent, but taking the words first one might use the translations of J. M. Neale as a rough measuring stick for the quality of hymns. Neale rendered invaluable service to the church in the mid nineteenth century through his skill in translating many ancient and then little known hymns into English verse, and his hymns are to be found in all good collections. The present book has thirty-nine of his translations, which almost suggests a correspondence with the Thirty Nine Articles of Religion which we have in the Book of Common Prayer and is at any rate a happy number to include in an Episcopal Hymnbook! It is worthwhile to look through the index of authors and translators to see what we owe to Neale; the list includes numbers of the most familiar hymns for the great festivals of the Christian year. For a standard of fine tunes, reference can best be made to the great Advent Hymns, "On Jordan's Bank" (10), "Hark the glad sound" (7), and that ancient and beautiful tune Veni Emmanuel (2) or those great hymns "O God our help" (289) and "O worship the King" (288), both by William Croft, the great organist of Westminster Abbey in the eighteenth century. We may not be able to define why we instinctively feel that these tunes have an everlasting character, but we know that they admirably fit the words, and we would find any hymn collection incomplete if they were omitted. They are only examples of many others which may be described as great tunes, but they give us a standard by which we can measure other less worthy compositions.

In passing it may be mentioned for the benefit of those who only occasionally use plain song melodies, such as Veni Creator (217) and Veni Emmanuel in public worship, that it is essential that they should be sung in a free natural rhythm, ignoring note values almost entirely. To sing them like other hymns is like reciting blank verse with the accent one would use for a nursery rhyme. One has too often heard that lovely Communion Hymn "Let all mortal flesh keep silence" rendered with a sort of steam roller effect through boxing the melody in imaginary bars and giving exact values as written to each note and too often ruined further with a heavy accompaniment on the organ. The prime business of the melody is to interpret the words. If these are given due attention, the tune and the rhythm will take care of themselves.

Over emphasis, flambuoyancy in organ accompaniment or continuous use of full organ may only betray the organist's anxiety to keep choir and congregation on the rails, but it is disastrous to fine and reverential singing and all too common. One has not infrequently heard that lovely Silesian melody set to "Fairest Lord Jesus", done to death for sheer lack of imagination. If one thinks of the words as they might be sung in ecstacy and adoration by a peasant girl, I doubt whether any organist would dare to pull out his diapasons, couple Swell to Great and use the 16 ft. Pedal when that or anything like it appears on the Sunday hymn list. The organist and choirmaster's responsibility for the services as a whole is a heavy one and although it is natural that the anthem and the parts taken solely by the choir should require most attention in the choir practices, the proper rendering of the hymns should not be neglected. One can hardly over stress the importance of the rendering of hymns as a valuable help to worship, or the need for careful selection of each Sunday's hymns so that they are integrated with the rest of the service to produce a unity. The subject ma ybe dealt with in a later article.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Emanuel Church Centennial

1844—1944

Camden Parish

Chatham, Va.—On May 25, 1944, Emmanuel Church, Chatham, Virginia, will complete its first century of service and ministry. It is a rural church, situated in south central Virginia at Pittsylvania Court House, a typical old Virginia courthouse town, of some 1,200 people. The church has a small congregation, but its accomplishments in the past century, under the able leadership of its ministers, have been noteworthy.

As the church of Pittsylvania Court House, Emmanuel's background reaches into late colonial days; in 1752, when this county was a part of Antrim Parish, Halifax County, three churches were established within its present area. Upon the formation of Pittsylvania County and Camden Parish in 1767, four new churches were built, located near Chalk Level, Rondo, Toshes, and Leatherwood. The home of the colonial minister, known as the Glebe, was a plantation of 588 acres, also situated near Rondo. Early ministers who served the parish were the Reverend Alexander Gordon, the Reverend James Stevenson and the Reverend Lewis Gwilliam.

Th Church of England was so closely associated in the minds of the people with the English government, that after the successful close of the Revolutionary War these congregations of Pittsylvania languished and died. But Camden Parish was represented at the Convention which met in Richmond on May 18, 1785, for the purpose of organizing the church, taking steps to secure a bishop for Virginia, and naming delegates to a church convention to be held in Philadelphia in the fall.

The Founding of Emmanuel Church

In the autumn of 1840, the Reverend George W. Dame, M. D., came to Danville to take charge of the Danville Female Academy, and to discharge ministerial duties. He generally visited the Courthouse twice in the month and preached in the court building. Finding many friends of the church living at Chatham, he requested Judge George H. Gilmer, Mr. James M. Whittle (a brother of Bishop Francis Whittle), Colonel William Rison (father of the late Senator George Townes Rison), Captain Bedford H. Avrett, and the Honorable Walter Coles, member of Congress, to act as vestrymen, insofar as it was possible.

Dr. Dame's ministry aroused such interest at Chatham that during the first three and a half years a lot was purchased, and on it a handsome church building was erected. Residents of the village and vicinity, without regard to religious affiliations, contributed to this worthy cause.

A lot on Main Street was purchased for $220 from William H. Tunstall, Clerk of the County, and was conveyed to Charles Calloway, William Rison, James L. Poindexter, George H. Gilmer, Joseph M. Terry, Walter Coles and Benjamin Rives, "Church wardens and Trustees." On this lot was erected a large dignified white frame building, with two front entrance doors and a gallery across the front for the use of the colored people. The church was consecrated on May 25, 1844, by Bishop William Meade with these words:

"Whereas it hath pleased Almighty God to inspire the good people of Camden Parish, Pittsylvania Courthouse, to build an house of worship with the name of Emmanuel Church in which divine services are to be conducted according to the forms of the Episcopal Church within the United States of America, I, William Meade, Bishop of the Diocese of Virginia, in this the 15th year of my Episcopate, and on this the 25th day of May, 1844 . . . do consecrate this house to the worship of Almighty God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

On the following Sunday, June 2nd, the church which had been erected in Danville was consecrated by Bishop Meade with the name of the Church of the Epiphany.

Dr. George Dame, the rector of the now revived Camden Parish, was a man of tireless energy and boundless zeal for the things of God. He resided in Danville and divided his time equally between the two churches, Epiphany and Emmanuel, until in March, 1858, he resigned the rectorship of Emmanuel. The vestry of the latter church notified Epiphany that they would seek a division of the Parish at the next Church Council, which was accordingly done, and the northern half became the new Banister Parish, in which Emmanuel Church was now located.

Banister Parish

1858—1866

The Reverend George T. Wilmer, of Williamsburg, was called and became the first Rector of Banister Parish, beginning his ministry on November 24, 1859.

1866—1876

Then followed that period known to history as the Reconstruction Era, difficult alike to people and church. Ministers came and went; the Reverend William Hoxton served as Rector of Banister Parish in 1868-69; the Reverend William Green in 1873-74; the Reverend George W. Nelson in 1874-75. Lest the doors of Emmanuel should be closed in these interims Bishop Whittle appointed Mr. William E. Simms, a young lawyer of Mississippi who had settled in Chatham to practice his profession, as lay reader of the Parish.

1876—1884

On February 10, 1876, the Reverend William A. Alrich, of New York State, became Rector of Banister Parish.

At a meeting of the congregation of Emmanuel in April, 1878, it was decided that a new church building should be erected. On October 16, 1881, Bishop Whittle consecrated the new Emmanuel Church.

1884—1917

Rectorship of Dr. Clevius O. Pruden

Clevius Orlando Pruden became Rector of Banister Parish in July, 1884, having just graduated from the Theological Seminary at Alexandria.

Dr. Pruden summed up the results of the first twenty years of his ministry in Banister Parish in the following brief words in the Parish Register:

"Christ Church completed, repaired and consecrated. St. John's Church built at Mt. Airy. St. Paul's Church built at Peytonsburg. Trinity Church built at Gretna. Grace Church built at Museville. St. Luke's Church for Negroes built at Chatham. Emmanuel Church twice repaired. Chatham Episcopal Institute established and paid for. Total baptisms, 391; total confirmations, 492; communicants added, 509; marriages, 92; burials, 152.

"In 1892 the Danville Convocation resolved to erect and conduct two schools, one for boys and one for girls. The purpose of these schools was to furnish education at the least possible cost, with no purpose or desire of making money. The boys' school was located at Halifax Courthouse, Virginia, and though it did well for several years it was abandoned in 1902."

After thirty-three years of creative work Dr. Pruden resigned his rectorship of Banister Parish in 1917.

1917—1922

The Reverend Arthur L. Kenyon, a native of England, assumed rectorship of Banister Parish and Emmanuel Church in February, 1917.

At a meeting of the Council of the Diocese of Southern Virginia on May 29, 1918, Banister Parish was divided, leaving Emmanuel and Trinity (Gretna) in the old parish, while the new parish of Pruden (in memory of Dr. Pruden) contained St. John's, St. Paul's, Grace and Christ Church. The Reverend Mr. Dabney, assistant rector, became the first Rector of Pruden Parish.

The Reverend Mr. Kenyon resigned as Rector of Banister Parish in December, 1921, to take charge of St. Paul's Church in Suffolk, Virginia.

1922—1928

The Reverend Thomas Green Faulkner became Rector of Banister Parish and Chaplain of Chatham Hall on March 1, 1922.

In 1927 Mr. Faulkner added the churches of Pruden Parish.

On July 1, 1928, Mr. Faulkner, who had greatly endeared himself to the entire community, resigned to take charge of Nottaway Parish.

1928—1938

On July 1, 1928, the Reverend Edmund J. Lee, D. D., for many years a well known missionary of Ankin, China, accepted the rectorship of both Emmanuel Church and Chatham Hall.

Finding his duties too heavy for his strength, in 1938 Dr. Lee resigned as Rector of Emmanuel Church, retaining his position at the School.

He was succeeded by the Reverend James S. Cox, who came to us on June 15, 1938, from Silver Springs, Maryland.

1940—1944

The Reverend J. Hubard Lloyd, D. D., former missionary to Japan and a member of a distinguished family of clergymen, assumed the rectorship of both Banister and Pruden Parishes on January 1, 1940, to June, 1944.

During the past year plans were made for the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary. The celebration was held on May, the 21st being the date nearest the one on which Emmanuel was consecrated, May 25, 1844.

The Right Reverend Wm. A. Brown, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese of Southern Virginia, was the guest speaker at the Centennial Celebration.

UNIVERSITY OF NANKING TO SEND REPRESENTATIVE TO U. S.

The University of Nanking Writes to

Chengtu, China—The University of Nanking writes: We have during the past month, received one very special piece of news; news that makes us happy in the honor it shows our school and our work. We have been chosen as one of the six institutions in China to send a representative to the United States for one year, under an arrangement made by the Cultural Division of the State Department. Last year this plan was inaugurated and it is being repeated for another year. We deeply appreciate the honor and recognition thus given to us and welcome such an opportunity for contributing to the understanding between our two countries in the cultural and educational field. It also gives us an excellent opportunity, through the representative sent, to renew contact with old friends, make new ones, and gain a first-hand knowledge of wartime conditions in the educational world in America, and a chance to discuss with your cultural leaders the plans that are being formed for postwar programs.

A new field of exchange is opening up through our College of Science, one which offers immense possibilities. In the past we have had exchange of publications, botanical collections, and so forth, with other schools and insittutions in various countries, particularly in the United States, that have brought us great benefit. This new exchange is of moving pictures. Naturally in wartime, with its complications in shortage of photographic supplies and difficulties of communication, we cannot hope to develop a very extensive exchange arrangement, but a beginning is being made. Through the help of Dr. Joseph Needham, of Cambridge University, our Department of Visual Education has received an offer of exchange from the Association of British Scientific Workers. They have offered to send us a number of documentary and educational films and would be glad to receive some pictures of our own making in return. We are most happy to enter into such a scheme and hope this may lead to similar exchanges with other organizations and other countries. This appeals to us as a vital method in helping to create a greater understanding of each other between the different peoples of the world. We, in China, will gain invaluable help in our educational programs, and we believe, our share in widening the knowledge of others about China will not be too small a contribution.

TRAINING SCHOOL READY TO OPEN

Courses in the Old and New Testaments, Social Service and Sociology To Be Given

New York, N. Y.—The New York Training School for Deaconesses and Other Church Workers, which will reopen on October 4th, has announced that plans have been completed and a faculty engaged for the coming year. As in years past, members of the faculty of the General Theological Seminary will teach certain important courses. The Warden of the School, the Rev. Dr. Charles N. Shepard, formerly Professor of Hebrew in the Seminary and Sub-dean, will give the courses in the Old Testament. The Rev. Norman Pittenger, tutor in the Seminary, will take the New Testament courses and the course in Theology. Other outstanding faculty members are the Rev. Dr. Thomas A. Sparks, Canon Pastor of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, who will teach Church History; the Rev. Gerardus Beekman, head of the Department of Religious Education of the Diocese of New York, who will give the courses in that field; Mrs. Claude L. Pickens, Jr., for many years in the Missionary District of Hankow, China, working there with her husband. Canon Pickens, who will teach Missions and Missionary Education; and Miss Daphne Hughes, Executive Secretary of the Youth Consultation Service, Diocese of Newark, who will take the courses in Christian Social Service and Sociology. Visiting lecturers who are spcialists in their fields will speak on other topics related to the regular courses and to Church work in general.

The School is re-opening under the direction of the Executive Committee of the National Conference of Deaconesses, with the cooperation of the Trustees of the School. Bishop Manning of New York is President of the Board of Trustees. The plans of the Executive Committee for raising the necessary additional funds, made with the advice of experts in such work, are meeting with encouraging success. Among those who have made pledges and contributions are the deaconesses themselves, both those who are active and those who have retired, and the alumnae of the School, both deaconesses and other Church Workers, who are rallying to the support of the undertaking. Interest in furthering the financial part of the re-opening is great and widespread among Church people in general.

Inquiries from prospective students are coming in every mail. The fact that forty positions requiring women workers who are trained are vacant and asking for immediate applicants has inspired young women to see the opportunities for skilled Christian service. Bishops and rectors are hailing with satisfaction the news that the New York Training School for Deaconesses and Other Church Workers is reopening, for the very practical reason that there is an acute shortage of trained Church workers, both lay and in the Deaconess Order.

The School has during almost the whole of its history of over fifty years been under the leadership of deaconesses, in that they have been at the head of the School. This policy continues. The new head of the School is Deaconess Ruth Johnson. She is a graduate of the Hartford School of Religious Education, with the degree of Bachelor of Religious Education, and an alumna of the New York Training School for Deaconesses. Deaconess Johnson comes to St. Faith's from five years of successful experience on the staff of the Philadelphia City Mission. A new chapter in a notable history is beginning.

"ROAD TO RECOVERY" VISUALIZED

Summer School of Healing Meets at La Jolla

La Jolla, California—The Bishop's School was the focal center for a clinical study of Spiritual Healing, during the week of June 16-23, in the Diocese of Los Angeles, under the auspices of The Fellowship of St. Luke.

Keynote for the week was "The Road to Recovery." This was treated from all view-points—spiritual, psychological and medical. The text chosen was Van Rensselaer Gibson's book, The Master's Secret of Power, dealing with the healing works of our Lord.

Conclusions reached were: (1) The healing technique of Jesus is still adequate and valid, when intelligently applied, for all the complex ills that flesh is heir to. (2) The Christian Church is the proper channel through which this Healing should come. (3) The sickness of States and Nations, of which the present War is the major symptom, can only be overcome by the use of the Teaching and Practice of Jesus. (4) New techniques of Prayer are needed to implement these teachings and practices.

The Study Hour was conducted by Dr. John Gayner Banks, Director of the School. A unique feature of the program was "The School of Meditation," conducted each afternoon in the beautiful Chapel of the Bishop's School by the Rev. Williston M. Ford of Chula Vista. Each day ended with a Healing Service in the Chapel, conducted by the Clergy of The Summer School.

Other speakers were the Rev. Wallace Essingham of National City; Dean Harold F. Gerrard of the Institute of Religious Science; J. Rufus Moseley of Macon, Georgia, author of Manifest Victory (Harper's); Starr Daily, exconvict and author of Release (Harper's); Dr. Edward H. Calvert of El Cajon, medical director of the Fellowship of St. Luke; Dr. Lillian W. Noble of La Jolla, practicing physician; Rev. John B. Osborn of San Diego; Rev. George Adams, former missionary to Korea, and Ethel Tulloch Banks, Secretary, F .S. L. and author of healing books.

MEMORIAL TO DR. OGILBY TO BE USED IN SUMMER CHAPEL . .

Hartford, Conn.—Friends of the Rev. Dr. Remsen B. Ogilby, President of Trinity College, Hartford, from 1920 until his death in 1943, are creating a memorial to him throughout the creation of a fund which will be used to improve the summer chapel at Weekapaug, Rhode Island.

A summe rresident there for many years, Dr. Ogilby directed the Chapel, and, as Commodore of the Weekapaug Yacht Club, influenced the young people of the resort, who competed in semiweekly races under his supervision. The Remsen B. Ogilby Memorial Fund at Weekapaug was created because many of his friends felt it would be a fitting way in which the summer colonists could demonstrate their affectionate ergard for Dr. Ogilby in an enduring way.

An informal appeal to a list of some former summer visitors scattered throughout the country has brought many gifts according to Mr. James B. Slimmon, chairman of the committee in charge.

A THANK OFFERING

Camp Shelby, Miss.—A gift of $5 to be used for work among Episcopal Church members in Japanese-American relocation centers is being sent to the Presiding Bishop through Chaplain John S. Kromer.

The giver is Sergeant Sam Ushio, who was recently baptized by Chaplain Kromer. He is at Camp Shelby as a member of a Combat Team made up entirely of volunteers. Back home in Western Nebraska the Ushio family had come under the influence of an Episcopal mission. A brother and sister had been baptized there.

American born Japanese Sam Ushio sends his gift as a thank offering.

Down To The Last Bulb

New York, N. Y.—After trying at intervals for nearly a year to locate electric light bulbs suitable for the lamps over the operating table at Hudson Stuck Hospital, Fort Yukon, Alaska, Dr. Lula M. Disosway appealed to Harry Deitz, who does general buying at the Church Missions House, as well as superintends the building and various other necessary jobs. When the appeal reached New York Dr. Disosway was, she said, "down to the last bulb." "We have now only one in the lamp." I am holding my breath for fear it goes on the blink." She told that it was impossible to find the lamps in Fairbanks, and that she had searched various places without success when she was "out" last May.

The appeal came to New York in a letter dated March 11. On April 24, and air express package left New York. It contained 24 of the precious bulbs, and getting them had necessitated a considerable search for the bulbs themselves, then arrangement of priority for shipment by air.

May 9 comes a letter from the Doctor, "Now I can sigh a sigh of relief.

Dr. Disosway, originally from New Bern, N. C., came to the Hudson Stuck Hospital via China, where she had served on the staff of St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, for 15 years. She hopes to work at Fort Yukon until the war is over, then to return to China.

HOPEFUL SIGNS THAT THE CHURCH IS MOVING FORWARD . .

Charleston, S. C.—"What's Right With the Church" was the topic chosen by the new bishop of South Carolina, the Rt. Rev. Thomas N. Carruthers, for his first address to his diocesan convention. The Bishop, speaking at the closing session of the Convention, listed four "hopeful signs to indicate that the Church has been moving forward," these being:

"The Church has an attitude of self-criticism; There is a new demand in the Church for reality; There is a growing spirit of good will among the branches of the Church; The Church is determined not to escape from the world, but to transform it."

LENTEN PROJECT PROVED SUCCESSFUL

New Orleans, La.—St. Paul's Church school, New Orleans, took as a Lenten project $64 toward the maintenance of Kah-O-Sed Indian Training School. Rector C. R. Haden, Jr., said: "Our project was to take an airplane trip in a four-motored plane named 'St. Paul's' from New Orleans to Duluth, Minnesota, the cost of which was $64. Each class had its cost of the trip and a small airplane, single-motored, named for the class. We used the Lenten Offering envelopes and moved the planes each Sunday as far as contributions permitted. Almost made a round trip—$117.93."

THEOLOGICAL SUNDAY

New York, N. Y.—Theological Sunday will be January 21 in 1945. The date was fixed by the Presiding Bishop, in accordance with the action of the General Convention of 1940. That action provided that "one Sunday in each year be appointed by the Presiding Bishop in consultation with the Committee on Theological Education on which it shall be the duty of every minister of this Church to present to his congregation the subject of Theological Education, the responsibility of the Laity for its adequate support, and a special offering shall be made which shall be sent to such seminary or school of Theological Education as the minister shall determine."

The offering has grown year by year. In 1942, 821 parishes participated,

NEW BULLETIN BOARD MEMORIAL GIFT

Lowell, Mass. — The new bulletin board, dedicated to the use of St. John's Church, Lowell, on June 25, strikes a new and imposing note. Of brown walnut, Gothic in design to conform with the architecture of the church fabric, it rests upon a cement foundation and is of noble proportions. In the peak of the arch, is a Celtic cross in gold; below it comes the name of the rector, the Rev. Wilbur J. Kingwill, and his home address; in the panel beneath are the hours of the services, the name of the preacher; and the sermon topic——the latter a factor of evangelistic power. This board is in memory of Harold F. Lowe, and is the gift of his family.

A PRAYER

Jesus Saviour, let me follow
Where Thy steps have trod;
Only as I mark Thy footprints
Can I climb to God.

Jesus, take my hand and lead me
Lest my feet should stray;
Only as I know Thee near me
Can I find the way.

Jesus, turn my eyes from self love
Let me look on Thee;
Only as I see Thy beauty
Can I grow like Thee.

Jesus, when my spirit fails me
Let me see Thy cross;
Only as I mark Thy courage
Can I fear no loss.

Jesus, look when I am sinful
Turn Thine eyes on me;
Only as I see Thee pierced
Can I faithful be.

Jesus, when Death's night is nearing
Shed Thy light on me;
Then at last, my eyes unclouded
Shall Thy glory see.

—Kenric Aldworth.

I'D RATHER SEE A SERMON

I'd rather see a sermon than hear one any day,
I'd rather one should walk with me than merely show the way;
The eye's a better pupil, more willing than the ear,
Fine counsel is confusing, but example always clear,
And best of all the preachers are the men who live their creed,
To see good put in practice is what everybody needs.

When I see a deed of kindness I am eager to be kind;
When a weaker brother stumbles, and a strong man stands behind
Just to see if he can help him, then the wish grows strong in me
To become as big and thoughtful as I know a friend should be;
And travelers can witness that the best of guides today
Is not the one who tells them—but the one who shows the way.

THE WINDS

By Hallie Whitaker

The Winds come out of nowhere
To do their work at night;
The North Wind paints frost pictures
And makes the whole world white;

The East Wind drapes the mountains
In fog and silver rain;
The West Wind stars with bluets
The valley and the plain;

The South Wind swings the censer
For bees through perfumed hours,
Night-long it rocks the cradle
For sleepy birds and flowers.

And when their work is finished
Away the four Winds soar,
They all go back to nowhere
Till time to work once more.

Christianity can never be thankful enough for science. On our knees we should be grateful for her as one of God's most indispensible gifts. Nor should the fact that many a scientist, whose contributions we rejoice in was not sure about God, defer our gratitude. O America, my land,
By what infallible decree
Will they find succor at thy hand
When the torn nations turn to thee?
By this alone, that here we swear
Freedom shall live, whate'er the cost,
And that no human soul shall wear
The chains that come with freedom lost.

We cannot visualize the need of this world after the present war. We cannot think of the great Christian leaders out yonder in different lands. We cannot remember those great conferences of Oxford and Edinburgh, Amsterdam and Madras, without coming to feel the full and unusual quality of the Church of Christ and that you and I are part of it and that here supremely is emerging a new power and a new hope for the world.—Gordon Sisco.

The dangers of the international situation are due to a lack of the Christian spirit. The Christian Church comes to judgment because Christians know what they should do but do not do it. Today's need is for more preaching and more practice of Christ's principles. From the message of a Chinese priest in Wuchange, in 1936, translated by Bishop Gilman.

Personal Notes Of Interest

Head of Conference of Christians and Jews Named to Advisory Board of Columbia's "Light of the World"

New York, N. Y.—Dr. Everett R. Clinchy, President of the National Conference of Christians and Jews since its organization in 1928, has been appointed to the Advisory Board of Clergy for "Light of the World," CBS' serialized dramatization of the Holy Bible. (Mondays through Fridays 10:15 to 10:30 A. M., EWT. Rebroadcast 11:30 A. M.)

Of his affiliation with the "Light of the World" program, Dr. Clinchy declares:

"Dramatic presentation of the eternal verities of the Holy Scriptures is of infinite value, especially at this time when the whole nation and the whole world is being shaken by a tremendous war thrust upon us by an enemy that has denied these eternal truths and once called us decadent because we hold fast to our ideals."

Rev. John A. Staunton

The Rev. John Armitage Staunton died May 24 in Hammond, Ind., at the age of 80 years. Mr. Staunton, who in 1931 entered the Roman Communion, was one of the Episcopal Church's pioneer missionaries in the Philippines. He and his wife, who died in 1931, built up St Mary's Mission, Sagada, developing in connection with it a number of trades and crafts, printing press, saw mill, and garden.

Mr. Staunton was born in Adrian, Mich., April 14, 1864. Ordained deacon and priest in 1892, he did parish work in Idaho, New York, Ohio, and Massachusetts before going to the Philippines in 1901. He remained there until 1925 when he retired from the field and lived in Seattle, where he had charge of St. Michael's Mission until 1930.

NEWS LETTERS

pital I had a very pleasant visit with Dr. Hsu's daughter, who is very like her gracious mother. I was sorry not to have seen her brother, Dr. George Hsu.

My ticket for the bus was No. 3 so I had to get into the back. The mail bags were piled four feet high and it was quite a difficult climb up to the little nest about one foot from the top of the bus. One advantage was that there was absolutely no room for anyone else. I was sorry to miss the scenery, but I did get some good views of the 72 hairpin turns. The next day there was more room, but the leaking rain drops could not be avoided but my Gimbel coat kept me from getting wet. Rev. Mr. T. T. Yang was at the station to meet me.

Tsen Yi is a double city with two entirely separate walls on the two sides of the small river. In the home I was the guest of the Yangs and also of the widow of Rev. Alexander Tao-pin Wang and the wife of Mark Yang, who is about to graduate from the West China Divinity School. The latter has three most attractive young sons.

The congregation on Sunday was practically the Christian fellowship of Chekiang Government University. Rev. Mr. Li reports that this Gov. Univ. offers to receive four Boone students without examination because of the Diocesan School's good record. This is a splendid thing. Several of these students are thinking of the ministry. It is extremely important that our Hua Chung Divinity School should get started.

With loving greetings to all from

AN INTERESTING SIDE LIGHT

July 17th, 1944.

Rev. Gardiner M. Day,
1 Garden Street,
Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Dear Sir:

By chance I happened to read a recent issue of The Southern Churchman, in which appeared the Statement of Purpose of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. I immediately wrote to The Southern Churchman concerning the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, and Mr. Boyd advises that you are the President and suggests that I write to you.

I grew up in the Episcopal Church. My father, the late Thomas Seddon Taliaferro, Jr., was Chancellor of the Missionary District of Wyoming, and bishops, clergy and other church people were often guests at our house. I knew Bishop N. S. Thomas very well. I attended the Episcopal High School in Alexandria, Virginia (1914-1919). On occasion I have attended services at Episcopal Churches from Alexandria, Virginia, to Seattle, Washington, and I found them consistent and to be of the church I had come to know and love. Then a new Bishop was sent to the Missionary District of Wyoming and things have changed. The Rector of this Parish, a pre-Pearl Harbor chaplain with rank of major, is in the armed services and we are having locum tenens troubles. The last holder of that office declared to the Vestry and to other bodies that there is no difference between the Episcopal Church and the Roman Catholic Church except a political difference and that in doctrine they are identical. The Bishop of Wyoming, in a booklet prepared at his request and approved by him, declares that the word "Protestant" in the name of our church means bearing witness on behalf of the ancient faith. He recommends confirmation when minds are young and plastic, "at the age of nine—or even seven." The Bishop of Wyoming declares that the clergy who heretofore were Rectors of the Parish, A. F. Schepp, Morton Joslin and R. E. Abraham, are of a type that today is almost extinct in the Episcopal Church. The elements are reserved in many of the Wyoming churches, and the reason advanced for the reservation is that on occasion persons fall ill and cry out, "I want the sacrament, I want the sacrament," and the sacrament must be in readiness for such persons who are at the point of death.

A layman in Wyoming who dares to voice an opinion contrary to the present practices, but consistent with the churchmanship that used to prevail in Wyoming and in Virginia, is accused of lay popery, heresy and interference.

The Statement of Purpose which I read a few days ago would not indicate that the church I once knew is "practically extinct." I wish, therefore, that you would send me what literature there is as to the organization and enable me to join with you.

Yours very truly.

A. L. TALIAFERRO.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

More and more it is to be seen that in Christ are the principles of social regeneration and that He alone can unite all men, and that only in Himself. If the world is to be saved, He must be its Saviour.—F. L. Anderson.

Christianity can never be thankful enough for science, on our knees we should be grateful for her as one of God's most indispensable gifts. Nor should the fact that many a scientist, whose contributions we rejoice in was not sure about God, defer our gratitude. Cyrus the Persian is not the only one to whom the Eternal has said, "I will gird thee, though thou hast not known Me."—Fosdick.

We cannot visualize the need of this world after the present war. We cannot think of the great Christian leaders out yonder in different lands. We cannot remember those great conferences of Oxford and Edinburgh, Amsterdam and Madras, without coming to feel the full and unusual quality of the Church of Christ and that you and I are part of it and that here supremely is emerging a new power and a new hope for the world.—Gordon Sisco.

The dangers of the international situation are due to a lack of the Christian spirit. The Christian Church comes to judgment because Christians know what they should do, but do not do it. Today's need is for more preaching and more practice of Christ's principles. From the message of a Chinese priest in Wuchange, in 1936, translated by Bishop Gilman.

O America, my land,
By what infallible decree
Will they find succor at thy hand
When the torn nations turn to thee?
By this alone, that here we swear,
Freedom shall live, whate'er the cost,
And that no human soul shall wear
The chains that come with freedom lost.

—Leslie Pinckney Hill.

To me remains nor place nor time;
My country is in every clime:
I can be calm and free from care
On any shore, since God is there.

VISION

If we could see beyond a present sorrow,,
Beyond a present grief, as God can see,
We would be braver, knowing some tomorrow
Will still hold happiness for you and me.

If our blurred eyes could glimpse beyond their weeping,
The sunlit hills that someday we shall climb,
We would be stronger, and we would be keeping
A tryst with Hope through every darkened time.

If we could see beyond a fresh disaster,
The road smoothed out again before our eyes,
We would be calmer, and we would learn the faster
The lessons life unfolds to make us wise.

We are so blinded by a moment's grieving,
So hurt by any sorrow, any pain,
That we forget the joys, beyond believing,
The peace that some day will be ours again.

LETTERS

(Ref. Letter to Gardiner M. Day from A. L. Taliaferro with editorial in reply.)

Dixon, Wyo., August 4, 1944.

Editor, The Southern Churchman.

My dear Sir:

I have before me the last issue—July 29th—of your very valued church periodical, and I hasten to say a brief word in defense of the Bishop of Wyoming, under whose jurisdiction, by the grace of God, I serve.

I am very well aware of all the circumstances involved in this controversy —knowing practically all the rectors named in Mr. Taliaferro's letter. I also know the Bishop of Wyoming and on the occasion when the so-called "Lay Pope" charge was made,—I can but say it was high time for a Rev. Father in God to do something to stop good men from being discouraged and disheartened through dictation and criticism by the laity.

May I remind the Editor that the founder of the Christian faith, our blessed Lord, refused to acquiesce in the face of demands of the then hierarchy, and no man, priest, or bishop, is today in a position to bow to the will of an uninformed laity, where the furtherance of the Gospel of Jesus Christ is concerned.

This maligned Bishop, to my knowledge has not known a decent night's sleep for so long that he would not be able to enjoy the same if the opportunity presented itself. The ranges and hills of Wyoming are long and arduous, and such things as "particulars" of worship, this Bishop, hardly has time to argue. With 58 churches and all the heartaches that go with the administration of the same, he may easily be forgiven if his Episcopal patience was exhausted, as it was on this occasion, and he was reminded, within himself, that he was first of all a shepherd of souls, and that local conditions, owing to lay influence, was thwarting the whole purpose of the church, and so of the Gospel; therefore he spoke out, and may God give him the spiritual strength to do likewise again, if the need requires. It is so easy to write to an editor, some 2,000 miles away, who can know nothing of the internal conditions prevailing in Wyoming, but it is not so easy to cease from writing, and take the stand for Christ, which must if the spirit of man be honest, and with no bigotry of spirit evidenced in his soul cause him to go and do and do and do —in summer sunshine and winter snow. I am enclosing, under separate cover, a booklet which tells its own story. May I say that I am not a novice in the ministry, and I am entirely cognizant of the several events of our blessed Lord, in His ministry, on meeting with the legal element, the intelligensia of the day, the learned ones, as was your correspondent. But the learned one, even now as in Jesus' day, in the pursuance of their own personal convictions, seem to have lost track of some of the fundamentals—the following, not the least. "Go ye into all the world and make disciples."

If the Bishop of Wyoming can be called a follower and patron of Rome for so doing the mandate of his Lord, then all persons not in agreement will have to check from their list of "acceptables" the names of the Rt. Rev. Winfred H. Ziegler, Bishop of Wyoming and also—

In His service,
Rev. Cornelius L. Callahan,
Rector, Snake River Parish, Dixon, Wyoming.

To the Editor:

Recently The Southern Churchman asked for comments on the Statement of Purpose of The Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship. Though few have had the interest or taken the trouble to write, yet I beg to do so herewith, as I consider the matter one of great importance.

In many ways this Statement is a very fine exposition of the Christian Faith as enunciated in the Episcopal Church. In some other ways it contradicts that Faith and even parts of its own Statement.

The first paragraph of Sec. II is good so far as it goes: but neither that paragraph nor paragraph 5 of sec. III states any belief in Jesus as GOD. Nor do I see anywhere a statement that the Holy Spirit is GOD.

Paragraph 3 of Sec. II affirms the doctrine, (discipline and worship of this Church; while paragraph 7 of Sec. III denies the doctrine enunciated on page 529 of the Prayer Book, namely, the Preface to the Ordinal, the end of paragraph one of that Preface. This paragraph 7 of Sec. III of the Statement also contravenes the General Canons of the Church, thereby annulling the discipline of this Church, as well as rubrics regarding the necessity for having a "priest" as indicated in our Communion Service.

Agreeing that Baptism and Holy Communion are the only Sacraments generally necessary to salvation, yet paragraph 9 of Sec. II does not include Confirmation as a Sacramental part of Baptism. Does paragraph 11 of Sec. II mean to indicate that the Articles of Religion are correct in putting Confirmation as "a corrupt following of the Apostles," in spite of two definite incidents narrated in the Book of Acts of the Apostles?

The Statement of the paragraphs regarding Worship is mostly very fine,— even though paragraph 5 is open to discussion, especially when it does not say that the Statement does not refer to Baptised members of the Episcopal Church who might want to come to Communion without Confirmation.

I am sure that the members of the Fellowship are willing to pray to, and worship, Jesus Christ as God: but I see no affirmation of the doctrine of The Holy Trinity except in the general statement regarding the doctrine of the Episcopal Church—which doctrine is apparently abrogated in other respects in various parts of the Statement—as indicated above.

I do not believe that an actual "whale" swallowed Jonah; but I still do not like the expression in paragraph 4 of Sec. III that we are to criticise the Bible in order to discover "actual historical facts"—as though those facts were in the minority among statements in the New Testament.

I am a Virginia Seminary man myself. There still flourishes "green" within me the memory of "B. Green" and Cosby Bell. I still remember the latter's grand statement, contrary to "Modernism" at a Church Congress. that Jesus is "King of Kings and Lord of Lords."

Very truly,
Thom Williamson.

We trust our Subscribers approved this step, which we announced in our issues of July 22 and 29.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

A SENSE OF GUILT is an awful thing if it is allowed to remain and to gather an evil brood around it. But it is a wonderful thing if it pushes us to a point closer to an understanding of ourselves and of God. However, one way or another, it keeps at us and forces a decision which most of us put off as long as possible. Usually we try first to escape it, and it is amazing with what ingenuity our minds devise schemes and plans, all the way from digging up a scapegoat to attempting to rationalize our evil conduct out of existence. Just as Pilate could not wash the guilt out of his heart by soap and water applied to his hands, so we cannot be rid of it by any trickery or cleverness applied externally. Guilt marks the heart and seams the mind and must be rooted out by the painful process of repentance. That is why we hate persons who remind us of our guilt. Men hated Jesus because when in His presence they grew acutely aware of their sins. One of the most vivid illustrations of this is the story of the woman taken in adultery, whom Jesus deals with only after He has forced, by His silent presence alone, her accusers to face their own need for repentance.

Practically everyone has at one time or another suffered a sense of guilt. There is only one way to get rid of it, a far easier way than letting it haunt us and make the taste of life's draught bitter; and that is to acknowledge the guilt and restore that which has been broken or harmed or lost. It is dangerous to leave that guilty feeling gnawing away within, making us brood our way into a mental hospital or even an early grave.

Examples like Judas and Peter and Lady Macbeth and thousands more in the Bible and other literature and in the recent experience of most of us, should fill us with a respect for its power to crush us if we insist on carrying it with us.

IS IT NOT THE CROSS OF CHRIST—what Christ was, that forces us to the decision to take the necessary steps to ge beyond the saying or desiring of "out damned spot"? Men can have no joy in their work or in their pleasures until release comes. And Jesus, through His act upon the cross, has given us the way to this release. And we cannot forever turn away from the cross, for wherever we go we find it staring at us crying out in silence its message of loving forgiveness; the way of the cross leads beyond the awful moments of wrestling in the dark with our past, to a place where inner peace is our reward for hating what we've done sufficiently to get it up and heave it overboard tied to a huge piece of iron called sorrow by a rope named getting things straight or making things right.

During the precious days of man's independence in England before the industrial revolution brought slavery in its wake, there were various guilds for the crafts and arts of the day. Each one had a motto and a coat of arms. They were the unions of their day. One, the carpenter's guild, selected for its motto the words of Jesus "I am the door" and they probably considered Him an honorary member—was He not a carpenter too? Because of Jesus they wrought into every door the central reminder of His life. The two short panels above and the two long panels below in the doors of our house didn't just happen to be that way. The carpenter's guild of England made these panels so in order that in every home the cross would stand out in bold relief. Notice the doors in your own home. See if the cross is not there.

A sense of guilt is something to be rid of before its harm becomes irreparable. Jesus gave the cross its power to erase sin forever. All we need do is accept it and use it for yanking ourselves out of whatever mess we're in before another tomorrow comes.

COLLECT FOR ELEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

O God, Who declarest Thy Almighty power chiefly in showing mercy and pity; Mercifully grant unto us such a measure of Thy grace that we running the way of Thy Commandments, may obtain Thy gracious promises, and be made partakers of Thy Heavenly treasure; through Jesus Christ Our Lord. Amen.

The Creed in the Church Schools

By GEORGE CHRISTIAN ANDERSON

Rector, Trinity Church, Swarthmore, Pa.

I REMEMBER THE WORSHIP service in our church school when I was a boy. The superintendent read the invitation to the confession from Morning Prayer and we then recited the Confession. A psalm was read—often much too difficult for our young minds to comprehend—and the collects for the day were always preceded by the reciting of the Apostles' Creed. As I recall, the service had little meaning to us but unquestionably we were being exposed to "the traditional service of worship." It probably never occurred to the rector or to the superintendent that the service was more or less perfunctory and that the opportunity to lead us into a genuine act of worship was being lost. I am not so certain that we thought about any kind of worship—although I rather suspect that if the service of worship had been made more attractive, particularly if we had understood all the words, we could have entered into the service with more sincerity.

Fortunately, religious educators are recognizing the importance of worship in religious education. As Dr. Maurice Clarke points out in his book of Worship Services for Kindergarten and Primary Children "there is a new appreciation of the central place of worship in religion; of the place of the emotions in the development of Christian character; and of 'experience' in the religious education of boys and girls. It is not enough any longer to have an 'Opening Service,' something just to start the school off. It must be a Worship Service making children conscious of the presence of God, the loving Father, in forgiving and empowering grace, and evoking a response of reverence, gratitude, penitence, joy, and love; and giving 'tone' to the whole of the Church School session."

Such an experience cannot be shared by the children unless they understand the meaning of what is being said or recited. Many of the collects in the Prayer Book are far too difficult for the average boy or girl. Certainly the creeds of the chuch are beyond the comprehension of most of the younger children, although one suspects that the creeds are recited by children regardless of age in many schools of the Episcopal Church.

THE EPISCOPAL CHURCH is traditionally a "credal" church. The creeds play an important part in our liturgy. Unquestionably this is an asset for it prevents some of the vagueness of doctrine which characterizes so many of the Protestant faiths. There are Christians who feel that the use of the Apostles' Creed or the Nicene Creed is not a requisite for a Christian act of worship. Some would go farther and say that neither of these traditional creeds are essential to the practice of the Christian life. The Society of Friends clearly demonstrates this, for although they do not hold to the traditional doctrinal creeds, no one can deny that in Christian works they demonstrate the power of the living Christ on earth. The same can be said of many other distinguished Christian denominations.

There is a feeling among some Episcopalians that a worship service is not valid without the use of the doctrinal creeds. While, of course, the creeds express the major tenets of our faith, there are many other beliefs inherent in the Christian faith which the creeds do not express. Nothing is said of a belief in a God of love, or belief in one's responsibility to his fellow man. No mention is made of a brotherhood of man, with the possible exception of its implication in the article concerning "the Holy Catholic Church" or "the Communion of Saints."

While Episcopalians are obliged to teach the Apostles' Creed as a requisite for church membership in the Episcopal Church—and one can really make such instruction thrilling and quite acceptable—nevertheless it would seem worthwhile to occasionally substitute for the traditional creeds, those which are more understandable to those of church school age, especially children under sixteen years of age. Religious educators have recognized this and various creeds have been suggested for use in church schools. Although it is not essential that a creed of any kind be recited, it is a good practice to make some statement of belief during the act of worship. This can be done regardless of the tender age of the child. The important thing is to make certain that the child understands the meaning of what is being recited. Unless the child has an understanding, the pupil is merely reciting words which in no way are related to the child's own experience. Those who would pursue this type of training do it on the grounds that "let the child learn the words; the meaning can come later." But why not teach children words which they can understand, especially if the words can serve as an introduction to a more elaborately expressed formula to be taught later? The Apostles' Creed is a difficult doctrine for adults to understand. There are few children between the ages of five years and ten years who can experience a genuine act of worship in the reciting of the Nicene or the Apostles' Creed. It is even more difficult for them to understand the doctrines which the creed expresses. Unless a creed has value in worship or as instruction it would be better not to use one.

IT IS RECOGNIZED HOWEVER that a creed is an aid to worship, and various affirmations of faith have been suggested for use in services for children. The Forward Movement booklets often contain the following simple creed which may be used by children of a tender age. It merely consists of three lines—

Lord Jesus, I believe Thee,
Lord Jesus, I trust Thee,
Lord Jesus, I love Thee.

Another statement of faith which may be recited by the child is—

Dear God, I am your child,
You made me,
You keep me,
You trust me.

The Sanctus may be used not only as an expression of praise, but also as an expression of faith—

Holy, Holy, Holy,
Lord God of Hosts,
Heaven and Earth are full of Thy Glory,
Glory be to Thee, O Lord most high.

In "A Prayer Book for Boys and Girls" compiled by Margaret Cropper and published by the Student Christian Union Press, London, England, there is a brief credal statement which reads:

I believe in God,
Who made me,
Who loves me,
Who came to be with me,
Who comes to help and change me.

Few could express the mystery of the Incarnation in words more simple than these. Here in simple language is also the doctrine of Divine Love and Salvation. Certainly this creed makes more sense to a ten year old child than either the Apostles' or the Nicene Creed.

Dr. Maurice Clarke in his book to which reference has already been made suggests the following as a children's creed:

I believe in God above,
I believe in Jesus' love,
I believe His Spirit too,
Comes to teach me what to do.
I believe that I must be Kind and gentle, Lord, like Thee.

While on the staff of the Dragon School, the famous school for boys in Oxford, England, I was often amused by the observations of the Headmaster Mr. A. E. Lynam, who could not understand why "love" was usually rhymed with "above"! One could object to Dr. Clarke's creed on the ground that God is given a geographical location but this objection need not be taken too seriously in presenting the creed to smaller children.

AN EXCELLENT CREED which may serve toward a better understanding of the Apostles' Creed is found in "The Children's Service" published at The Church House, North Parade, Bradford, England. The writer has used this creed with much success and it was regularly recited at the church school (known as the Queen Victoria Guild) of the thousand year old St. Michael's-at-the-North Gate, Oxford. I was rather surprised that such a conservative church as St. Michael's would provide a substitute for the ancient creeds but I was reassured as to the orthodoxy of the parish when I was instructed to read the Athanasian Creed during Matins on Trinity Sunday! The creed in "The Children's Service" follows:

I believe in God the Father, Maker of heaven and earth, Who loves me and all His children: And in Jesus Christ, His Son, Who came down from Heaven to live amongst men; He died upon the cross: He rose to life again and went back to Heaven, where He lives for ever as our King. I believe in the Holy Spirit, Who helps me to be a faithful member of the Church: I believe that my sins are all forgiven: and I hope to live forever with the Saints above. Amen.

This creed provides most of the doctrines of the church in language which most children can comprehend. It serves as a commentary on the Apostles' Creed and gives meaning to the traditional beliefs within the framework of the more difficult creeds. Someone has wisely said that faith and understanding come first and creeds afterwards. Creeds are merely an expression of the understanding one has of religious truths. It would seem wise to teach religious truths a child might understand and then eventually summarize these truths in a brief formula which could be recited regularly. In the minds of many teachers this is a more sensible method than making a child learn a creed, and in so doing take the chance that a faith would emerge as the creed became intelligible to the child. Actually the early Christian creeds came into being because they summarized the faith of those first followers of Christ. When we begin training children to experience God and to have a real understanding of Jesus, instead of making them automatons reciting things about which they have no comprehension, then perhaps religion will be much more meaningful and real to them.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

Jeremiah! And Jeremiah saw something of this, too, before he slipped away.

Into his writings, after the taking away of the first exiles into Babylon,—but before the final destruction of Jerusalem,—there comes a new note, a note of hope, —almost of triumph. Many of those first Exiles were his disciples,—followers of the way that old Isaiah had first laid down,—the "righteous remnant." In them Jeremiah began to see the answer to that problem which had been with him for a lifetime, the question that had put the minor note, the touch of wistful sadness into so much that he wrote:—these first Exiles, now safely away from doomed Jerusalem, were the best of Judah,—somehow, someway, God would preserve them,—and out of them, purified by suffering, would come a better Israel.

In them,—in the newborn hope for a newborn Judah, —he sees the fulfilment of his own life, the fruit of it, the reward of it. He sees, far through the darkness and the gloom, a light glimmering,—and it grows brighter and brighter as he nears his end. We know that it is the dawning light of Christ. Jeremiah does not know that: but he does know that it is indeed the light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day!

There is considerable evidence to lead us to believe that Jeremiah wrote the Twenty-third Psalm. But even if he did not, it expresses so perfectly the quality of faith which he finally won for his own, that I feel I should like to close this story of him by reading it to you. He who had so loved the brown hills of Judea,—he who had so often followed both sheep and shepherd through the mountain pastures, might well have said,—

"The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters. He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake. Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me. Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou anointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life; and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever." Amen.

Isn't Everyone Handicapped?

By MARY JUNKIN

Director of Curative Work Shop, Richmond, Va.

IF EVERYONE HAD THREE LEGS, a person with two legs would excite both pity and curiosity in those who met him, but it just could be possible that the two-legged person was a more efficient machine than the three-legged one.

Our emotional reaction to physical handicaps is still very primitive. The physically handicapped person is apt to meet either pity, embarrassment, overconcern, dislike and hostility, or ridicule.

Pity and sympathy are often confused. Pity is possibly the more difficult of these attitudes to cope with. You cannot pity an equal. In order to pity someone you set him apart as something different from yourself. It isn't at all the noble sentiment we have sometimes been led to believe. Its mammy is a feeling of superiority—and its pappy, a feeling of relief from our own deficiencies.

It has been said by many writers in the field of the handicapped that if the habit of making comparisons detrimental to him could be eliminated, the cripple's psychological problems would largely be solved. This puts a great burden of responsibility upon each of us in meeting the increasing number of physically handicapped. Don't let war glamor fool anyone into thinking that these attitudes have as yet basically changed.

Our feeling of embarrassment or being ill at ease with those who have physical differences comes from just that feeling of difference and insecurity about knowing how it feels not to have an arm or leg, or to have one that won't work. It should help this feeling to know that a person who has lost a leg feels physically just as whole as he ever did. It is difficult for many people born with a slight impairment or hearing loss to believe that everyone else does not hear just as they do. The feeling of being different is in the mind and is the result of continually seeing others react as though he were different.

MANY NORMALLY EQUIPPED young people have just as serious a time as any physically handicapped one in choosing goals that are within their reach, and forgetting themselves in their attainment, and in feeling socially adequate. A correct understanding of this will help a lot to change our sentimental attitude toward physical handicaps; and we must change it if we are not to be personally responsible for forcing either emotional dependence, over-compensation, or a defensive attitude.

I had not thought much about how much we insist upon being on the giving end of this relationship, until one day I asked a young friend to go to the movies, expecting to "take" her. When we got to the ticket office, I found I had forgotten my billfold and had only 23 cents, so she took me. There was no doubt that she enjoyed the show more than any we had seen together. I felt very humble when I realized that I "minded" her taking me.

Another place that we feel insecure is in knowing how much physical help to give. That is the place that the real difference between pity and sympathy becomes apparent. Pity—compassion; sympathy—having a mutual feeling for another. If you put your complete attention on the other person, you will have so far forgotten your own feeling of inadequacy that this will solve itself, and you won't open the door for a lame man with two good arms unless he is carrying something in his arms; but you will remember not to put a glass of water on the edge of the table where he may knock it off if he is awkward with his arms.

It is hard for many people to realize that in the present day physical differences are actually the subject of ridicule and dislike. All you need do to change this impression is to count the number of radio programs depending for their humor on speech defects. I went to a recent army show where a young sergeant brought down the house with laughter by his acting of a head jerk at regular intervals in his lines. I have been giving exercises to a boy all winter with a jerk just like it that has been a source of such embarrassment to him that he had made no friends of his own age and his two years in high school have been as if he were a spectator and never a participant in what was going on.

THIS BRINGS UP THE POINT that the sympathy aroused by the physically handicapped is usually in inverse proportion to the need for it. A beautiful girl with a limp will call forth sympathy of this nature from everyone—"Isn't it a pity for such a beautiful girl to be lame?" But what about the homely girl (and all of us homely girls are handicapped!) who was born with a muscular in-co-ordination so that she walks with a lurching gait and can't swallow very well and has trouble with her speech? Clerks in the stores always ask the person with her what she wants as if she were not quite right in her head. But if she were here, I would get her to write this paper because she writes much better than I do and she wouldn't have to hunt and peck like I do. Last week when she was riding home from school on the bus, she heard one lady ask another, "What can that girl's mother mean letting her go around on the bus alone like that?" She said she simply could not resist turning to the woman and saying, "My mother is a very intelligent woman." Neither of these women would have asked this question had they understood the cause of her condition. She, like thousands of others in our country, had a hemorrhage at birth in a part of the brain controlling muscular movements but having no effect on what she thinks with. The same thing could happen to any of the rest of us as a result of a head injury.

I know a man with two artificial legs who drives his own car and has a good job and a family. I know a blind kirl who keeps house for herself and her husband, doing all the cooking and housework by herself. I know a girl born with one arm who can cut out a dress and sew it up all by herself. I have never heard anyone refer to any of them as handicapped. These three have all along the way either received or demanded normal acceptance with normal people—and they are normal people.—From Presbyterian Youth.

A Challenge to the Church

The Christian Church in America must prepare now for the homecoming of service men and women, or suffer the sure consequences of irreparable losses.

If the Church is not alive to its immediate and pressing task to minister effectively to discharged members of the armed forces, many of whom are already being returned to civilian life, America will be faced with a repetition of the tidal wave of sensuality and vulgarity and corruption that followed the close of the last war.

The fundamental problem of the Church is to see to it that the stopping of this war is not worse than its prosecution. If men are to emerge from an existence dedicated to killing and the employment of brute force, it will be by religious conviction, by the faith of individuals who believe that God intends man to be free but pure.

Our concern must be that they emerge from their present narrow existence into one of wider interests, sounder judgments, and equipped with materials—physical and spiritual—necessary to taking on mature roles in a democratic and Christian state.

THE REAL PROBLEM

In the abstract theorizing of churchmen who see returning service men as "problems to be solved," it is rather the church, not the men themselves, that is the real problem in the ministry to returning veterans.

Man's extremity is now, as ever, God's opportunity, and in foxholes and on life rafts many service men are having a real and vital spiritual experience, the value of which the Church should capitalize upon rather than carp at.

Measuring such experience against the ivory-tower kind one sees too frequently in organized religion, the difference is that this turning to God in times of extremity at least has the value of being as real as it is intense.

Men and women went into the service disillusioned. They went into this war reluctantly, many of them cynically. Now, in most cases, that disillusion has dropped away, and they grow, under fire, into a broad understanding of what freedom and faith mean. They've seen what Nazi and Japanese doctrines do to human personality. And while they may not go for shibboleth and ballyhoo, and are suspicious of all propaganda, they have come to appreciate and believe in the fundamental values of democracy and Christian faith.

Throwing the onus of "being a problem" upon the Church itself, people who worry about the morals of soldiers should know that they worry about the morals of the folks back home.

The stories of strikes by labor unions who exploit the national emergency for their own advantage have given rise to much anger and bitterness. Stories of juvenile delinquency—in which they sometime fear their own sweethearts and wives may be involved—disturb them. They are equally angry at those who play the black markets or avoid their responsibilities in taxation or the buying of bonds.

They express concern about any evidence of racial antagonism or religious persecution at a time when we are fighting systems which have flourished on bigotry. And they ask: "What is the Church doing on the home front to combat these enemies of the cause for which we fight and die?"—From the Spiritual Issues of the War—English.

Understanding the Prophets

JEREMIAH

A Prophet Faces Disaster

By WILLIAM R. MOODY

IN ORDER TO UNDERSTAND the prophets of Israel you must understand one thing: they all believed that history is God's act, centered upon God's Israel. Whatever happens, happens because God wills it so! And whatever God wills is righteous, because God is righteous. If a Jewish army were defeated in battle, and a king slain, then God did it! For the prophets were convinced that God could give victory to whom He pleased, and that it was nothing to Him to save by many or by few. They believed that one man on God's side could put to flight a thousand who stood against God's will. Therefore, if the heathen prevailed against Israel it was God's doing.

Out of this fixed and sure belief arose the great and central problem in Hebrew prophecy,—which is also the central problem in the Bible, and in our Christian Faith,—the problem of evil, and the problem of suffering. If God is; and if He is all-wise, and all-loving, and all-powerful,—as we say He is,—then why does He allow evil to exist in the world; and why does He let people suffer?

The earlier prophets had an easy answer for this question. They said, "Israel is a nation under a Covenant, and they have broken the Covenant." Those prophets went back to the work of Moses, and to the Covenant of Sinai. God set the Children of Israel free from Egyptian bondage, not because they deserved it, but because He was gracious: therefore the Children of Israel owed to God the moral debt of obedience. When they broke that Covenant, either as individuals or as a nation, they made themselves liable to punishment.

ALL THE PROPHETS OF ISRAEL from the first to the last, from Abraham to John the Baptist, saw that this was true,—and we see that it is true today. If we owe to the Righteous God the moral duty of obedience, and if we refuse Him that obedience and break His laws, then we can expect to suffer for it, and we have no right of complaint. That was the first premise of the preaching of the prophets, and it has its place in Christian preaching, today. Men and women,—yes, and nations, too,—who have broken God's laws of morality and justice, must be convicted before the bar of conscience, and must be assured of the inevitable retribution to come!

That is a necessary part of prophetic religion, and of prophetic preaching: but it does not solve the problem of evil, nor of suffering. It solves part of it! It solves the question of why the wicked suffer; but sometimes the righteous suffer, too. When once that question has been clearly formulated, it must be answered. For if it cannot be answered, then all high religion fails.

In that question it is not the morality of man that is on trial, it is the morality of God,—even the existence of God. Is this a blind world, moralless, ruled by force and by chance, in which righteousness means nothing, in which courage and loyalty, and love of one's country are foolish, and morality a joke? Is there at the heart of this universe a cruel jester, a capricious tyrant? Or a dead and empty void, in which our prayers lose themselves in endless and unanswering night? We reject the thought, as the prophets rejected it! It is abhorrent to us! There is a God who cares for us, a God of honor, and justice, and truth!

Then why do we so often see the wicked flourishing, while the righteous suffer and perish? The climax of the Old Testament comes when the prophets face that question, when in sorrow and torment of soul they begin to struggle through it towards an answer, like men in darkness on a wilderness road.

We see this coming to its climax first in the writings of Jeremiah. There is the same strong preaching in Jeremiah against wickedness that we find in the other prophets. He understands that Jerusalem must be destroyed because of the sins of her people, because of their rebellion against God, because of the fearful evils wrought by former kings; but underneath that familiar pattern there is a great tide moving in that man's heart and mind, and it touches this deep thing. In Jeremiah, for the first time in Hebrew History, there is poured out before us the anguish of a bruised and faithful soul, crying out to God,—crying, crying for an answer to the central mystery of our life on this planet, foreshadowing, so long before the time, those terrible words of Christ upon the Cross,—"My God! My God! Why hast Thou forsaken me!"

It is hard to pick out of Jeremiah's life one incident typical of that life,—hard because there are so many incidents. It is difficult to choose between them. I am going to take an incident from the beginning of his ministry; and because our time is short, and I cannot say all I would like to say, I hope you will take this as a pattern, to help you understand the man's whole life in that time of storm, his faith, his struggle, and his triumph, his message.

JEREMIAH WAS BORN, of a priestly family, in the little town of Anathoth, six miles north of Jerusalem. The priests of that day had their own villages, scattered about Jerusalem,—for the most part within walking distance,—surrounded by their farms. There they lived and worked, and only went up to Jerusalem when the time came to take their share in the priestly work of the Temple, and at the great Feasts. They went up by courses, a whole village at a time. Some of these country priests were actually shoved out of their right to officiate in the Temple services by their more influential city brethren.

As a boy and as a young man Jeremiah was not like his fellows. He was shy, and perhaps a bit frail. He stayed much by himself. The other young men of the town were strong and rough, and when they came in from the fields, or from the city, laughing and full of banter, he felt out of place among them,—and they realized it, and resented it. He did not seem to care for their company. He would rather walk out across the fields by himself, looking at the flight of the birds, and at the cattle. Sometimes, in the spring, they would see him standing a whole hour before an almond tree in blossom, drinking in the loveliness of it with hungry eyes. It mattered nothing to them that he was a poet, and that he already wrote down scraps of verse, and sat late at night working by the light of a little wick floating in the oil, to polish them,—to make the Hebrew words sound like the rush of the wind he was describing, or like the sound of the water running in the spring; or to make them picture the wild ass stamping upon the hill-top, and tossing his head to the sky. Jeremiah is one of the greatest poets that the Hebrew race has known. The words of his prophecy sing like music; and there is in them a haunting quality, a minor note, to other Hebrew poetry quite unknown.

His fellow-townsmen misunderstood him. They thought him "stand-offish," "up-stage"; he did not dislike them,—he wanted to be like them! He envied them their strength, their lustiness, their animal intensity! And he wanted them to like him; but he did not know how to accomplish it; so he sank more and more into himself, and away from them. The whole village was amused, and then angered, when one day he stood up in the market-place and began to prophesy!

He stood up before them,—before the young men and the elders,—his face drained of blood, his lips compressed, his fingers picking nervously at his coat, and he began to tell them about a dream that had come to him,—as Joseph had told of his dream so many centuries before.

REAL COURAGE IS RARE. It is not so courageous to rush into a thing in the heat of anger; or to take the shock of the conflict because you love it! But to stand up and do a thing of which you are mortally afraid, that is courage,—to stand there when your knees turn to water, and your heart is pounding in your throat, and to see it through!

"I dreamed," he said, "and in my dream I saw a branch of an almond tree grow out across the wall of my room; and I saw buds come on it, as in the early spring, and they opened, and there were the almond blossoms, as if moved by the breeze. And I heard the Voice of the Lord speaking to me. And He said, 'Jeremiah! What do you see?' And I said, 'I see almond blossoms!' And He said to me, 'Listen! As the almond blossom is the first bud out in the spring, so the thing that I shall tell you shall quickly come to pass!' And as I dreamed, it seemed to me that I arose from my couch, and went to the window. And I looked out toward the north; and there, filling the sky like sunrise in the north was a great iron pot, red with the flames and seething! And as I looked it tilted, and a fearful burning tide rushed from it southward over the land; and the cities burned at the touch of that flood; and when it had passed, there was a desert behind it; no man, no grass, no tree, no bird to break the dreadful solitude!"

Nobody in the market-place said a word, they were so astonished! They sat there, looking at Jeremiah, and he looked back at them, paler than ever. Everyone knew about the terrible and barbarous Sythians who had driven south from central Asia as far as the plains of the Euphrates a year before. There they had met and had broken an Assyrian army! Tales of these terrible men who rode on swift horses as if they had been born on them, and who knotted their long hair on top of their heads, and wore human knuckle-bones like rings in their noses, had frightened the whole countryside. Was this a joke that Jeremiah was playing? Some young fellow snickered behind his hand.

Then Jeremiah spoke again. "God spoke to me," he said, "and I heard His voice,—'Before I formed you, I knew you; and before I brought you forth out of the womb I sanctified you, and I ordained you to be a prophet unto the nations!' And I said, 'Ah, Lord God! Look at me! I cannot speak! I am but a child!' But the Lord said to me, 'Say not, I am a child! For you shall go to all that I shall send you, and whatsoever I command you, you shall speak! Be not afraid of their faces; for I am with you to deliver you!'"

Then the oldest man in the group answered,—a man of great dignity, well thought of in the Temple in Jerusalem,—"What else did the Lord say to you?"

"The Lord warned me to say to you that you should keep God's Covenant, or perish! You say that you keep the Law; yet you own slaves that are Hebrews. You know that it is written in the Law of God, in His Holy Covenant, that no Hebrew shall be enslaved, here, in the Promised Land, forever! How is it written in the Law? It is written that no man shall keep his brother of the stock of Abraham in slavery for more than six years, and that in the seventh year he shall let him go free. You have a man who has served your family fifty years, and is still a slave; and you have a woman and her children who have been in bondage to you more than twenty years; and you have Nathan, who now hears me, who has served twice his time; and you, and you, and you, and you, have others who have served as long!"

At that half a dozen of the Elders were on their feet. "Enough of this! So you claim to be a prophet! Well, we are prophets, too; and we will now make a prophecy to you! Prophesy no more in this place, or we will see to it that you prophesy nowhere else forever!"

And the next morning the Elders of Anathoth waited upon Jeremiah in his father's house. "You are a disturbing element in our town. We think it would be best for our health,—and for yours,—if you should move your place of residence."

SO JEREMIAH WENT OUT from his father's house forever. Thus he began to learn in his heart and mind,—and one day he would learn in his flesh,—the terrible cost in following God in a blind and selfish nation! For God does not compromise! And those who follow Him truly cannot compromise either!

Why did God choose Jeremiah? Was he fitted to be a prophet in that time of storm? He hated conflict. His nature craved affection. He desired to be loved, to be respected. A slight stung him like a blow. But he was honest. He never turned back from his duty. He would not lie. And what he prophesied came true!

God needed a man like that. God needed him then. I think perhaps God needs one now! God needed a man to stand as His witness through the terrible destruction of Jerusalem, a man who would feel the pain of those blows as if they had been in his own body; a man who could look through the pain of them, and see why they were given, and what lay beyond.

Although Jeremiah never saw the full answer to his great and terrible question,—he saw enough of it to help save his Nation, and his Faith. For Israel, in Exile, listened to Jeremiah, as Israel had never listened to him when he was alive. He had carefully written his lifework into a Book. The beauty of it, the haunting melody of it, the stark truth of it,—seen in retrospect,—touched and moved them. But more than the Book, it was the memory of his life that found them. He had suffered for them; and somehow the feeling came to them, that his suffering had helped to take away their sins. Finally, when they thought of Israel, faithful amid the sorrow of exile, Israel was

ERIC A. JOHNSTON ISSUES STATEMENT

Says Peace Pact Must Be Based on Christian Ethic

Blames World Upheaval on Neglect of Permanent and Unalterable Moral Principles and Spiritual Values—Never More Essential Than at This Time

Washington, D. C.—Eric A. Johnston, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and prominent layman of the Episcopal Church, asserted just before leaving for his trip to Russia, that if the world order to be established after the war is to last, "it must rest upon the bedrock of moral and spiritual principles and precepts applicable to all mankind under all circumstances.

"The world may change," Mr. Johnston said, "but these do not change.

"Any plans we may lay or any policies we adopt which are based upon changing materialistic premises will not outlast the years. Even from a secular viewpoint we need something to tie to, something permanent and unalterable by which we can chart our course and which will give us a sense of direction and will enable us to distinguish between what is lasting and real and what is passing and illusory.

"The Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man are not sonorous phrases expressing a nebulous and unattainable ideal," Mr. Johnston continued. "They are a rule of conduct as applicable to the affairs of men today as they were two thousand years ago. Perhaps they are even more applicable, and more needed, as the storm of battle rages and the shadows of conflict deepen.

"They have a very practical bearing upon many of the problems which now confront us and even graver problems we shall encounter when the time comes to rebuild a badly shattered world.

"Many of the troubles with which we are now contending are of our own making and they are due to the fact that we have turned our backs upon basic moral principles, some of which we are fighting to uphold. We condemn selfishness, hate, greed, rancor, the spirit of revenge, and the scramble for material possessions in the abstract, but only too often we overlook them in our dealings with others.

"Today we must work together, taking cognizance of one another's needs and one another's distress, if we are to achieve our common aims and realize our common hopes. At no time in history have faith, hope and charity come to play so important a part in the affairs of men, and at no time have moral and spiritual values weighed so heavily in the scales of human destiny."

Eric A. Johnston, President of the United States Chamber of Commerce, and prominent Episcopal Churchman, pleads that postwar planning be guided by moral and spiritual principles, and be based upon recognition of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man. "At no time have moral and spiritual values weighed so heavily in the scales of human destiny," Mr. Johnston said.

OLD HOME CHURCH SUNDAY

August 20, 1944

A DAY OF RECOGNITION, REMEMBRANCE, AND RESOLUTION

OLD HOME SUNDAY is a simultaneously observed event in the Churches of America to glorify the Lord Jesus Christ; and, through family fellowship in service and song, to strengthen home ties, ennoble all life, and open to us ever increasingly better days.

An Adaptable program for City Churches includes four features:

I. An Early Morning Communion Service. The appealing words of the Master, "This do in remembrance of Me," come with peculiar force as we seek first the spiritual in OLD HOME CHURCH SUNDAY. As all Churches have their appropriate ways and means for observing The Lord's Supper, individual congregations will naturally follow their own approved methods whereby they are accustomed to enter most worshipfully into this holy service.

II. A Morning Service of Recognition. Because of the intensely personal quality in OLD HOME CHURCH SUNDAY services, the Organ and Choral Music should be only Hymns of Christian Faith and Hope—known and loved by all.
   1. In Memoriam.
      In loving memory of former members in the OLD HOME CHURCH "asleep in Jesus" "loved long since and lost awhile."
   2. In Remembrance of Founding Fathers of the Local Church.
      The names of these notable men should be read each year, that their lives and labors may never be forgotten.
   3. In Recognition of Members of the Local Church Who Have Gone Into Ministerial or Missionary Service. List each one with particular care lest some one may be overlooked. This is very important and ought to be extremely impressive.
   4. Sermon: This is my own, my OLD HOME CHURCH!" The Sermon should be by one of the "Church's Very Own"—home for this special service.

III. An Afternoon Service of Appreciation. A Period of Thanksgiving: each one to tell publicly the particular person in the OLD HOME CHURCH to whom he is most indebted; and for whose helpfulness he most appreciatively thanks the loving Heavenly Father.

IV. An Evening Evangelistic Service of Life Challenging Resolution. Everything to contribute to one idea: an appeal to "Carry On" in the OLD HOME CHURCH.

In Country Churches all four features may be advantageously grouped, "I and II" coming in the forenoon, with a family and neighborhood picnic dinner at noon, to be followed by "III and IV" in the afternoon. The entire day is filled with enriching fellowship as friends from far and near mingle freely in an interchange of greetings, renewing old relationships and making new ones.

RURAL CHURCH WORK CONFERENCE

Shortage of Clergy in Rural Fields Causing Difficulty

Madison, Wis.—The Rural Church Work Conference discovered at its meeting July 10-24, that the current shortage of clergy, due to men withdrawing from parochial work to become chaplains, is causing special difficulty in the rural field.

Even in peace time, the supply is far below what is needed. Church leaders normally fail to do all that they could to encourage in theological students a vocation for rural work, and at present, the Conference findings point out, seminaries and bishops are not using to the full the opportunities provided by Selective Service to enlist more men for the ministry. Home mission work is of strategic importance in the United States, students of the situation are convinced. The Conference felt that more steps should be taken to enlist for the Church's service boys now in preparatory school and college, and to provide financial aid where needed. The in-service training program of the clergy, now being promoted through conferences sponsored by the National Council's division of domestic missions in cooperation with the state colleges was endorsed by the Conference.

A second point of major emphasis at Madison was that clergy working in rural fields should more and more work in relation to the whole community. Although holding that worship and spiritual ministry to individuals, was the central function of the Church, the Conference urges increased cooperation with community welfare agencies.

This was the twenty-second annual meeting of the Conference, directed this year by the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, associate secretary of the National Council's domestic missions division, and by Prof. J. H. Kolb, head of the rural sociology department, College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin. More than fifty clergy and lay workers from thirty dioceses and Canada, took part.

Among other matters discussed was the greater use of small radio broadcasting stations, of visual aids, and of work of correspondence, as methods in religious education, to extend the teaching and influence of the Church to all unchurched persons, who, either by attitude or isolation are remote from Christian teaching or influence.

The Conference heard of the program for vitalizing the work of the Episcopal Church among Negroes, and went on record requesting the National Council to make every effort to obtain financial support commensurate with the need and opportunity which the present situation affords. The resettlement of Japanese-Americans in rural communities was called to the attention of the Church as one of its primary concerns during the next few years. The ministry which many clergy are now providing for agricultural laborers imported from the West Indies was commended. Church people, it is felt, should inform themselves further, about the dispersion of these agricultural migrants, imported to the United States. Many are Anglican Churchmen.

Theological schools were commended by the Conference for the increased attention some are now giving to the preparation of men for town and country mission work. The Conference appealed for a longer tenure of clergy in rural parishes and for a policy in clergy placement that would avoid extreme variations in policy and Church methods.

Recruiting and training of more women for mission work was urged.

The place that farm schools can fill in developing community fellowship was illustrated in the report of Patterson Farm School, Legerwood, N. C., of which Mr. George Wiese is director.

The National Council's program for the promotion of rural Church work through the division of domestic missions was commended by the Conference, which also expressed its eagerness that an additional secretary be added to the division of domestic missions in order to provide more extensive field service in the survey and promotion of the town-country work.

SOCIAL SECURITY FOR LAY EMPLOYEES OF CHURCHES APPROVED

New York, N. Y.—In a resolution adopted at its annual meeting at Lake Geneva, Wisconsin, June 19-25, the Association of Council Secretaries approved in principle the extension of coverage under the Social Security Act to lay employees of all churches, religious institutions, denominational and interdenominational agencies.

The resolution specifically empowered officers of the Association, as well as the secretaries of local councils, to communicate this attitude regarding such legislation to members of Congress, and requested the Inter-Council Field Department to "stimulate and coordinate interest along this line in all denominational bodies."

(Two bills now pending in Congress which would provide for the extension of social security coverage to lay employees of churches and church bodies are the Wagner-Murray-Dingell Bill, S 1161, a comprehensive social security bill which includes a provision for extending old age and survivors' insurance and unemployment compensation to employees of non-profit institutions; and the Lynch Bill, HR 3204, which would amend the Social Security Act and provide for the establishment by the federal government of old age and survivors insurance for employees of religious, charitable, educational and certain other tax-exempt organizations.)

The new officers of the Association elected at the Conference are: President, E. C. Farnham of Los Angeles; Vice-Presidents, H. J. Baumgartel, of Indianapolis, and H. Henry Carpenter, of Brooklyn; Secretary, Marion L. Ulmer of Portland, Oregon; Treasurer, W. H. Thompson of Columbus, Ohio.

Personal Notes Of Interest

Bishop Richard A. Kirchhoffer, of Indianapolis, was injured by a fall on the stairs of his home on June 27. He was taken to City Hospital, where an X-ray examination disclosed a fractured back at the sixth vertebra. After two weeks in the hospital the Bishop was put in a cast for at least four months, after which he will wear a steel brace. All summer plans have necessarily had to be canceled, but he has been able to return to his home on Wilkshire Road, and it is hoped that he will be able to take care of his administrative duties. It is expected that he will be able to keep most of his fall appointments.

The Rev. Canon Henry A. Link is now in residence at St. Andrew's School, St. Andrew's, Tenn.

The Rev. Francis P. Davis, formerly rector of St. John's, Bellefonte, Pa., is now rector of Trinity Church, Williamsport, Diocese of Harrisburg. His address is 844 West Fourth Street, Williamsport, Pa.

The Rev. George W. Morrel, for the past three and a half years rector of St. John's Parish, Petaluma, California, is to be rector of the Church of St. Mary the Virgin, San Francisco, California, effective August 15th. In addition to his duties as rector of the San Francisco parish, Mr. Morrel will con-

What Will the Seminaries Do For the Peace?

Your theological faculties do not pretend to have a quick and simple formula for solving all the world's ills. Yet theological schools have much to do with the coming Peace.

They must train men who in the days to come will minister both to people bewildered and downcast by the war, and to those who must take on the heavy post-war responsibilities. Tomorrow's clergy have to furnish inspiration and hope to the laymen who make historic decisions, and to set forth the moral principles on which these decisions should be based. Such ministers need all the Theology, Bible, Church History and "tooling up" and planning to make their curricula as effective as possible.

Will you help them

Miss Jean Elizabeth Gee, R. N., of Deer River, Minnesota, has been appointed nurse at St. Timothy's Hospital, Liberia, the Overseas Department of the National Council announces. It is hoped that she may be able to fly to her field of work early in September.

Miss Gee is 22 years old, a member of Holy Trinity Parish, Minneapolis, a graduate of the Deer River, Minn., High School and of the Los Angeles County General Hospital, from which she graduated in 1941. Later she took a special course in Public Health Nursing at the University of Minnesota.

UNDERGOES OPERATION

Mrs. Frank W. Creighton, wife of the Bishop of Michigan, underwent a major operation at a Detroit hospital early in July. Mrs. Creighton is making satisfactory progress toward recovery.

Miss Louise Strong Hammond, returning from China because of serious illness, has arrived in Chicago, and is in the Passavant Memorial Hospital. Miss Hammond went to China in 1913 and spent most of the intervening years in evangelistic work in the Diocese of Shanghai until 1936. She returned to the United States that year on account of illness, but went back to China in 1939, going to Chungking, where she has been helping the Rev. Stephen Tsang, Chinese priest in charge of Grace Church.

MISSIONARIES APPOINTED

Overseas Department of the National Council announces the appointment of two new missionaries who will go to their fields in the early autumn.

Miss Mary Francis Bemont, of Baltimore, a member of Grace and St. Peter's Parish there, will become director of religious education at All Saints, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, succeeding Deaconess Harriet H. English. She will leave in the late summer or early fall.

Miss Bemont is a graduate of the New York Training School for Deaconesses, with special work for three summers at Teachers' College, in religious education. She was for three years director of religious education at Grace Church, White Plains, N. Y., and held the same position at Grace and St. Peter's, Baltimore, for seven years. She has taught at the Valley Forge Conference for Young People for ten years, and was a delegate to the Amsterdam Conference in 1939.

DEATHS

THE REV. J. H. KOBAYASHI

A delayed message from Tokyo announces the death last May of the Rev. J. H. Kobayashi, who was headmaster of St. Margaret's School, Tokyo, from 1910 to 1940 and also chaplain from 1903 to 1940. Under his direction, with Miss Gertrude Heywood as American principal, St. Margaret's, enrolling from 400 to 600 girls, came to be one of the finest schools in Tokyo, or in Japan. After he retired as head, Dr. Kobayashi continued as councilor and a member of the board of trustees. Bishop Charles S. Reifsnider, formerly of Tokyo, who knew Dr. Kobayashi well and worked with him for many years, writes, "Dear old Dr. Kobayashi loved and prayed for perpetual peace between his beloved adopted country, America, and his native land. I know he has done much to strengthen the Christian attitude at the school in these war days, and I know how his heart has been rent by the present warfare between his two loved countries."

DR. CHARLES O. BANKS

The community of Brooklyn has suffered a serious loss in the death of Dr. Charles O. Banks, organist and master of the choristers at St. Luke's Church, Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, at the age of 48. The great church was crowded at 8 P. M. on July 23, when Rev. Rush R. Sloan, former rector of the parish, pronounced an able eulogy, stressing the great influence of the dead musician upon those who came under his charge. The choir sang without the organ which had been dismantled for the purpose of rebuilding. In the absence of the rector, Rev. John H. S. Putnam, in California, Rev. Floyd Appleton is in charge of the parish. The Choirmasters of the Church of the Messiah, and of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, have also recently died.

KILLED IN ACTION

The Rev. Edward J. Clary, Chaplain in the United States Army, was killed in action in France July 15. Before becoming a chaplain, Mr. Clary was rector of Grace Church, Goochland, and St. Mary's Church, Lorraine, Virginia. This was his only parish before becoming a chaplain, except for St. John's Church, Columbia, and Grace Church, Bremo Bluff, Virginia, where he was in charge for a short period in connection with his work at Goochland. Mr. Clary received his master's degree from the University of Richmond in 1937 where he was an honor student in Greek. He graduated from the Virginia Theological Seminary in 1940, and after being ordained to the Diaconate by Bishop Tucker, was sent to Grace Church, Goochland, as deacon. He was or-

THE REV. RAYMOND ANDREWS CHAPMAN

The Rev. Raymond Andrews Chapman, rector of St. Stephen's Church, Boston, 1923-35, died on July 20 in his 57th year, after a long period of ill health. Funeral services, including a Requiem Mass, were held for him in his former parish on July 23. Father Chapman retired from active duty in 1938. He was born in Bethel, Maine, son of James Locke and Evelyn Andrews Chapman. He graduated from Dartmouth College Magna cum laude, and was ordained to the priesthood in 1922.

THE REV. GEORGE WINTHROP SARGENT

The Rev. George Winthrop Sargent, for many years the chaplain to penal institutions in the Diocese of Massachusetts, died on July 10 in his 78th year. Funeral services were conducted by Bishop Henry Knox Sherrill in St. John's Memorial Chapel, Cambridge, on July 12. George W. Sargent was born in Boston in 1866, graduated from Trinity College, Hartford, Connecticut, in 1890 and from the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, in 1894, in which year he was ordained to both diaconate and priesthood and began work as rector of St. John's Church, Erie, Pennsylvania, where he remained until undertaking the curacy of St. Paul's Chapel, Trinity Parish, New York City in 1898. Successive charges were as rector of St. James Church, Fall River, 1898-1901; St. Stephen's, Portland, Maine, 1901-04; St. Paul's, Natick, Mass., 1904-12; St. John's Church, Framingham, from 1909, in addition to Natick, until 1912, and again in 1917-18. During his term as chaplain to the penal institutions in the Diocese, 1922-34, the Rev. Mr. Sargent gave unstinted service in aiding both the prisoners and their families to a better way of life. He has been retired from active service since 1934. He is survived by his widow, the former Anna Schleither, and by three daughters: Adelaide Joanna and Mary Winthrop Sargent and Mrs. Virginia Austin, and also by his sister, Mrs. Clarence Henry Poor, of Cambridge.

MR. PEEL TOOYAK

The death of the Eskimo lay reader and interpreter, Peel Tooyak, at St. Thomas' Mission, Point Hope, Arctic Alaska, on July 29, is reported by a telegram from the Bishop's office in Nenana. The cause of death is not stated. Mr. Tooyak has been on the staff since 1929. Bishop Bentley wrote of him only a few weeks ago that his long experience, thorough training, and devotion to his work have made him a valuable member of the staff. His wife and three children survive him. When Bishop Bentley asked all the Alaska missions recently to call the attention of their young men to the ministry as a vocation, he received from Mr. Tooyak and his wife a letter offering their young son, Enoch, for the ministry. Bishop Bentley writes, "The boy is a bright lad, quick in his studies, and attractive in every way."

The mission at Point Hope, with its outstations along the shores of the Arctic Ocean, and its membership list of 528 names (all Eskimo but the missionary and his wife) is the second largest of the Alaska missions. For eighteen years it was under the care of Archdeacon Frederic W. Goodman. Since his retirement in 1943 the Rev. William J. Gordon, Jr., has been priest in charge.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

It's not what we teach,
But the life we Live!
It's not what we preach,
But the life we Give!

et Vol. 110—No. 33 26 AUGUST, 1944

Boys and girls by thousands are helping their country by service in work camps this summer. The Episcopal Church has been prominent in organizing and aiding this work. These girls are members of the Girls' Friendly Society, working in the vineyards near Selma, California. Other Church boys and girls are working on farms, doing recreation work, assisting with Vacation Church Schools, etc. The aim of the Camps is to develop the young people physically, mentally and spiritually; to render service in areas of great need; to create among youth and adults a real sense of community spirit.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

The Bishop of Wyoming Replies:

17th August, 1944

The Editor of the Southern Churchman,
110 West Franklin Street,
Richmond 20, Virginia.

Dear Sir:

The publication of the letter of Mr. A. L. Taliaferro addressed to the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, President of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, and your immediate acceptance of all its implications as evidenced in your editorial in the same July 29th issue of the Southern Churchman, was unfair to me, to the Church in Wyoming, and indeed to the whole missionary cause.

The Bishop of Wyoming does not give permission to his clergymen to make such an unwarranted statement as that quoted in your editorial. And "that the evangelical clergyman is practically extinct in the Church" is a statement the Bishop of Wyoming is not guilty of making. If there is an evangelical clergyman in the Church more evangelical than the present Bishop of Wyoming, the Bishop of Wyoming will be glad to associate himself with him in the great work yet to be done for Christ in Wyoming.

Mr. Taliaferro's difficulty, not inherited from my late most helpful friend and esteemed Chancellor, his father, is that he finds the truly evangelistic work of building little log churches and community centers, of baptising and confirming and strengthening Jesus Christ and His Church in this great State of less importance than the raising the ugly head of intolerance in the name of Protestant solidarity.

In fairness to me I ask you to read the publications I am sending you under separate cover, "The Episcopal Church in Wyoming, 1944," "Wyoming Indians," and "The Episcopal Church, A Fellowship."

In fairness to the whole Church I must insist upon a prompt publication of this letter in the Southern Churchman.

Faithfully yours.
WINFRED H. ZIEGLER.
Bishop of Wyoming.

REVIEWED FOR THE SOUTHERN CHURCHMAN
A TRILOGY

ONE PROPHET—AND ANOTHER. By Ethel Cutler. Woman's Press. 126 pages. Price, $1.50.

ONE PEOPLE AMONG MANY. By Ethel Cutler. Womans Press. 126 pages. Price, $1.50.

THEY TOLD ABOUT JESUS. By Ethel Cutler. Womans Press. 120 pages. Price, $2.00.

These three little books should prove immediately popular among students of Biblical literature and history. And they will be read not only for profit, but for pleasure as well, with so graceful a pen and so much of poetic imagination does Miss Cutler embellish the learning which makes of each volume a store house of varied treasure.

"One Prophet—and Another" presents a series of sketches of the Prophets beginning with Moses. "Line drawings" the author calls them, and such they are; delicate traceries picturing in outline those heroic figures against the background of their day. Under Miss Cutler's sure and sensitive touch, they live again for us; men vividly aware of the temporal and spiritual problems of their times, and strong to bear the burden of the Word of the Lord as it came to them. She shows us not only the men, but the world in which they lived and wrought; a world of city streets and market places, of rocky hillsides and rich valleys, where years of peace and prosperity alternated with periods of war and tumults. It was a world where cowardice and heroism lived side by side; where man's inhumanity to man threw into greater relief his capacity to sacrifice himself in the service of God. A world different to, and yet strangely like our own.

"One People Among Many" deals primarily with the literature of Israel. With this literature, as contained in the Bible, we are familiar. Less familiar to most of us are the environments within which it developed. And yet how imperative it is to the understanding of any literature that we have "some knowledge of the environment which produced the books, the language in which they were written, the essential characteristics of the people who produced them. We need to see their relations to the peoples with whom they came in contact, to consider the philosophies of life which they tried out through the centuries, and the outworking of those philosophies in relation to other peoples."

Beginning with the sources of story, psalm, or proverb, oftentimes to be found outside of Israel, Miss Cutler traces for us these influences, as well as the historic events and the developing moral and spiritual ideals and aspirations which through succeeding generations contributed to the final shaping of the books of the Old Testament.

When dealing with sources Miss Cutler's careful scholarship speaks with authority. And even when she allows the play of her imagination to fill in the picture, her feeling is so true, her instinct so sure, that rarely do we fail to follow her.

The three divisions of the book—"The People of the Lord," "The Making of Ancient Books," and "The Interweaving of Varied Cultures,"—together with the titles of some of the more arresting chapters,—"According to Their Tongues," "On the Writing of Poetry," "The Roll of the Prophet Isaiah," "The Words of the Wise," "Lyrics of the Long Ago," give some idea of the wide field through which she roams.

Book III "They Told About Jesus," is also concerned with origins and developments. Here we listen while eyewitnesses relate to groups of eager listeners, inside and outside of Palestine, what they remember of the words and deeds of the Master, now taken from their sight. We watch the growth of the impulse which in the two or three succeeding generations sought to preserve these precious memories in more stable form, and the final crystalization of this process in the Four Gospels. We read the casual comments upon the emerging Faith to be found in the non-Christian writers of the day, and hear echoes of His days upon earth still extant in the second and third centuries, though not recorded in the Gospels.

An outstanding feature of all three volumes is the inclusion of quotations from various ancient and modern versions of the Bible and of many exquisitely beautiful free translations of the more lyrical passages, some of which we suspect to be Miss Cutler's own. These, added to the author's glowing faith infused through every page of her writing, give a strongly devotional cast to her work.

A complete bibliography and index of quotations appended to each volume are sure to be appreciated.

To all who are looking for guidance in working out courses for Bible study, for appropriate and interesting reading supplementary to class work, or for fresh inspiration and help in the teaching of the Bible, we most heartily recommend these little books.

MARGARET GOODWIN BALLARD.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

ALL OF MY LIFE I have heard the words of that song, "listen to the mocking bird. . . . Today I am suggesting we quit listening to the mocking birds and thus save ourselves some hurt and confusion. We are prone to believe everything we hear, especially the unconfirmed rumors that fly by day and night, which become roomers (and boarders) when they get to us. The worriers and the gullible suffer the most, and they insist on continuing to be anxious and to swallow whole every idle tale that darts within their circle of safety. In childhood it was not so naive as we now assume to cry "tick-a-lock, tick-a-lock all around" and enclose ourselves within an "impregnable fortress" of a magic circle—magic because we were determined to let nothing through save friend, never foe.

But the mocking birds can always find an audience, ears to cry "news, news, evil news" into. We believe the birds and what they say about another, about conditions in general, about the past and the future, and every other thing of concern to life. The mocking bird even attempts to relay people's thoughts and motives and always touches up the truth with garlands of poison ivy. The mocking bird picks out headlines in newspapers, lifts out words and sections from books, magnifies and retells little evils and minor issues.

TWO EXAMPLES OF WHAT I mean. First, the wife of another who hears from "good friends" about the conduct and condition of their service man: "surely he would write if . . .", "I heard . . .", "his letters sound queer . . .", "the papers say . . .", "he was last seen . . .", "two years is a long time", "the women there", "the war will be over . .", "not enough jobs," and on and on endlessly. The only cure for such sticky and unnecessary rumors is to hold to faith in the man we know better than the mocking bird, refuse to believe strange tales, wait for the truth, don't read double meaning into every new twist to the letters and news received. Men do change. Most of them grow. Throw a mental brick-bat at the mocking bird and listen not to his cry.

Second, Anonymous letters and reactions to books containing controversial material. A letter, a headline and a book will help explain what I mean. The letter came to a parishioner of mine as full of venom on the race question as I have ever seen. The letter was intended to insult and hurt, to break out fury and hate in the recipient's heart. It failed. The words of the mocking bird were just ignored. But the anonymous person, deserving of every ounce of pity we can spare, thinks her or his deed a remarkable contribution to the "fine traditions" of the South. Race relations make no progress through the mediation of mocking birds. Nor do screaming headlines, that rail and beat the air, bring sober truth and wisdom to bear upon the fundamental relationships of races. A friend gave me a copy of a newspaper with a shocking headline intended no doubt to arouse racial hate and stir up deep-seated prejudice. Only harm, no good, can follow from such a device. We sow a dragon seed; we raise a dragon. Then there is that book, Strange Fruit, banned in Boston for its use of one word, read for such bits of obscenity by thousands; and damned by thousands more who have never read it at all. Some parts of it may be too raw for public airing, but the devastating and absorbing story gives an analysis of the race problems in the south which should lead to a more zealous pursuit of ways and means to ease the tension and terrible nausea of it, and at least take a few possible steps beyond eradicating the terrible truth the novel speaks in language both sensitive and brutal. Incidentally, the book was not as bad as the rumors concerning it. And it doesn't dodge a single racial issue.

SUPPOSE JESUS HAD SPENT His precious hours on earth listening to the mocking bird! He would have stumbled and fallen beneath the load. But He didn't. God kept His mind clear of debris and anxiety as Jesus day by day sought to know God's mind and God's heart and kept pushing through darkness until dawn came.

Our Need of a Goal

By the Rev. John Page Williams

Headmaster St. Christopher's School, Richmond, Va.

"He looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God."

In such a way does the Epistle to the Hebrews describe the driving force in Abraham's life—"He looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." As we restore the flesh and blood of human life to the story of Abraham and see his life as part of world history, we realize that Abraham was revolting against barbarous ways of living promoted by false philosophies and religions. He was a pioneer in the building up of the first God-centered culture, the first civilization which took its life and strength from its obedience to the God whom we worship. Many of the ideas of Christian culture and civilization are inherited from that movement started by Abraham. It was not easy for Abraham to take the lead he did in trying to set up a God-centered nation. It meant separating himself from the kind of life lived in his native land. In his search for the city which hath foundations he was extremely alone and his way took him through not only physical desert but also spiritual desert. Both Old and New Testament writers are agreed in attributing his noble search and its success to the fact that he was a man of supreme faith in God. To Saint Paul he was the great Old Testament example of the man who had faith in God and therefore received the promises.

THE DESCRIPTION OF ABRAHAM which I have used as my text has been applied time and again through human history to men who have sought in new lands to found new communities based on the will and spirit of God. There are no longer great geographical spaces where men can try to build Christian communities from a fresh start, but there is more than ever the call to pioneers of faith to follow Abraham's example. There is today as great a challenge to mankind as there was to Abraham. We know we can no longer even pretend to be content with any community—local or world—unless its leaders are moved by the kind of spirit which moved Abraham. Abraham was led to withdraw from a country of barbarism into a new country to be moved by a new spirit. We cannot make the same geographical pilgrimage, but we must make the same spiritual pilgrimage. And we need the faith which Abraham showed, for the author of Hebrews declares that Abraham in his search went out not knowing whither he went. Although Abraham may not have known whither he was going on the compass, he knew whose direction he was following. He was by no means drifting for he had in him the spirit of God. Through his worship of God and companionship with God he had won a directing force which gave him confidence in the ultimate success of his mission. He had progressed in his spirit in such a way that God could speak to him and he could hear. Furthermore, when God spoke, Abraham could understand and commit himself to God. It had taken prayer and self-discipline and deep thought for Abraham to come to the point where he could hear and obey the voice of God.

By contrast to the story of Abraham there is in Genesis also the story of Babel. In that case people filled with satisfaction over themselves undertook to build without the guidance of God. The result was disaster and confusion. Time and again in history men have sought to build civilization without God and the curse of Babel has fallen on them.

IN RECENT YEARS many people have been looking for a world built by materialism. Since early in the war people have been picturing to themselves and others visions of that post-war world which science would produce almost by magic. Advertisements and magazine articles have fed our imaginations with attractive fantasies about the various gadgets and so-called conveniences which are supposed to abound after the war. Last summer the articles were all about electronics. This year there are more and more alluring pictures of houses equipped with the fruits of scientific discoveries and designing. Apparently people have been doing a great deal of thinking and designing in connection with the material things of life. It is generally recognized that along with the great waste of human life and physical resources during a war there comes pressure which forces an increase in the tempo of scientific discovery and invention. Already efforts are being made to see that there is a conversion of technical advances to civilian products in such a way that there will be as little loss of forward motion as possible.

There has not been as much evidence of similar efforts being applied to matters of the spirit. A similar stimulus, it is true, occurs during war in the spiritual life of the community. Along with the hatred and moral confusion generated at home and abroad during war, there comes a great stirring of the spirit of service, devotion, dedication, unselfish sacrifice. Many people are forced to face up to the profound realities of life for tragedy drives us to seek ultimate reality. The difficuty, however, is that it is not so easy to maintain the spiritual advances as it is to maintain the scientific. The spiritual advances if we do not cultivate them end as mere emotion. In spite of their seeming nobility, they can turn out to be superficial and even superstitious. They are soon consumed by the evil spirits generated by war.

More than that science entered the war in a strong condition, but the same cannot be said of the spiritual life of the community. In fact the war is itself an indication of the spiritual sickness of the world. One writer has likened the problem of human relationships —social morality—to that of a fleet of ships. Unless the ships have a destination and are properly steered towards that destination, two troubles will result. First, the ships will go about in circles and make no progress but waste much power. Second, the ships will begin to crash into each other and destroy each other.

THERE ARE MANY REASONS for saying that our world had before the war been like a fleet of ships without direction or destination. Individuals and nations first went about in futile circles accomplishing nothing of eternal value and then they began crashing into each other. Instead of the lead being taken by men inspired by the Christian faith, men who grasped visions of goals and moved towards them, it was taken by men who merely observed trends, the currents in which the world drifted, and fitted their policies of government, business education, and arts to those trends. Men were governed by whims and fancies. There was a general triumph of expediency as the controlling standard of judgment. There was a deterioration of the dignity of man as men sought meaning for their otherwise aimless lives in vain pursuits in objectives inadequate for beings made in the image of God.

A high army officer has recently written that "a man alone, pinned down in a foxhole . . . needs more than good equipment and physical courage. He needs to believe in something bigger than himself. He needs to be able to answer the dark question in the back of his mind: 'What am I doing here?'" The army has succeeded to some extent in helping men see a fair purpose and meaning in what they are doinng for the time being. In the long run, however, we must be guided by some understanding of the eternal meaning of human life.

Christ found the people of His time spiritually lost, as sheep not having a shepherd. It was for that reason that He had pity on them and taught them. To Him the tragedy of the people was that they did not recognize the things on which their peace—of mind and spirit—depended. When He saw the city of Jerusalem, which in its material splendor was a sight to bring joy to the heart of the patriotic Jew, Jesus wept. Isaiah had warned that people's hearts were so hardened and their eyes so blinded that they would not learn God's will until cities were left desolate. Now in our world many cities have been left desolate —and are our hearts still hardened and our eyes blinded or can we find the things which belong to our peace? For that we need not merely a reconversion of our industrial life and a readjustment of our social life, but above all a reconversion of our spiritual life. In this all members of the Church must take their part. In their business capacities many people have already been thinking through the problems of industry and business. As citizens we should be doing our part in support of the working out of political order adequate to the needs of the world. Many agents of the government seem quite busy about peace plans. Social agencies have been promoting conferences to study needs of returning soldiers. We cannot all take direct part in such work but there is more important work in which we are obligated as church members to take part. As Christians and Church members we must show greater zeal in seeking to fill the spiritual needs which face us already and will face us as peace breaks out.

OUR SPIRITUAL NEED is summed up very simply as the surrender of ourselves, the dedication of ourselves to God in much the same complete manner as that of the soldier who surrenders himself to the will of his country. It is necessary that we be filled with the spirit of God. Our goal and the way of life to that goal is revealed to us in the life of Christ not merely as the pious setting forth of an ideal but as the revelation of the sacrificial and disciplined life which overcomes evil, as the one through whom we can overcome the world and know life lived on the eternal scale. We are in these days well aware of our need for inspiration and direction. We are in the frame of mind where we welcome something bigger than ourselves as a guide to live by. Let us be sure that no distractions turn us from finding God. Let us like Abraham honestly—and at the cost of refusing to conform to the world about us—search relentlessly for a life which has foundations. For us individuals this means putting our faith in God and turning our hearts and minds to Jesus in such a way that two things happen—first, that we set up His values and goals for us as the only things to which we will devote our energies; and second, that in the world around us we practice steadily the principles of thoroughgoing human brotherhood. If we really judge truths by His values and practice His teaching we can hope that the spirit of sacrifice and service generated in this war will not degenerate into mere emotion, but become an increasingly strong driving force in individual and corporate life, leading us towards the city of God.

reasons,—and drew the bodies of the dead out of the ruined houses and out of the rubble-strewn ways, and threw them, like the bodies of beasts, into the open valley below the city,—the valley that Jeremiah had once cursed with the name, "The Valley of Slaughter", because human sacrifices had been held there, in defiance of the Law of God.

Three months later, when the final decree of destruction had been passed upon Jerusalem, the wretched survivors were led out of the city, going into exile, and they passed through that valley and saw there the bones of the slain, hundreds of them, thousands of them,—the last relics of their friends, their kinsmen. And as they saw them they mourned, and wept, and cried,—"Would that we were as these are! Our hope is cut off! We are the living dead!" And when these came to Chaldea they spread a gloom and a hopelessness through that whole Jewish community that Ezekiel was trying to encourage and to preserve.

TO THESE THE PROPHET SPOKE. "Yes,—I too have seen that valley of dry bones. The hand of the Lord was upon me, and carried me out in the spirit, and set me down in the midst of that valley. And He said to me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, O Lord God, Thou knowest! And He said to me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live!

"And I prophesied as I was commanded: and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shaking, and the bones came together, bone to his bone. And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came up upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

"Then He said to me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live! So I prophesied as He commanded me, and breath came into them, and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army!

"Then said He unto me, Son of man, these bones are the whole House of Israel: Behold, they say, Our bones are dried, our hope is lost, we are cut off forever. Therefore, prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God! Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

"And ye shall know that I am the Lord! And I shall put my spirit in you, then ye shall live! Then shall ye know that I, the Lord, have spoken it, and performed it!"

This magnificent parable of resurrection points the way for us, out of the darkness and the sorrow of our own wretched time,—points toward the final triumph of the Righteous, through the Risen and Ascended Lord. Amen.

EZEKIEL

Israel Becomes a Church

By REV. WILLIAM R. MOODY

Rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, Md.

IT HAS ALWAYS AMAZED ME how God, in giving His Revelation to mankind through men, has been able to draw unity out of great diversity. There never were two men more different in mind, in outlook, in general impact upon the world, than Jeremiah and Ezekiel,—yet the work of these two men fitted together like two parts of one pattern. The work of neither is complete without the other. Both together they saved the religion of Israel in that day of destruction. Ezekiel drew heavily upon the work of Jeremiah, yet he never mentions the older prophet, whom he must have known, for the time of their ministry overlapped. The two men, intellectually and spiritually, were poles apart,—Jeremiah poetic, sensitive, highly suspicious of formalized religion, a passionate believer in the right of the individual man to approach his God without any priest or formula standing between; and Ezekiel, a creature of religious habit, a man bound up in a system ,convinced that righteousness is a set of rules,—the two could never meet and understand each other in this world; yet in God's providence, together they did, for Israel, what neither of them could have done alone.

Ezekiel was one of those carried away into Babylon in the first captivity of Judah. Jerusalem fell to the Chaldeans, but was not at that time destroyed. A heavy indemnity was laid upon the place. Many of the costly and sacred vessels of the Temple were seized. And, to paralyze the power of the nation to revolt, the leading citizens were informed that they would be transported to a new life in Chaldea. They were given a few weeks to wind up their affairs, sell their property, and make ready to depart. In this group were the nobles, the best of the fighting men, the leaders among the priests, and all the carpenters, ironworkers, stone-masons, and other artisans who might help prepare the city for war. These people were curtly informed by the conquerors that they must sell whatever they could not take with them, and sever all connection with the homeland. They were going away forever.

NOW, HOW DID THOSE who were to remain in Jerusalem take this misfortune of their comrades? How do you suppose? There is a rich man down the block. He has a fine house, full of lovely furniture, a dozen slaves, and a farm in the country. He is going into exile, and what he cannot sell, he must abandon. And there are dozens like him,—the city is full of them,—the leaders, the workers, the substantial citizens! They can take away only what they can carry with them, in their hands and on their backs. There is a fine set of carpenter's tools,—what can the carpenter get for them? Anything his neighbor feels like giving him! There are the rich man's rugs, and his silver service, and his house, and his slaves, and his farm—what can he get for them? Anything his more fortunate neighbor deigns to offer him!

How did those who were to remain in Jerusalem take the misfortunes of their comrades? It was a field-day for them! The distress of their brothers was their opportunity! As soon as they found that they did not have to go away, the clouds cleared for them,—and they began bargain hunting! Now, this was not true of all of them, but it was true of so many that it seemed to the unfortunate exiles as if it were true of all. These bargain hunters bought fine houses for a trifle, slaves for a pittance, goods, tools, and rich furniture for a song! Those first exiles were plundered, not by the Chaldeans, but by their own countrymen! And it made a deep wound, long remembered! It affected Ezekiel profoundly!

Jerusalem was then within eleven years of its total destruction. What was now happening to a part of the population should have been a warning to those who were to remain in its walls,—yet those chosen to remain looked with greediness upon those chosen to go away! Their eyes glistened, and they rubbed their hands together at the thought of the fine bargains which must now be sold for whatever they would bring!

NOW, IN A VERY REAL SENSE, those unfortunates were suffering for the sins of the whole nation,—and they knew it. They were not sinners above all those who dwelt at Jerusalem, yet they suffered as though they were, and they were treated by their own countrymen as though they were.

Ezekiel was among those carried away, and he was no longer young. He was a priest, a man of some authority,—not one of the rural priests like Jeremiah, but a member of the ruling family in the priesthood. He was not a bold man,—not even a courageous man. He was a meditative type, cool and formal in his thinking,—and rigid. He had not been a prophet, nor had he ever thought of being one. Nothing was farther from his mind. He had been influenced by the writings of Isaiah. He knew the doctrine of the Righteous Remnant, which that prophet said would save Israel. He was profoundly drawn to the teachings of the Book of Deuteronomy,—a book written by the priests, and first brought to light in the time of King Josiah,—a book attributed to Moses, but certainly not written by him. Ezekiel had heard Jeremiah speak, and had read his writings, with mingled feelings, attracted by that prophet's great stand for righteousness, repelled by his impatience with priest-craft, which to Ezekiel was the very breath of man's religious being. This was the man who, uprooted from his place in the life of his city, and in the worship of the Temple, and carried into exile, was to have more effect upon the future course of Judaism than any other man since Moses. What Judaism is today goes back to Ezekiel.

Ezekiel was shocked, in the core of his soul, by what he saw his people doing when the Chaldeans divided the nation,—one part torn out, uprooted by the heathen,—and the rest,—saved through no special merit of thetir own,—turning with greediness to eat

The Party System in American Politics

IT is to be hoped, although it would be rashness to predict it, that the coming election will demonstrate not the divisions of opinion among the citizens of the American commonwealth but rather their unity of thought and purpose in things essential.

There are good grounds upon which to build this hope. One of them is that the election campaign is to be conducted during war-time. In the past, American parties were divided about the naval war with France during the presidency of John Adams; about the War of 1812; and to some extent about the Mexican War. They were so sharply divided by the Civil War that a new party, the Republican, came into existence. Now the case is different. There is no difference between the two great parties in their conviction that the war in which we are engaged has as its ultimate stake our national existence, or in their determination to win it. Representatives of both parties are serving with equal ardor with the armed forces and on the home front. The pacifists are not influential in either party, but constitute small minorities within each.

When it comes to the matter of a post-war policy of international collaboration, the ground for the hope of unity is not equally strong but it exists. It is to be found in American history. Democrats can point to Woodrow Wilson and his heroic efforts in behalf of the League of Nations; to President Roosevelt and his "Good Neighbor" policy. Republicans can point to John Hay; to Theodore Roosevelt and his arguments in ""The Outlook" for a posse comitatus to keep international peace; to William Howard Taft and his indefatigable advocacy of the Permanent Court of International Justice; and to the aims and services of George Wickersham and of Elihu Root. Although the administration of President Harding was not in line with this tradition, and although the Republican platform of 1944 is somewhat ambiguous about it, it remains a great Republican tradition and isolationists find no comfort in it. If the Republican candidate for the presidency continues as unequivocally as he has started to define his own purpose in conformity with this tradition, it can scarcely become a divisive issue in the coming election. Politics will stop, as proverbially they should, "at the water's edge."

Another ground for hope of a demonstration of essential American unity is to be found in the fact that the political conflict will be conducted between two parties and not ten, or even three. Division of the electorate into small blocs has bedevilled politics in a dozen countries, notably in those south of the Rio Grande. In France it was a contributory cause to the defeat and enslavement of the nation. Parties which are merely political blocs inevitably represent sectional, class or religious interests rather than the common welfare. They are so small that they can achieve political success only by compromising alliances and "log-rolling"; they are so weak that if they do achieve it, they are likely to be deficient in administrative capacity, and so prepare the way for the "man on horseback" who advocates the cause of the country as a whole. No greater disaster could befall American democracy than that it should exchange its two party system for a medley consisting of a Farm Bloc, a Silver Bloc, a Labor Union Bloc, a Manufacturers' Bloc, an American Legion Bloc and what not. When our own Whig Party divided into "Conscience Whigs" and "Cotton Whigs," its doom was sealed and it never won another election. The Republican and Democratic parties possess this factor of essential unity, that both of them are nation-wide, that each contains within itself all sorts and conditions of men, and that neither can hope for success unless it evidently seeks the good of the country as a whole.

This still leaves plenty of room for the honest differences of opinion which save us from totalitarianism and warrant holding an election even in war-time.

> "For every boy and girl
> That's born into this world alive
> Is either a little liberal
> Or else a little conservative."

Or, to adapt Gilbert and Sullivan to American conditions, every one is either a Jeffersonian or a Hamiltonian. As Claude G. Bowers has said, "The eighteenth century witnessed their Plutarchian battles, the twentieth century uncovers at the graves at Monticello and in Trinity Churchyard—but the spirits of Jefferson and Hamilton still stalk the ways of men—still fighting." Hamilton's party died with the passing of the Federalists after the War of 1812, but his ideas concerning a strong central government and sound national finances have survived, and contributed to the successive defeats of Bryan and to the policy of Mellon in liquidating as rapidly as possible the national debt incurred during the first World War. Jefferson's party still lives, and his ideas and sympathies are still influential in it, but it has so far departed from some of his views that Democrats rather than Republicans are now the foremost advocates of a highly centralized government. It has been said that Jefferson had a marble bust of Alexander Hamilton in the hall of Monticello. It is known that he spoke of Hamilton as a "Colossus," and that he paid warm tribute to his understanding and character, even though he believed that his Treasury system "flowed from principles adverse to liberty." Today the American people revere the memory of both these great political antagonists, as they do also the memory of Lincoln and Lee.

The moral from history is plain. Narrowly interpreted, the "era of good feeling," as denoting no political differences of importance, passed away a century ago and is not likely to return. But in a broader sense, the era of good feeling is as appropriate now as it was in the days of President Monroe. A mud-slinging campaign should not be tolerated by the voters. Personal antagonisms, such as embittered the second administrations of Washington and of Lincoln and of Wilson, are regretted now by all patriotic Americans, and should not be permitted to recur. The country is at war for all that it counts previous; it has a vision of world-wide service unparalleled at any previous time in its history. How best it can win the war and render the service and preserve its free and prosperous way of life are questions which may properly divide the votes of its citizens, but should not and must not divide their hearts.—H. C. R. From "Christianity and Crisis," July 24, 1944.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

up those who were bearing the weight of punishment for all!

The final gruesome touch was added to this by the pious smugness with which the plunder was accomplished. They did not come out boldly and say,—"All right! We are bandits! We are vultures! What of it?" That would have been bad enough! What thew did was worse! They said, "Why should we be sorry for these exiles? It was their wickedness which brought this tragedy upon our city,—let them suffer for it! God is drawing a line of judgment through the city, showing who is righteous, and who is guilty! If they were not guilty, they would not be suffering for it! God is rewarding us with the gift of their goods!" Thus they asserted the false and hateful doctrine that if a man is sick, or in trouble, that it is evidence in itself that he has sinned, and that God is punishing him.

Perhaps you will remember how the Lord Jesus said,—"Wherever the body is, there will be the vultures gathered together."

Jeremiah reacted to this hypocrisy in sharp and characteristic fashion. He said,—"When a man sorts his summer fruit, to divide the good from the rotten, does he leave the good fruit in the basket there in the orchard, and take the spoiled away with him? No! He takes the good fruit, and leaves the spoiled! Jerusalem is a basket of rotted figs!"

BUT EZEKIEL WAS NOT as quick to react as Jeremiah. He was one of those being led away. His life was upset, ruined. His fortune was gone. His wife, whom he loved, and who had been used to luxury and servants, was forced to walk beside him, carrying what few household goods and family treasures she could into that far-away- exile-land. Her health never recovered, and in a few years she died.

Ezekiel did not feel that he was a sinner above those who had remained in Jerusalem. He did not think that those others were, who went out with him. His soul revolted at the treatment he had received at the hands of his own countrymen, at the slurs put upon him. He felt that this was typical of the whole life of the nation. He felt that these exiles, going out from the land of their birth, a few family treasures clutched in their hands, a few hard won coins in their purses, a few precious manuscripts brought away with them rather than food,—he felt that these, going out like the scapegoat into the wilderness, were bearing the weight of the sins of the nation,—but why? Why, WHY?

It is out of struggle of soul such as this that prophecy is born! Do not be deceived,—no man content with his lot, happy, and feeling no need for change in the world can ever be a prophet. He must be convicted of sin, within himself, and within the soul and body of his nation. He must have the dreadful conviction, not to be denied, within him, that the times are out of joint, and that the hand of God is upon him to set them right.

Ezekiel, in the far-away land of his exile, struggled with his terrible, heart-rending question,—"Why? must the righteous suffer? Why have the best in the land been expelled?" And he had been there five years, in the little Jewish colony of Tel Abib, by the River Kebar, before he had his vision from God which made all things plain.

HIS STUDY OF THE PROPHETS has made one thing very clear to me. All prophecy, all prophetic religion, is based upon the mystical experience, the mystical apprehension of God's Presence, and of His call,—and the prophet's vision of God,—especially his inaugural vision,—is always as revealing of the character of the man himself, as it is of the will of God, Who gave it.

Taken them all, from the very beginning right down to our own day! There is Abraham,—just that quiet, insistent Voice within him,—"Go out! Go out! Seek the Promised Land." There is Moses;—he sees a Flame of Fire, burning on a desert hillside. There is Amos;—in a dream he sees a crooked wall, and by it a plumb-line, and he hears a Voice,—"Amos, what do you see?" That plumb-line, showing up the crookedness of Israel, tells us as much about Amos, as it does about the will of God, Who gave the vision. It prepares us for the straightforward, manly message of the prophet. And there is Isaiah—the very scope and magnitude of his vision, the great Throne of God, in the Heavens,—surrounded by voices, and by the sweep and beat of impossible wings, prepares us for the breadth and genius of the man's tremendous message. And there is Jeremiah, whose first vision from the Almighty is a tender branch of spring blossoms, moved by the breeze. But Ezekiel! His vision is the most involved and complicated in the pages of Holy Writ! It gives us the spirit and the feeling of the man who bound the "Holiness Code",—the "Kosher" system,—upon the Jewish people,—a system which, growing and feeding upon itself, holds Israel together, through the centuries, —a nation without a country to this day!

EZEKIEL WAS OUT by the River Kebar,—which was not a river at all, but a great irrigation canal. He was seated under a willow tree, for the shade of it,—but he was not enjoying himself. He was in agony of mind about Jerusalem, now, once more, as he knew, on the verge of revolt; and he was worried about his wife, whom he loved most dearly, whose health had been broken by the dreadful journey into this exile. When the Jews were away from home and had no place to pray, they went down by the nearest riverside to say their prayers,—a very ancient custom. Ezekiel was there praying,—and praying not only with the mind, but with his bruised and twisted heart.

As he prayed, a thunderstorm came majestically across the flat countryside. He paid no attention to it, wrapped in his prayer. But as it came nearer, a dark and threatening cloud, filled with the grumbling of thunder, and the quick and interchanging play of lightning, it forced itself upon h'm. Looking up to it, surprised, with eyes and heart inflamed by the agony of his praying, it seemed to him that the cloud formed itself into a terrible, yet inspiring Vision!

You remember the old Negro "spiritual" about "A Wheel Within a Wheel",—"The big wheel moves by the grace of God, and the little wheel moves by faith!" That "spiritual" makes an attempt to describe this vision, basing itself upon Ezekiel's own complicated prose. But the "wheels" were not the most important part of what Ezekiel saw within that thunder-cloud. He saw God, in all His glory, surrounded by His heavenly ministers, riding in a chariot, coming away from Jerusalem,—leaving that unhappy city, now on the verge of revolt, doomed, protectorless, ripe for its fate!

The chariot was four-square, facing every point of the compass at once; and the very complicated wheels, —which, by the way, were equipped with eyes, an improvement which not even modern mechanical science has yet been able to copy,—were so arranged as to take the Divine Majesty anywhere in earth or heaven at His will.

THIS WAS A TREMENDOUS and mind-shaking revelation, especially when you remember the kind of man to whom it came. It is one thing to reach a man like Isaiah,—a man like Jeremiah; it is quite another thing to reach a man like Ezekiel. God was leaving the Temple at Jerusalem,—deserting the Sanctuary! He was not dependent upon that place! Nor upon the people in it!

Those people back in Jerusalem,—and the exiles in Chaldea as well,—were saying, "God will never desert Jerusalem! He will never allow His Sanctuary to fall into the hands of the heathen! He cannot, for His own honor!" Now Ezekiel sees, that, for His own honor, He cannot continue to defend that place, and that people! He sees the parayzing truth that God has deserted Jerusalem,—that He does not care what happens to it,—that He will let it be destroyed, and the people in it, because the kind of kingdom they seek to build is not the kind in which God is interested! What Jeremiah had seen in a flash of poetic inspiration, had to be pounded into Ezekiel by years of spiritual anguish.

And Ezekiel was, in that moment, aware of another overwhelming truth,—God had removed His Sanctuary into the heavens, and had put it on wheels, and had faced it toward the four corners of the earth. Wherever His people might be, throughout the whole world, He was prepared to be with them! He had followed these exiles to Chaldea,—and He could follow the anywhere else in the orbit of the earth! But He had abandoned those who remained in the doomed city, which once had borne His Name! Therefore the first exiles had been brought out, not to punish them, but to save them! They were to be the Righteous Remnant prophesied so long ago by Isaiah! Someday in the Providence of God, and in His good time, they would return and restore that city, after it had been destroyed! I hope that you see how, in this prophecy, essential elements of Christian teaching are coming to their first dawn.

EZEKIEL WENT BACK into the town, and sat in the village square, stupefied by what he had seen, and by what he had understood. We know that his vision was largely subjective,—the most obviously subjective of any vision recorded in the Bible,—yet it was very real to him. And the people wondered at him, because they saw that he had gone through a tremendous emotional storm.

But when he tried to tell the people what he had seen they turned upon him with rage! They would not believe him. Now, Ezekiel was no martyr. When they opposed him he simply went into his house, and got upon his bed, and turned his face to the wall. During the long and bitter siege of Jerusalem,—news of which came through to them from time to time,—he stayed, for the most part, shut up in his home.

At one period Nebuchadnezzar broke the siege, and withdrew his armies for about a year. On the day when he brought his armies back to stay, Ezekiel had a strange and terrible dream, which has never yet been properly explained. He knew, through a dream, that Nebuchadnezzar had begun the final siege. He felt as if he were being snatched up from his bed, and rushed through the air; and he stood on a height and saw Jerusalem fall,—saw the horror of it, the burning, and the slaughter! That morning he told the people of the village that Jerusalem had been invested by the Chaldeans and would fall,—and they laughed at him. He gave a minute description of what was happening—such a description as only an eyewitness might give,—a description borne out to the letter, weeks later, when messengers arrived with the terrible confirmation of what the prophet in his vision had seen. That same night his wife died; and that queer man somehow connected the two events in his own thinking,—the two greatest tragedies of his life! This remarkable evidence of clairvoyance so impressed the exiles that they went into Ezekiel's house, and brought him out, and promised to listen to him as the Minister of God.

EZEKIEL'S WHOLE MINISTRY, from that time forward, was thrown into the organization of this remnant of his nation for life as the people of God in the midst of a pagan society. Ezekiel was faced with the urgent practical necessity of preserving the worship of the True God through the almost insupportable disappointment and distress of the Exile, and in the midst of an ancient, established, powerful and rampant heathenism. How well he succeeded is shown by the existence of Israel as a nation without a country to this day.

To Ezekiel the exiled people were the "Righteous Remnant" prophesied by Isaiah,—thus Israel ceased to be a nation, and became a Church. His descriptions of the restored Jerusalem and its Temple, is really a description of this new "Church-nation." The new "Church-nation" had to be set off from the heathen world around it in unmistakable fashion. This Ezekiel accomplished by the imposition of a set of distinctive and very personal ritual customs, touching the whole course of the life of his people. Eating and drinking, sleeping and waking, they were never free from the burden of that "Holiness Code". Ezekiel consciously made them "different" so that today they cannot be otherwise, no matter how hard they try.

The Synagogues were established in that time,—not as a substitute for the Temple, for which there could be no substitute,—Ezekiel had a grand plan which he made, even down to the measurements and architectural details of that Temple,—but as a lodge, a club, a union, a school, a social center, and a place of prayer. This was the future heart and center of Judaism,—and the prototype of the Christian Church.

Not many Jews ever returned to Jerusalem. From the moment of the destruction there were always more of them living outside the Holy Land than within it. That was true even in the time of the Lord Jesus. In Babylon they became money-lenders,—at first in a very small way,—peddlers, merchants,—men not deeply rooted, with financial interests, and kinsmen, in many lands. So the economic pattern was set which has continued to this hour.

EZEKIEL'S MINISTRY was more for his own day; and for his own nation, than for ours, although I have tried to show you how his influence rests, to some extent, upon us, in the Christian Church, as well as upon the Jews. But there is one vision in the book so moving, so powerful, so applicable to our own time, that I wish to close what I have to say to you today with reference to it. It is found in the thirty-seventh chapter of his Book, and was addressed to that remnant who escaped the final destruction of Jerusalem. Scarcely four thousand persons of the hundreds upon hundreds who were in that city escaped the rigors of the siege, and the terrors of the night when the wall was broken. On that night hundreds died by the sword, and their bodies lay in the houses and in the streets.

The Chaldeans cleaned up the city,—for sanitary

GRACEFULLY GROWING

Martha Lee Doughty

These are the things my mother told
When I was trying to be old
I acted up so childishly
She had to tell such things to me:—

Never repeat unless you know
Of your ownself that it is so,
Never go round aspreading grief,
Throw kindness on each falling leaf.

Never talk talk just to be heard,
For children love each spoken word,
And if you must so grown up be
Please act your part most gracefully.

IN A TOWN FAR AWAY

"I ought to be starting out on another missionary trip," said Paul. "I should like to go to the same places I visited before, and see how my new Christian friends are getting along."

Soon he was on his way—taking with him Silas, his young friend from Jerusalem. When they came to Lystra, they found a young man named Timothy. He had heard Paul preach on his other visit; and now he was a Christian.

"Will you come with me and be a missionary, too?" asked Paul.

"Yes," said Timothy. "I must tell Mother first; but I'm sure she'll be glad to have me go."

Paul went home with Timothy; and the young man's mother, Eunice, made it very pleasant for her guest. "Of course you must preach the Gospel, my boy," she said to Timothy. "Go, and the Lord go with you."

When Paul and Silas and Timothy arrived at Troas, they could stand on the seashore and look across into Europe. "No missionary has ever been there," said Paul.

One morning Paul said to his friends, "I had a strange dream last night. A man dressed in European clothes came to me and said, 'Come over and help us.' I believe God wants us to go to Europe."

The next day the missionaries went down to the wharf and asked about ships, and found that one would be sailing soon. They paid their fare and went on board.

When they reached Philippi—a city in Greece—they decided to stay there a while. On the morning of the Sabbath day, Paul said, "There is no Jewish church in Philippi, because there are so few Jews. But they probably have a place out by the riverside, so they can have their religious washings—as all good Jews do when they worship God."

The missionaries walked a few miles out into the country and found a rude church by the riverside. There was not much to it—only four walls, with the roof open to the sky. A few women were there, praying.

"May we worship God with you?" asked Paul, politely, and the women made them welcome. They asked Paul to talk to them.

As Paul told about Jesus, one woman leaned forward and listened eagerly. It was Lydia, a rich woman who sold purple dyes for a living.

"I believe what you say with all my heart," said Lydia when he had finished. "Will you baptize me in the river? From this time I want to be a Christian, too."

After the service, Lydia said to the missionaries, "Come to my house. It will be your home, as long as you are in Philippi."

There was a poor slave girl in town who said strange and foolish things; and the people thought the god Apollo told her what to say. She told their fortunes; and they paid her a lot of money—or rather, they paid it to her masters.

One day this girl heard the missionaries telling about Jesus; and even with her poor crazed brain, she knew God sent them. After that she followed them about, calling out in a high, cracked voice, "These men are servants of God."

Now what she said was true enough; but Paul knew it would not do any good to have her saying so. "There is a wicked spirit in the poor girl," he said.

One day when she was following the missionaries and crying out, Paul turned and said severely, "Wicked spirit, come out!" Immediately the girl was quiet. The wild look went out of her eyes, and she looked happy and rested.

"I cannot tell fortunes any more," she said to her masters.

They were furious. They caught the missionaries and dragged them before the rulers of the city.

"These Jews are making a lot of trouble," they said. So the rulers beat the missionaries and put them in jail.

At midnight there was a strange sound in the jail. The missionaries were singing. Suddenly there was a loud noise, like a clap of thunder. The jail shook and rocked.

The jailer ran in with a torchlight. He had a sword in his hand. "If the prisoners get away, the rulers will kill me," he thought. "I'd rather kill myself."

"Don't hurt yourself," called Paul cheerily. "We're all here."

Then the jailer fell down on his knees, trembling, and cried out, "Oh, what shall I do?"

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and you will be saved," answered Paul.

The jailer led the missionaries out of the prison and took them into his own home. He washed the blood off their backs where they had been beaten. He gave them food to eat. Then Paul baptized him, as a sign that he had become a Christian, too.

Lydia and the jailer were the very first Christians in Europe. Long afterward, Europeans brought Christianity to America.

A BOY IN GALILEE

When Jesus was a boy in Galilee . . .
I wonder if He loved to be the big brother
When the younger ones were afraid,
And to have them trust Him, and begin to laugh again?
And if He liked to carry the heaviest boards for Joseph,
And bring the heaviest water-jar home for Mary?
I think He did—
Because they remembered, afterward, and said,
"He grew wiser and taller and stronger,
And everybody loved Him."

THE CHOW

"I came from China," says the Chow
(We will translate his own bow-wow),
"And I am very friendly, too,"
He told us in the interview.
"Black, white, tan, red, with ruff at throat,
I wear a smooth or rough-haired coat.
I also have a loyal heart,
And folks oft say, 'That dog is smart!' "

GRAND OLD LADY OF SANTA YSABEL

How Emily Sprott, D. B. E., of the Melanesian Mission Defied Japanese Invaders and Rescued Allied Airman

By Roy Burnham
English journalist; contributor to leading newspapers and periodicals in Britian, and to feature programs of the British Broadcasting Corporation.

Shot down over Santa Ysabel during the fierce battles for the Solomon Islands, an American airman lay wounded in the jungle, expecting to be captured by the Japanese at any moment.

There was a movement in the bushes and two brown, fuzzy-haired natives appeared. They assured him that they were friends, picked him up, and carried him along jungle paths to a native village of bamboo and sago leaf huts where a native medical practitioner operated on his wounds with modern equipment.

Then into the hut there walked an English woman carrying a cup of tea.

She seemed a little tired, the airman related later when on leave in Auckland, and bush life had played havoc with her eyes. And small wonder, for this grand old lady, Mrs. Emily Sprott, a member of the British Melanesian Mission was the only white person on Santa Ysabel Island. Even before the Solomon Islands had been recaptured from the Japanese, she was made a dame of the British Empire, D. B. E., by King George.

Women Anxious to Remain

For many months she had lived alone among the natives. All round her Japanese were shooting, pillaging and looting. Her chest of tea was the only provision left and for a long time she had lived on native dishes, yams and kumeras. When the Japanese landed at Thousand Ships' Bay she had left her mission station at Meringe, taking all her medical equipment and setting up dispensaries in the bush. The natives hid her from the Japanese, giving her the best. They warned her of the enemy's movements. They acted as lookouts, picking up shot-down airmen, helping her to nurse them back to health, then leading them back to the Allied lines by canoe.

In all, Dame Emily Sprott rescued twelve Americans and buried four others.

She was not the only missionary who remained behind throughout the occupation. There were sixteen members of the Melanesian Mission, many women scattered throughout the Solomons. Bishop Walter H. Baddeley, M. A., D. S. O., M. C., is head of the mission. When the invasion seemed imminent, the Resident Commissioner discussed the subject of the women folk. The Bishop knew that they were anxious to remain. He believed that the natives would be loyal and that the bush would offer adequate protection; and he had a firm belief that the tide would turn. He was at his headquarters on Tulagi when the Japanese landed on Santa Ysabel and then bombed Tulagi. That night by the light of burning oil dumps and stores, he set sail in rough seas for N. Mala, half expecting that he might run into an enemy convoy.

Meeting other members of his staff he mapped out a plan of campaign.

There was work to be done. The natives had no knowledge of modern warfare, warships, gunfire or bombing. It would have been easy for them to become panic-stricken and terrified. Yet they regarded the British Administration as just, and the missionaries as friends who could be relied on.

Missionaries Did Not Fail Them

In those early days they were constantly travelling, always by night, often by canoe, making dangerous journeys to reassure and advise the people, and by their own example to crush the fear for the Japanese bombers which were constantly overhead. As the Japanese swarmed over the islands they were met by a spirit they could not understand and did not expect. They knew that, somehow, the missionaries were responsible. The natives were staunch and loyal. They could not fire guns but they fought the Japanese just the same by their stubborn attitude and hostile manner, refusing to cooperate in any way. When the enemy ran short of medical supplies they began to rob the natives of calico, but the islanders locked their stores in tin boxes and were shot before they would surrender the keys. From their bush hide-outs the Bishop and his staff carried on. On Mala, the mission hospital had been evacuated to an island village with a pleasant river. From there Dr. Thomson and the three nursing sisters continued their work of healing the sick, tending the victims of Japanese atrocities and running a maternity ward.

Hospitals and Schools Still Functioned

Sister Stead writes: ". . . The hospital filled rapidly and there was a record number of patients. Trained medical orderlies were posted at various points and entrusted with hospital supplies, and we were also able to carry on work from these 'dispensaries.' The medical officer toured the districts, helped and guided his workers, and gave thousands of injections. Native schools were kept functioning as far as possible, and at a time when people were actually reading accounts in the papers of heavy fighting in the Solomons, the Sydney office of the mission received a radio message, "Three gross exercise books urgently needed for school." Many of the native boys proved invaluable as scouts and guides, saving many lives by their watchfulness and reliable information.

As the time passed and the Japanese continued to pillage native foodstuffs, the missionaries' own supplies ran very low. The men had no tobacco, matches or razor blades for months. They had grown long beards and some were forced to wear loin-cloths and home made sandals. The Bishop had to sew fresh soles on his shoes by the wayside whenever he went on a long trek.

Courageous Women

But if conditions were bad for the men, how much worse must they have been for the women? Yet, in all their letters, there is no word of complaint, only an expression of satisfaction at their being able to stand by the people they were commissioned to serve, in spite of air raids, in spite of constant peril from the Japanese, and the terrible hardships of bush life.

CHINESE OFFICERS AT U. S. NAVAL BASE

Boston, Mass.—A Chaplain at a U. S. Naval Base writes to the Army and Navy Commission, commenting on "the presence among us of a number of officers of the Chinese navy. They are learning English and getting experience on our small ships and on the base. I have seen a good deal of them. Some are Christians, some are not. It has been a great privilege to have met and talked with them." The Chaplain tells of having taken some of the Chinese officers to the home of the local Episcopal clergyman, who, he says, "Has been most cooperative and helpful."

"The first man I met," the Chaplain continued, "was Lt. (jg) Chien En pei who came from Wuhu and had gone to our St. James Middle School there. He was a member of the Holy Catholic Church of China, and knew of Robin Chen, now Bishop, with whom I went to Divinity school.

"The Chinese officers are well liked and apparently are liking us as well. This sort of thing is very good."

MIDSHIPMEN'S GRADUATION TO BE HELD IN THE CATHEDRAL OF ST. JOHN THE DIVINE

New York, N. Y.—The Right Rev. William T. Manning, Bishop of New York, invited the United States Naval Reserve Midshipmen's School of New York (Columbia University) to hold its Nineteenth Graduation in the Cathedral on Thursday, August 10, 1944, at 11 A. M.

The Invocation was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin.

Captain John K. Richards, U. S. N., Commanding Officer of the School, presided and administered the Naval Officer's Oath to the new ensigns.

Rear Admiral W. R. Munroe, Commandant of the Third Naval District, made the address to the graduates.

The Benediction was given by Chaplain (Lieut.) Robert G. Metters.

The entire Cathedral was occupied cadets, their officers and guests.

cannot give you the names of all those who helped in the construction, but everybody in camp is grateful to them for having made our church our House of God."

THE RT. REV. LINDEL TSEN TO ACT AS BISHOP OF SHANGHAI

New York, N. Y.—The Rt. Rev. Lindel Tsen, Bishop of Honan, has been asked by the Rt. Rev. W. P. Roberts, Bishop of Shanghai, now in the United States, to act as bishop in charge of Shanghai, in the vacancy caused by the death of Bishop E. S. Yu, formerly assistant in charge of Shanghai in Bishop Roberts' absence. How or when the message will get through to Bishop Tsen and to Shanghai cannot be stated definitely, but it seemed wiser to Bishop Roberts to make this arrangement than to attempt the election of a new bishop when it might not be possible to arrange for his consecration at once.

The Chinese accountant in the Shanghai mission office was able to send word about the American members of the Shanghai staff still interned in Shanghai camps:

"George Laycock, Foster Teevan, Edward Throop, George Sullwold, R. J. Salmon, Gwenn Cooper and the Crawford Brown family are all well and fine. They are busy with studying and reading."

Bishop Roberts is to assist Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania for the present, and expects to move to 209 St. Mark's Square, Philadelphia, early in September.

PRISON CHAPLAIN APPOINTED

The Rev. Emmet M. Frazer Well Fitted for Task Ahead

Richmond, Va.—The addition of Rev. Emmet M. Frazer to the staff of the Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation fulfilled one part of the "long term plan" of the Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., Director of Religious Work in State Institutions. In his annual report, Director Robison called attention to the fact that he has been serving as director and also as Chaplain of the Virginia prison system. He recommended to the Foundation that a full-time chaplain be employed as soon as obtainable in order to take full advantage of the new opportunities for service in the prison in cooperation with the new Department of Corrections and Parole System. This would free the Director from some of his responsibilities to work with the churches and some of the other institutions which have been neglected. The Board of Trustees of the Foundation agreed to the employment of an Assistant Director who would take most of the responsibility for the work of the chaplain at the prison.

Mr. Frazer, a minister of the Religious Society of Friends, has been appointed Assistant Director of Religious Work in State Institutions and is already at work. Most of his time, for the present, will be given to the work at the penitentiary where he will do personal counseling, teach in the Sunday School, arrange and participate in the Sunday services, visit in the hospital, and give personal interviews to men who request them. Under the guidance of the Director he will also undertake responsibility in other institutions as needs arise.

The new Assistant Director was born in a log cabin near Oakland Mills, Iowa, in 1903, was educated in the public schools of New Mexico and Iowa and received his Bachelor of Arts degree with a Major in Religion, from Penn College, Oskaloosa, Iowa. He did his graduate study at Duke University, Durham, N. C., and received the degree of Master of Arts from the School of Religion. He also studied at Pendle Hill in 1932.

Mr. Frazer's work with the Negro students in Virginia Union University, Richmond, Va., for the past sixteen years gives him an interesting background of experience in dealing with individuals and their guidance problems. He has been resident minister of the local Friends Meeting for over fifteen years. Other experience includes teaching college courses in the Life and Teachings of Jesus, History of the Hebrew Commonwealth, Argumentation, and Public Speaking, and teaching the men of the Boggs Bible Class of Highland Park Methodist Church of Richmond, Va.

OCTOBER 10—ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHINA

New York, N. Y.—The Republic of China will be thirty-three years old on October 10. It is most suitable for Americans to join our Chinese allies in the celebration of this important event. Their "Double Tenth" (tenth day of the tenth month) corresponds to our Fourth of July.

A Committee is being formed solely to assist in the celebration of October 10 in the United States.

1944 is an eventful year in our relations with China. We are entering an intensive phase of our struggle with Japan. China is of the utmost importance to us.

Special significant messages to the American public on October 10 will be released through Local Committees.

Therefore, it is suggested that there be arranged in each community in the United States a special occasion, such as a luncheon, dinner, or some other suitable event, where people can meet and receive these messages and have the opportunity to hear more about some of the things happening in China.

In all communities where possible, it is urged that local Chinese share in the plans, and in the celebration.

CHURCH PROPERTIES FIRE INSURANCE SATISFACTORY

New York, N. Y.—The experience of The Church Properties Fire Insurance Corporation for the first six months of this year has been highly satisfactory, according to a statement just issued by Bradford B. Locke, President of the Corporation. He reports that the insurance in force as of June 30th was $118,499,000, compared to $110,759,000, a year ago and that the Corporation now insures 3,475 churches as well as many other ecclesiastical institutions.

The loss ratio for the first six months was only 35.8 per cent of earned premiums compared to an average of 41 per cent for the entire history of the Corporation since it was first established in 1929. As a result of the operations for the first six months the earned surplus was increased by $36,251, after paying a dividend of $7,500 to The Church Pension Fund as the sole stockholder. The total assets of the Corporation now stand at $809,444, of which capital and surplus represent $737,707, or over 91 per cent. It is stated that this is an unusually high ratio of capital and surplus for a fire insurance company.

The Corporation is a wholly owned subsidiary of The Church Pension Fund and insures only the property of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Its rates are unusually low and it maintains facilities by which its policyholders can pay premiums by quarterly instalments, no interest being charged on this account.

THANKSGIVING FOR BRITAIN'S HISTORIC VICTORIES

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop Henry St. George Tucker calls attention to the fact that September 3 is the fifth anniversary of Great Britain's declaration of war on Germany, and that September 15 was the peak of the Battle of Britain in 1940. He has received word that the Archbishop of Canterbury has marked September 17 as "Battle of Britain Sunday" on his calendar, and services of thanksgiving will be held for that historic victory.

Bishop Tucker does not wish to designate a special day to commemorate this event, but he believes that many clergy may want to remember it with prayers of thanksgiving, and that they may be glad to be reminded of the date.

OBJECTORS WILL GET CHURCH AID

New York, N. Y.—The National Council has unanimously authorized an appeal to the members of the Church for contributions to a fund of $20,000 to help Conscientious Objectors who are Episcopalians. The Presiding Bishop is commending this appeal in a letter he is sending to each clergyman enclosing a folder outlining the need and urging its presentation to every communicant.

The need derives from the fact that CO's must pay their own expenses while they are serving in Civilian Public Service camps. Some of them are able to do so, but many are not, since they have been taken from their ordinary civilian employment and receive no wages for the work they do in C. P. S. camps or detached service projects. The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship has been contributing to the fund for the past two years, but the need has outgrown the resources of this small group within the Episcopal Church.

As things stand at present the Society of Friends is underwriting the expenses of those who cannot pay their own way and whose own Church does not assist them. It seems simply justice that the Episcopal Church should meet the obligations of these men and not depend upon others to do so.

Ask your rector what plans are afoot in your parish.

CHINESE OFFICERS AT U. S. NAVAL BASE

CONFIRMATION IN PANAMA

Colon, Panama—Christ Church is the only Episcopal Church in that city, which now has a population of 40,000. The Rev. George Packard, priest in charge, having presented two confirmation classes in the six months since his arrival, took the Bishop to confirm an invalid who could not leave her tenement room. The "Gospel car," as the neighbors call the mission auto, is minus any muffler and sounds like an old-style fire engine, Mr. Packard says, so the Bishop's arrival was well advertised. Climbing rickety termite-infested stairs, he and Mr. Packard and an acolyte found the candidate and held the service, while throngs of neighbors crowded around the door and the porch. None of them had seen a confirmation before, and many of them had not gone to any church for years. Mr. Packard, asking everyone, as usual, "Where do you go to church?" gathered several prospective members from the crowd and at least two for future confirmations.

A girls' club recently organized at Christ Church, with Miss Blanche Trowers as assistant, is attended by twenty-five or more and stands out as the only thing of its kind in the community, the only opportunity the girls have to learn handcraft or to enjoy group recreation. The weekly meetings combine informal worship, handwork and games, all new experiences.

1ST LT. MARY C. KINYOUN RECEIVES CITATIONS

Southwestern Virginia—1st Lt. Mary C. Kinyoun of the Women's Army Corps was sometime ago the recipient of the citations quoted below.

All of this is a matter of pride to the Diocese of Southwestern Virginia for two reasons: First, Mrs. Kinyoun is a niece of Mrs. Henry D. Phillips, the wife of the Bishop of this Diocese. Second, she is a daughter of the late Rev. Francis Hopkinson Craighill, who was for twelve years rector at Wytheville, Virginia, and was prominent in the organization in 1919 of the new Diocese of Southwestern Virginia and served as the first Secretary of the Diocese until his resignation in 1921 to accept a call to Rocky Mount, North Carolina.

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. Albert Ronald Merrix, rector of St. Paul's, Oakland, largest parish in the diocese of California, has accepted appointment as National Council Field Officer for the Eighth Province, according to announcement by Robert D. Jordan, Director of the Department of Promotion. Mr. Merrix will take office on September 15.

His entire ministry spent at St. Paul's, Mr. Merrix took charge of that parish in 1932, when the communicant strength was 700. He will leave the parish after twelve years during which the communicant strength has grown to 1,400.

Mr. Merrix was born in Shoreham, England, in 1893. He attended Brighton Municipal Secondary School, was graduated from Bishop's College, and had business experience both in Canada and the United States. He decided to enter the ministry and entered the Divinity School of the Pacific, from which he was graduated in 1932.

Mr. Merrix has always been active in civic, inter-church, and community affairs. He is president of the Eastbay Ministerial Fellowship and was appointed by the Mayor of Oakland as chairman, and the only clergyman on the Chamber of Commerce Committee on Social Welfare and Recreation for the City of Oakland, a group which is engaged in post-war planning.

THE HIGHEST DISTINCTION

"My Brethren, I would warn you against this wretched, mischievous spirit of party—A Christian! A Christian! let that be your highest distinction; let that be the name which you labor to deserve. God forbid that my ministry should be the occasion of diverting your attention to anything else. But I am happy that I can appeal to yourselves, whether it has not been the great object of my zeal to inculcate upon you the grand essentials of our holy religion; and to make you sincere practical Christians. Alas! my dear people, unless I succeed in this, I labor to very little purpose, though I should presbyterianize the whole colony."

—Samuel Davies, of Virginia and New Jersey, died 1762.

Let us not think of the service of God as something of the least necessity or of indifferent employment.

Let it be done as God intended it, with holy diligence, with passion, zeal and desire, giving time and labor to it and sacrificing for its advancement. Prayer coupled with such efforts will be honored of God.

There are some things we cannot know or understand until we experience them. The gift of the Holy Spirit to the one hundred and twenty waiting disciples falls in that class. We cannot fully understand what happened then until we really desire the gift of the Holy Spirit and wait for it. The Holy Spirit empowered the early disciples to live the Christian life in a pagan world. The Holy Spirit empowered them to so live together as a fellowship and as individuals that those outside could not help but be attracted by the quality of their life. It is the Holy Spirit who empowers Christians today—as then—"to out live, out love and out die" all others. The Holy Spirit is seen in action.—E. F. K.

What reality is there in your Christianity if you look at men struggling in darkness and are content to congratulate yourselves that you are in the light?—F. W. Robertson.

As we think of the coming peace and the many and most unruly wills that will have to be reconciled, let us pray with all our hearts that ancient prayer that God will "order" the unruly wills of men and begin with my will and yours.—Canadian Churchman.

The Christian dares to be an optimist, because he sees a remedy that goes to the root of the world's ills. Christ, and no other, can forgive the sinfulness of the past, break its hold upon us, and give power to build that New Order which the world seeks. God, not man, must be its architect. It is missionary work that is building the foundations of His plan, the One Church living and growing in every country of the world, Christ's instrument for His work.—Oversea News.

Giving Honor and Glory to God

An extract from the declaration of King Henry V, made after the victory at Agincourt.

O GOD, Thy arm was here;
And not to us, but to Thy arm alone,
Ascribe we all! When, without stratagem,
But in plain shock and even play of battle,
Was ever known so great and little loss
On one part and on th' other? Take it, God,
For it is none but Thine!

* * * * *

'Tis wonderful!
Come, go we in processio to the village:
And be it death proclaimed through our host
To boast of this or take that praise from God
Which is His only.

* * * * *

Do we all holy rites;
Let there be sung 'Non nobis' and 'Te Deum;'

Henry V.

WHY NO PRAYERS OF THANKS?

Mr. Editor:

I am enclosing an extract from King Henry V, the declaration made after the victory at Agincourt which I think would be an appropriate item for your cover page at this time.

The air on D-Day was full of petitions to the Almighty for aid, the President leading off with what purported to be a plea to the Almighty but really directed to the American people, as evidenced by the crowd of microphones which surrounded him. Notwithstanding this evidence of faith in prayer, I have not heard a peep from the Commander-in-Chief or from any other leader which indicated a modicum of thanks.

Sincerely yours,
E. Randolph Williams.

THE COLLECT FOR THE ELEVENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Mr. Editor:

When the collect for the day was read last Sunday the following words had a deeper meaning for me than ever before, summing up what I have felt for years would be a cure for some of the world's ills, that is, "running the way of the Commandments": "Mercifully grant unto us such a measure of Thy grace, that we, running the way of Thy Commandments, may attain Thy gracious promises and be made partakers of Thy heavenly treasure." I do not think we can at this time place too much emphasis on the Ten Commandments, in an effort to keep them ourselves and teach them to our children in such a way that they will have them engraved on their hearts and minds. In the sixth chapter of Deuteronomy, sixth to tenth verses, Moses, speaking to the Israelites, said, in regard to the Commandments: "These words which I command thee this day shall be in thine heart; thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. Thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thy hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. Thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and upon thy gates." This puts a great responsibility upon parents, a responsibility the Church will gladly share, and I for one wish we could hark back to the day when our Bishops in their parish visitations catechized the children; just to be sure we did the parish credit, our rectors would catechize us each month, all of which gave impetus to the learning of the catechism and the commandments. That being a thing of the past, can we not find a new method of impressing these important truths upon our youth? It has been said that every law written on any statute book has its roots in the Ten Commandments, hence they should be woven into the fibre of every nation. America, admittedly, the greatest nation in the world today, faces her greatest opportunity, likewise her greatest responsibility, needing men and women well grounded in the things that make for moral strength. May we not give heed to these opportunities ourselves that we may be fitted to guide those who will be the men and women of tomorrow.

SARA GAITHER LEWIS.

"A TREMENDOUS BIBLE STORY"

Mr. Editor:

One of the most interesting and informing books I have read recently is "Tell the Folks Back Home," by Senator James M. Mead, of New York, telling of a global trip he and other United States Senators took.

I was struck by a statement he makes about the Bible, calling it "a tremendous Bible story." An American officer stationed in Canton thought it a mistake to give four truckloads of Bibles, translated into Chinese, priority ahead of gasoline and rifles. He, however, carried out orders, and rushed the Bibles into China. When he got into the interior he changed his mind. He said, "Those translations of the Bible were actually a weapon. The Bible not only teaches a man how to read, but it preaches the brotherhood and equality of all men. I'd forgotten in that sense, what dynamite for free men the Bible packed. The Bible was probably worth more to New China than the same weight of bullets."

LETTERS FROM OVERSEAS

FROM AN AIR CORPS REST HOME

Dear "Pop":

I have just returned from a rest home for flyers. I enjoyed myself quite a bit at the rest home. It was nice there, and this rest home was really a good deal. I had a swell time for the few days I was there. The Air Corps has a very good idea in these rest homes. They have an atmosphere as close to home as can possibly be without being there. We had golfing, riding, swimming, boating, and all sorts of sports—not to mention little things like fruit juices in bed, etc. We even had a butler.

I am very glad that my letters are coming to you regularly now and that you do not have to worry about that. I have been pretty busy lately, but I still always find time to write home.

Lots of love,

DUMBARTON OAKS

Question.

What do you need, Dumbarton Oaks,
To carry out your plan?
What do you need from common folks,
From me, an average man?

Answer.

We need that you shall learn to love
And treat as if a brother,
Italian, Frenchman, Greek and Slav,
All these and every other.

Our plans require that you shall learn
You do not have to hate.
Hatred will never serve our turn
To build a heaven-like state.

We need that you shall not despise
Nor walk about in pride.
How many plans, sincere and wise,
From hate and pride have died!

While at Dumbarton Oaks we work
And for world-welfare labor,
We beg your task you will not shirk,
But be a real good neighbor.

As we would shun another war
And on the real Peace move,
We cannot trust to Force and Law.
We ask of you, please,—love.

P. F. HALL.

Law always implies a distinction between that which is and that which ought to be. Of the believer, however, what Luther says is true: "An apple tree needs no law that it shall bear apples rather than thorns; the sun needs none that he shall shine and run his course; the water none that it shall flow, and fire none that it shall burn."

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

FAITH CHANGES our very heartbeat. Any thought on faith is eagerly welcomed today. Therefore, we think on faith.

"O Lord, increase our faith," and let not the words of our prayer become brittle chips of futility. Amen.

Jesus, stern son of fact, was never far from faith. The proof of this is written on almost every page of the Gospels and shows up in practically all of His helpings and healings. The afflicted woman who believed she could be cured by simply touching the hem of Jesus' robe is rather typical, and the words Jesus spoke on this occasion guide us in this matter of faith.

"Thy faith hath made thee whole; go in peace. . . ." (Mark 5:34).

Jesus did not demand faith so great as this woman's, indeed He said even as little faith as the size of a mustard seed is powerful enough to change one's life and move it ahead through obstacles large and small.

One of the great sections on faith in the New Testament is chapter 11 of Hebrews. Read all of it if there is time. We find here a long list of men who still believed God could provide "better things" according to His promise, even though at the time of their death they had not seen the fulfilment of that faith. It will be a valuable exercise to ponder how their days were ended.

WE ALL LIVE BY FAITH. There is no doubt about that. The question for many, then, is how do I get faith for certain areas where doubt is taking away my wits and my reason? Faith is a stronger power than reason and goes far beyond it. Reason walks only in the light. Faith is a beam in the darkness. Reason, for example, looking toward 1950 might make a guess based upon the trends indicated in 1944, and it would probably be pessimistic, but reason does not reckon with the unseen and unknown factors which will enter into the making of 1950; only faith does this. Therefore, we must live partly by sight and partly by faith.

William James, the great psychologist who wrote like a novelist, has given us a pattern example of faith, from which we can cut our own garment and fit it. In one of his books he tells the story of the mountaineer who comes to a deep crevice which cuts between him and safety. He can see the other side, but the chasm is bottomless and he might not make it. He is confronted with a choice. He decides to jump and makes it. There are five steps involved in this action which are clearly outlined and which would apply to any area where faith is needed. Assume the dilemma.

First, the yearning. "I want to be saved." Second, a sign is given. "I can see solid ground." Third, the leap of the spirit. "Can I make it?" Fourth, the venture of the man's body. "I believe I can." Fifth. Arrival. "I made it." The doubter will hasten to ask, no doubt, "Suppose he hadn't made it?" I just as hastily counter with, "Suppose he hadn't jumped?" The choice must always be made by the individual.

WHEN APPLIED TO the Christian life we find the five steps of the Christian way of faith. One—Christian faith is the deepest yearning. "Oh, if I knew where I might find Him." Two—Jesus Christ is the sign given of solid ground for finding God. Three—man's soul quivers in response to this visible hope. Four—he is offered the thrilling and dangerous adventure of living beyond safety, even as Jesus dared death to gain a possible resurrection. Five—The leap made brings a presence felt.

Doubt never built a cathedral nor wrote a Te Deum nor captured a Normandy beachhead. Doubt is easy. That is why we choose it sometimes.

But all of this so-called faith is sheer will power, which stops us as we start to leap, without Jesus in the picture. That is why so many attempts at faith fail—we do not have faith in God and entrust ourselves to Him. Only in the person of Christ is this possible.

Wholeness demands faith.

For physical, spiritual, mental cures, Jesus demanded faith. "Do you believe I can do it?" Our answer is "Yes" or "No."

O Jesus, I know that Thou art standing by my side. Take my hand and jump with me, as I leave the place of anxiety and fear where I now stand and leap toward yonder side where the ground will be strong under my feet. I can do all things when Thou art near. Increase my faith so that I may trust Thy prompting and leading toward the sign of a coming dawn.

COLLECT FOR THIRTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Almighty and merciful God, of whose only gift it cometh that Thy faithful people do unto Thee true and laudable service; Grant, we beseech Thee, that we may so faithfully serve Thee in this life that we fail not finally to attain Thy heavenly promises; through the merits of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

Making Ourselves Over

1. GUARDING THE SECRET PLACE

First of a series of six articles

By RICHARD R. BEASLEY

ONE VALUE OF THE PSALMS is that they show us where we ought to be. They contain peerless principles for successful and harmonious living. Especially during these days of anxiety there is much help found in drinking at the wells of truth and inspiration in the Psalms.

The ninety-first Psalm is especially wonderful. It is deathless writing. The poet speaks of the Secret Place: "whoso dwelleth in the Secret Place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." What is the Secret Place? Sometimes we think it is some special place on this earth; or we think it is far away in the heavens. But neither is true, for the Secret Place is our consciousness. That is the center of our life. That is where everything begins and ends. Make that all right and everything else is all right: that is the House of Life built, as Jesus would say, on a rock!

NHIS IS WHAT I MEAN. Suppose you came upon a person who every day lived these affirmations; first, I shall fill my mind with thoughts that heal and build; second, I will control my thinking as I control my steps; third, I shall drive out of my mind all anger, all regret, all self-pity; fourth, I shall make myself strong at the center of my life—my consciousness.

These are tremendous affirmations. Can't you see how they could turn a person's life upside down; cause a revolution; start a person in new directions! The Psalmist comments on that kind of person: "he shall not be afraid for the terror by night: nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness, nor for the sickness that destroyeth in the noon-day."

Now suppose you came upon another person. Here is some one who daily lives these negations. First, I will yield to every harmful and injurious thought. Second, I will make no effort to control what comes into my mind. Third, I will let hate rule me at any time. Fourth, I will give way to everything that keeps my life upset and unhappy and ill. Those are four terrible negations! Can't you see how they would write defeat above that person's life?

TOW CONSIDER THIS. Suppose that each of those types of people were about the same age, possessed similar advantages and were surrounded with comparable blessings—which person would you like to take with you on an ocean trip? Whom would you prefer to live with on a desert island or have as your neighbor? With whom would you prefer to spend your old age? Which person would you want to teach your child and which to nurse some loved ones i nsickness? The questions answer themselves.

This seems to be the secret. The important things in life are not the external things but the internal things. When we make that discovery we can change our lives entirely. We can determine what our life shall be.

Very practically this is what is meant. Have you ever talked like this or have you heard some one talk like this? (Notice how the emphasis is on the external things and not the internal attitudes). "If I just had a different job, how much better off I would be." "If I just had a more understanding wife, or more understanding husband, how much happier our marriage would be." "If I had just had a different childhood, how different my whole life would be." "If I just lived in a different city, how much happier I would be." "If I just had different people as friends or as business associates, how much easier things would be." Thus we do not see the most important things in life: the world around us we can make.

EVIDENTLY THIS IS THE CLUE: it's our thoughts that make us or ruin us. Sooner or later we have to learn to control our thoughts. People do not hurt us. Events do not hurt us. Circumstances do not hurt us. OUR THOUGHTS HURT US. So we have to control our thoughts. Put a guard over the Secret Place. Station a sentinel at the door of the Secret Place. Put up a sign: "Keep out—Anger; Keep Out—Resentments; Self-Pity! Worry! Fear!—Keep Out!" Thus we can control what thoughts enter our minds and what thoughts do not. That is the importance of the Secret Place!

See what hates and resentments and self-pity do to us. There are a man and woman who have been married for thirty years. For the last ten years they have lived in the same house and have never addressed a single word to each other. It began with a little irritation; then moved into a misunderstanding; and now has solidified into a living hate. There is no love in that marriage—only hell. Or one knows of three sisters who live in enmity. They hurt each other and make life miserable for each other and make no effort to heal that terrible wound. Sisters they are: of the same flesh and blood and children of the same mother and father. Yet they go on in a way that is a disgrce to their integrity and an embarrassment to their friends. Or here is a man who is capable and successful in his profession and yet in a few months has worried himself into an illness that has put him in the hospital with an alarming high blood pressure which may snap his heart any minute. He is literally killing himself with worry over things which he cannot possibly control. Our thoughts make us or ruin us!

WHAT IS THE ANSWER? If any of this is true, what can we do about it! First, no one else can do it for us. This is something we have to do ourselves. It is a matter of the mental diet we keep. We will feed our minds on thoughts that heal and build: thoughts that make for harmony, happiness, successful living. If any other kind of thoughts enter our minds we will drive them out and think about something else. We will begin each day—start tomorrow with this resolution: Not to nourish anger or self-pity, or criticism of others, or worry or fear. And if we get that habit of thinking, our whole life will change. A revolution will take place in our life. It will be changed at the center and we will move out into new and life-giving directions. That is the importance of the Secret Place!

What is Creation Waiting For?

By FREDERICK W. NEVE

THOSE WHO READ my first article on this subject will remember that I quoted a remarkable text taken from St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, chapter 8, verse 19 (Revised Version) as follows: "For the earnest expectation of the creation waiteth for the revealing of the sons of God." I interpreted this to mean that there is a close connection between the great work of redemption carried out by Christ, the Son of God, on our behalf, and creation as a whole. That is to say, I expressed my belief that this world of ours is not the only one in the universe containing beings capable of knowing God and of serving Him. St. Paul suggests—or rather, affirms—that the fulfillment of the divine purpose with regard to creation will be brought about by the sons of God, who I believe are destined to be the means by which the knowledge of Christ will be brought to those other worlds throughout the universe which are waiting for this knowledge to be brought to them, even though they may be unconscious of the means by which their earnest desire for a fuller and richer life is to be realized.

I ALSO referred to some other words of St. Paul, which indicate that the real work of the Church is to lead its members onward and upward till "we all come in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the statue of the fullness of Christ," which would certainly seem to imply "the revealing of the sons of God."

WHAT I would gather from this is that it gives a real meaning to life, in as much as it makes clear the purpose which God had in view when He created man, and more especially when He sent His Son into the world in order to raise men to a much higher level, even to being promoted to being the sons of God, so that they might be able to take part in fulfilling the divine purpose with regard to creation.

AS it is, the general idea with regard to future life is a very confused one—in fact I should say that most people leave the matter open until they are brought face to face with it by serious illness, or by the loss of some one near and dear to them. The idea that in the life to come we shall be given the opportunity of helping to bring the purpose of God with regard to creation to other worlds which form part of this great universe, would give a new meaning to life—a meaning so wonderful and full of inspiration that it could do much to raise the whole level of the Christian life to a place in creation otherwise unknown to us. Since Christ has given to His followers eternal life, this present life would assume its proper place simply as a preparation for a far vaster one, the possibilities of which are beyond the utmost reach of our imagination.

THERE is this, however, to be noted, that if eternal life has been given to us by Christ as a present possession, then there must be the opportunity to develop this higher life to enable us to make this world a very different place from what it is. St. Paul refers to Christian life as a new creation, and those who form part of it as new creatures, which would seem to show that a Christian life, which is a divine gift, is capable of providing us with the spiritual power needed to make this world more like heaven, and by learning to use this power more effectively we cannot only help to make this world more like heaven, but also be prepared to do the same for the other world, which may be waiting for the revelation of the sons of God.

We stand within the Halls of Time.
The Gates of Gold are opening wide;
A clarion call to tasks sublime
Is echoing forth on every side.

No time like this hath ever been;
No time like this will come again.
O, know ye not what it doth mean?
Fail not the utmost heights to gain!

AND WILL GOD HELP US? "Whoso dwelleth in the Secret Place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." Actually we will have a closer relationship with God than we have ever had—because we have driven out those things that separated us from God. Then we will have done this: put at the center of our thinking the greatest possible, most creative thought, the thought that can build more than anything else. That thought is—God!

AN APPEAL TO MANAGEMENT AND LABOR

From the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America

Warning that any tendency toward a "narrow isolationism or economic imperialism" on the part of industrial leadership would constitute a "betrayal" of our fighting men and would contribute to World War number three, the Federal Council of Churches in its annual Labor Sunday Message, appealed to management and labor to cooperate wholeheartedly in a vast program for world-wide peace and prosperity.

"Our American industrial system, with its mutual dependence on capital and labor, will hold the respect of society to the degree that it can succeed in adapting its program to the demands of a world economy," declared the Message which was issued through its Department of The Church and Social Service.

Asserting that a "Christian Society is under sacred obligation so to organize itself that everyone willing and able to work may be guaranteed some meaningful occupation," the church body cited as a "major problem of social justice" facing America today, that of planning adequately for the reabsorption of millions of returning soldiers into industry at a time of "terrific adjustments incident to a return to peace time production."

"A way can be found through consultation and cooperation between management and labor to make such adjustments," declared the Message, "and at the same time maintain production at a level that will continue to guarantee full employment."

Pointing out that basic human needs in terms of food, clothing and adequate housing "have never been met even in prosperous America," the Message declared that the "economic goal of tomorrow's world will be the production of more goods at lower prices for more people," and adds:

"An economy, therefore, that is planned to serve the consumer promises the greatest security, because the differences arising between labor and management can best be solved by a reference away from either group to society at large. All unite at the point of their consumer interest."

In conclusion the Message declared that although the Church is not called upon to devise schemes of social organization or technical plans for industry, it must "manifest its deep concern for the spirit and motive of our economic life."

Understanding the Prophets

SECOND—ISAIAH

The Promise of the Saviour-King

By REV. WILLIAM R. MOODY

Rector of Christ Church, Baltimore, Md.

THE WORDS OF PROPHECY which we shall consider today were written by a man whose name we do not know. The words are anonymous; yet they mark the peak of Hebrew prophecy, the highest point ever reached by that remarkable line of men in their effort to understand and to mirror-forth the character and the will of the invisible God. The prophets lead to Jesus, and this Unknown Prophet of the Exile, who is the climax and the inheritor of them all, brings us up to the foot of the Saviour's cross.

The impassioned words of this Seer and poet meant the most to the Master of all the prophetic writings; and this is the prophecy which He consciously fulfilled in His life, and in His sacrifice. Not once, but many times, He quoted from it in describing His own Ministry. And He made its fifty-third chapter His own when He ascended the cross.

ON A CERTAIN SABBATH DAY, in Nazareth, when His work was at its beginning, He took the Book of this ancient writing in His hands, and read before all the people—

"The Spirit of the Lord is upon Me
"Because the Lord hath anointed Me
"To preach good-tidings unto the meek;
"He hath sent Me to bind up the broken-hearted,
"To proclaim liberty to the captives,
"And the opening of prison to them that are bound;
"To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord!"

And when He had finished reading, He closed the Book, and said to them, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears!"

John the Baptist began his ministry and his preaching with a quotation from this prophet. Saint Paul, after he had become a Christian, found in this Book the root and ground of the Gospel, and passage after passage in his letters go back word for word to this ancient document. And the Seer of the Apocalypse, the writer of that great last book in the Bible, drew his most beautiful language, and his best-loved imagery from Second-Isaiah, especially his descriptions of the holy, heavenly city. Just as Ezekiel is the fountain and the source of Orthodox Judaism, so the Unknown Prophet gives us the matrix out of which the Christian Gospel came.

This prophecy is not the Gospel; but it is the nearest thing to it in the Old Testament. These few pages of poetry, their author unknown, might easily have been lost. But they were not lost. In the Providence of God they have come down to us, attached to the work of another man; and because they have come down to us we are able to see, more clearly than we ever would have seen without them, how the growing light of God led onward toward the perfect day.

YOU MAY ASK, "How do we know that there was an Unknown Prophet? Why suppose that another than the original Isaiah wrote these poems?" We do not have time for a full discussion of this question in the limited space which is available to us. You will just have to take it that this statement would not be made here without good, and, —we think,—sufficient evidence. I will take time, however, to put down a few of these reasons in brief. It is the almost unanimous belief of first-rank scholars today that the prophet Isaiah did not write these last chapters in his Book, for the following reasons:

(a) Differences in style. Even a person of average critical powers would have no difficulty in telling the difference between the works of John Hilton, and those of Rudyard Kipling, even if they were published together in one book.

(b) The historical references in Second-Isaiah are plainly and clearly those which would be naturally made by a man writing toward the end of the Jewish Exile. For Isaiah to have written these references,—like those to Cyrus,—would have been a stroke of foretelling the future unmatched anywhere else in the pages of the Bible! And for what purpose? It would add nothing to the strength of the Book! Indeed, it would destroy the natural historical sequence of the prophetic revelation, which was a growth! To put these poems about the Suffering Servant back before the Jewish Exile would put them as much out of place as the American Declaration of Independence would have been in the time of Queen Elizabeth. History, too, has its necessary framework. It is not impossible that a prophet should foresee the future; but it is very poor theology, and equally poor common sense to insist upon a miracle of that kind when it does not strengthen, but actually weakens, the pattern of steady growth of the revelation of God's Word to man, a growth which leads directly to Jesus.

(c) A study of the whole book of Isaiah, even in English, will show that it is not one, unified production, but a compilation. It frankly states, in one place, that it includes a little poem by King Hezekiah. This is what happened: a scribe, shortly after the return to Jerusalem, had a fine, new scroll of papyrus. This was expensive, and not to be wasted. For some reason these rolls were regularly thirty feet long. This scribe started to write,—or rather to copy,—the prophecies of Isaiah. When he had finished the words of the ancient prophet, he still had room. He added a few historical notes about the times in which Isaiah did his work, including the poem by King Hezekiah. When he had finished this, he still had room in his scroll! He looked about for something to fill out the scroll to the end, and found these wonderful Suffering Servant poems. He put them in, neglecting to give the name of the prophet. I believe that God directed this action so that these poems could be preserved, and, through an era of less inspiration and understanding, could have the protection of the famous old prophet's name! I firmly believe that when God needs a miracle, He supplies it, and here is an instance of it!

Labor Day Message, 1944

THE war emergency has demonstrated to the world that free labor in a free land can meet the gravest of crises. Free labor has produced the weapons of war for the defense of our free economy, and maintenance of a free America. For this confirmation and testimony to the world of the capacity and advantages of our American way of life, let workers everywhere and all men give thanks to Almighty God. The basic concepts of the freedom of the individual as revealed in the Bible, and the rights of man as written in our United States' Constitution, are dogmas glorious beyond compare!

Adherence to historic Christian truth, and the preservation of our freedoms require that labor be vigilant:

FIRST, radical elements which seek to control the labor movement, to use it as an instrument to change our social order from one of free enterprise to one of regimented controls, should be discredited. A leadership loyal to our American heritage should be honored and encouraged.

SECOND, when the restraints of the war emergency are removed, we all should recognize that freedom imposes its own voluntary restraints. In a free country, men who cannot for conscience' sake, by individual conviction, join a particular union, should not be coerced to join, or penalized for not joining. If a man does not desire to join a controlling union his right and opportunity to work should be respected. Labor's merit and goals will never be attained by intimidation, monopoly, and fear, but only by reason and good will.

THIRD, Almighty God, the author of liberty, has given us the only basis of true freedom and progress in His Holy Word. "If the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed." The basic probelms we face: greed, hatred, bitterness, intolerance, all stem from the cancer of sin in the human heart. These terrible forces can be broken only by the power which the Almighty has promised to give to all men who will come to Him in repentance and faith in His Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. If a mighty revival, a return to the Old Book, should break out in the labor movement of America, labor could make its greatest and most lasting contribution to our free American society. The power of God as manifested in the Gospel of Grace must be given a fair chance and trial, or our post-war era will culminate, in confusion and darkness, with the loss of those very liberties for which labor has so long struggled.

UNDERSTANDING THE PROPHETS

THE UNKNOWN PROPHET of the Exile left us no story of his life, nothing by which we may judge what manner of man he was, except these poems. He never mentions himself. His poetry was not personal, like that of Jeremiah—yet there is in it a deep understanding of human life, and of human destiny, which could not have come to him at second-hand. This man had lived; and he had suffered; and he had won through suffering to victory. No man could write as he did, except he had himself been through the dark valley, and out of it again through God's power into the sunshine. Here, at last, and for the first time in the history of religion, is a clear and intelligible answer to that great and terrible question, which vexed all the prophets, "If God be true and just and all powerful, then why do the righteous suffer?"

To this man, God is all-powerful! Nothing happens in the world except according to His will!

"I am the Lord,
"And there is none else.
"I form the light, and create evil:
"I, the Lord, do all these things!"

God does these things, yet He is righteous. And if the righteous suffer, God has a purpose in it.

The righteous suffer as the wheat suffers under the thresher's flail—that there may be bread for the eater and seed for the sower.

The righteous suffer as the ore suffers in the refiner's fire—not that the metal may be purified for the sake of its own purity, but that the world may be served by the gold.

God has a purpose beyond the rewarding of the righteous, beyond the restoring of Jerusalem—a purpose which now breaks like a new dawn over the prophet's awakening soul. This is the climax of Hebrew prophecy.

There are the great heathen nations of the earth, the sea and its countless islands, coast after coast teeming with people, bound every one of them in gross and brutish darkness—who shall bring light to them?

There are the broken and the crushed of this world—who shall lift them up? There are the sick and the suffering and the sorrowful—who shall heal them? Who shall wipe away the tears from their eyes?

Who shall stand with God for justice, in a world that knows no justice? Who shall stand with Him for righteousness, though everyone be against Him? Who? Who but Israel!

And shall Israel expect to serve God at his ease? Shall it not cost him? Does it not cost God?

Israel was called for that purpose. For that purpose Abraham came out of Ur of the Chaldees. For that purpose God brought forth Abraham's children out of Egypt. For that purpose the prophets suffered and struggled, preaching what truth they knew, in the half-light before the dawn.

What did it all mean, this history of Israel? What did God mean to do with this nation that He had built up with care and with pain during the centuries, with this people whom He had brought to birth in travail, like only to the travail of a woman bringing forth the first of her children!

Shall God bring to the gates of life, and then shut those gates,—on His Son? Shall He bring to birth, and then destroy? No! No! Israel is His son, born for a purpose! There is a future beyond this travail! A glorious future! It is coming! All the past promises it! All the past leads up to it—the dawn of God's new and better day!

IT IS A FUTURE that is greater than Jerusalem, greater than Israel. The prophets preached and suffered; God labored and struggled; not just to build a little Jewish Kingdom in the hills of Palestine: not just to set up another nation among the countless nations of the teeming earth; but that through Israel, purified and redeemed, God might make His salvation known unto the ends of the world, and His will for men to every living soul.

"Arise! Shine! For thy light is come!
"And the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee!
"For behold, darkness shall cover the earth,
"And gross darkness the people:
"But the glory of the Lord shall be seen upon thee.
"And the Gentiles shall come to thy light;
"And kings to the brightness of thy rising!"

Here, at last, we have prophecy fully awake, eyes open to God's purpose for Israel, and for mankind. Sometimes God must shock a life, not because it is wicked, but because it must be wakened. God is calling His people, whom He has awakened, to lift up their eyes, and to look upon the world,—the world hungry, needy, wounded, seeking a Saviour!

And God's awakened Servant, seeing that need, moves to meet it. "Behold, I come to do thy will, O God!"

AT FIRST THE PROPHET sees the nation as God's Servant. The Servant is Israel, purified and redeemed. But as the years pass, as the prophet's mind ripens and his vision deepens, he sees a greater thing! Through the power of God's Spirit within him, he sees God's Servant as One Man, in whom the best in Israel comes to flower, one great and towering Figure, upon whom the hope and faith of the ages converge!

"Behold my Servant, whom I uphold;
"Mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth;
"I have put my Spirit upon Him:
"He shall bring forth judgment to the Gentiles.
"A bruised reed shall He not break,
"And the smoking flax shall He not quench:
"Yet He shall bring forth judgment unto truth.
"He shall not fail nor be discouraged,
"Till He have set judgment in the earth:
"And the multitudes of the isles shall wait for His law!"

This is the King, whom God had promised, by the mouth of His holy prophets, one day to set on David's Throne. Will that King not have to suffer for His people? Yes, He will,—He must! His is the hard task of bringing, not only Israel to repentance, but the world! Our sins make God suffer, too, as well as the world. For when the world suffers, God suffers, for God loves the world. Thus there is a cross set, here, in the heart of this Book, just as there was a cross set, one day, on Calvary; and on that cross is the Saviour!

"Surely He hath borne our griefs
"And carried our sorrows:
"Yet we did esteem Him stricken,
"Smitten of God, and afflicted.

"But He was wounded for our transgressions,
"He was bruised for our iniquities:
"The chastisement of our peace was upon Him,
"And with His stripes we are healed.
"All we like sheep have gone astray;
"We have turned every one from his own way;
"And the Lord hath laid on Him
"The iniquity of us all!"

You cannot help the world unless you are willing to work for the world, to serve the world, to give yourself for your fellow men. The life that lives in selfishness dies of selfishness. Only by giving your life, pouring it out in sacrifice, can you rise to the heights with Jesus.

And out of that giving, out of that labor, out of that sacrifice comes, not pain, but joy! Strange, isn't it? Not everyone will understand, but some will understand!

We, Christians, have a duty to perform for the world,—the great pagan world about us,—in all its darkness and its sorrow. Our faith, our work, our love for them, shining forth in us, must lift the world —and out of that shall come our joy!

When you rise to take up your work today, let these words of the Unknown Prophet be singing in your heart—

"The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me
"Because the Lord hath anointed me
"To preach good-tidings to the meek;
"He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted,
"To proclaim liberty to the captives,
"And the opening of prison to them that are bound;
"To proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord!

"For Zion's sake I will not hold my peace,
"And for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest,
"Until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness,
"And the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth!
"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.
"Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her "That her warfare is accomplished, her inquity is pardoned,
"And that she hath received at the Lord's hands
"Double for all her sins!"

Amen.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

CLEVELAND CHOSEN FOR CONFERENCE

Date Set for Second Peace Conference By Protestant Church Leaders

New York—Protestant church leaders of the United States will hold their second "peace conference" in three years at Cleveland, Ohio, January 16-19, 1945, to appraise the results of Dumbarton and other peace parleys and determine on a course of action to achieve their goal of a just and durable peace based on spiritual principles.

The spiritual principles were adopted by the first conference held at Delaware, Ohio, March, 1942. These were supplemented by the political propositions or Six Pillars of Peace promulgated two years ago by the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace, sponsor of both conferences. The Commission was instituted three years ago by the Federal Council of Churches.

In the light of these church pronouncements the delegates to the Cleveland conference representing most leading Protestant denominations will study the developments of the past three years on the peace front. These include the pronouncements of the United Nations at Teheran, Moscow, Cairo and Dumbarton, and the Connally and Fulbright resolutions passed by the two houses of the United States Congress.

The Protestant church leaders have been concerned that the United States and other United Nations move in the direction of a world organization that will have both curative and creative responsibilities, not merely repressive. These churchmen, through the Commission, advised the government in their judgment that this is the only kind of peace the Christian forces of the nation can accept. At the same time they urged their people not to be discouraged by particular settlements but to continue to press for world organization consonant with their ideals.

The conference will study both the international situation and the basic peace strategy of the churches. It is expected the conference will adopt findings and recommendations for consideration of the churches and public leaders. The recommendations of the conference will be submitted to the governing bodies of the churches.

To facilitate the work of the conference it was announced that two study commissions would be created. One will study the current international situation; the other the basic problem of the peace strategy of the churches. They will be urged to complete their work of drafting a statement and recommendations before December 15 so that all delegates will have an opportunity to study them in advance of the convening date of the conference.

The personnel of these two commissions will be announced soon.

Between 350 and 400 delegates are expected to attend the conference and two-thirds of them will represent various communions, within and without the Federal Council of Churches which itself has a constituency of 25,000,000 Protestants. Other groups which will be represented are:

Allied Christian bodies such as the Home Missions Council, Foreign Missions Conference, International Council of Religious Education, American Committee for the World Council of Churches and the United Stewardship Council.

Christian bodies conducting educational programs for World Order such as the Church Peace Union, Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., United Council of Church Women, American Friends Service Committee, American Section of the World Alliance for International Friendship Through the Churches, Laymen's Missionary Movement, Laymen's Movement for World Christianity, Inter-seminary Movement and the United Christian Youth Movement. City and State Councils of Churches, members of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace which includes more than 100 church leaders, clergymen and laymen of various communions. The Associated Church Press will be invited to send a limited number of delegates and representatives of the press, secular and religious, will be invited to the conference.

WALKING PREACHER OF OZARKS

Ozark Preacher Walks 4,000 Miles a Year to Visit His People, says Coronet

"Guy Wesley Howard, the walkin' preacher of the Ozarks, is 52 but looks nearer 40, and has the pep and endurance of young men in America's armed forces. To carry on his work among the hill-folk of southern Missouri and northern Arkansas, he walks around 4,000 miles a year," according to an article in the September issue of Coronet magazine. Clad in high-topped boots, a flannel shirt and khaki breeches, he tramps from 30 to 40 miles a day and conducts an average of 250 meetings yearly among the backwoods people.

Teacher and staunch friend as well as minister of the hill people, Howard conducts church, marriage and burial services for them. His meetings are held in schoolhouses, abandoned churches, homes, brush arbors and sometimes under the blue Ozark skies. As a preacher, he speaks with conviction and fervor. He never uses notes and his delivery has all the charm and informality of an ad-lib talk.

Although Howard is the regular pastor of the Christian Church in Gainesville, Missouri, he is sponsored by no one in his work among the hill people. His mail often brings unsolicited checks, however, and the express company unloads big boxes of clothes and household necessities for needy hill-folk, says Coronet.

Spiritual uplift, in Preacher Howard's creed, goes hand in hand with physical improvement and educational advantages. He doesn't limit his service to sermons from the pulpit. He supplies food and clothing from his own meager resources in addition to what he receives in contributions. And he takes over the educational needs by teaching school back in the hills where children are growing up without some of the simplest necessities of life.

A few years ago when a small town church tried to curb his work and his forceful sermons he and his wife put their two little girls in an orphanage, and, with 62 cents in their pockets walked out of town. Today, as pastor of the Gainesville Christian Church, a quaint structure built of native stone, Howard lives in a hilltop home just outside of town and is glad he turned south to the Ozarks rather than north to a lucrative city parish, says Coronet.

To his Gainesville congregation, Pastor Howard speaks flawless English and the subjects of his sermons are always thought-stimulating. But out in the country, speaking to the hill people, he slips into their own vernacular, speaks to then in a language which they understand.

During the last year, Howard has taught school for 20 backwoods students, the oldest of them 19. He furnished the schoolhouse with white muslin which the girls made into curtains, and with crayons and other equipment. Even more important he provided the children with hot lunches, prepared right in the school room, says Coronet.

Preacher Howard feels that the Ozark people are among the finest on earth. He cites their rich heritage of Anglo-Saxon blood and respects their independent aloofness. For that reason, they feel free to call on him in time of need . . . for they know that he possesses that priceless gift that even the wisest of kings desired . . . an understanding heart.

WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL ELECTS DEAN

Washington, D. C.—At a special meeting of the Chapter of the Washington Cathedral, held on Wednesday, July 19, the Rev. John Wallace Suter, D. D., rector of the Church of the Epiphany, New York City, was elected Dean of the Cathedral, to succeed the late Dr. ZeBarney T. Phillips.

Dr. Suter has not yet announced his acceptance. It is expected that he will make his decision known in the near future.

In announcing the Chapter's action, Bishop Dun said, "I am very happy that the Chapter of the Washington Cathedral has reached a thoroughly harmonious decision regarding the man who we greatly hope will accept our invitation to become the next Dean. I have known Dr. Suter personally for many years; he would bring to the Cathedral many gifts which could be of great service in this important position.

"Especially notable are his widely recognized capacities in the field of worship. The Prayer Book and the tradition of worship connected with it are very generally viewed as the most distinctive contributions of the Episcopal Church to our common Christianity, and Dr. Suter is well known for his exceptional knowledge of the tradition as well as for his skill in adapting it to changing needs. As Secretary of the Standing Liturgical Commission of the Episcopal Church, he is in touch with those throughout the Church who are interested in the enrichment and revision of the Prayer Book.

" 'The Book of English Collects,' of which he was the editor, is a collection of prayers from the seven prayer books of the Anglican Communion."

Two thousand copies of his recent volume, "Prayers of the Spirit," have already been sold.

"Dr. Suter has had varied experience in the field of church administration; his personal character and religious reality would assuredly win the confidence and loyalty of those who would work with him in the cathedral staff. As a result of recent changes in the By-Laws of the Chapter, the Dean will be even more largely responsible for cathedral administration than in the past, and it would be a great satisfaction to have in that position a man in whom I could have such complete confidence."

Dr. Suter is 54 years old; he was born in Winchester, Mass., in 1890. His father, the Rev. John W. Suter, was a distinguished leader in the liturgical life of the Episcopal Church and the author and editor of a number of widely used books of prayers and special services. The present Dr. Suter was graduated from Harvard University in 1911. After a year's study at Union Theological Seminary in New York, he entered the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Mass., where he received his degree of Bachelor of Divinity in 1914. Bishop William Lawrence ordained him to the Diaconate that year and to the Priesthood the following year. In 1920, while rector of Christ Church, Hyde Park, Boston, Dr. Suter was appointed head of the Educational Department of the Diocese of Massachusetts, and at the same time joined the staff of St. Paul's Cathedral in Boston. There he served for a number of years under Dean Rousmaniere, who was one of the most effective Cathedral Deans in the Episcopal Church. In 1925 the National Council of the Episcopal Church placed Dr. Suter in charge of its Department of Religious Education, and he served in that position for eight years.

In 1932 the Church of the Epiphany on Murray Hill, New York City, which was about to celebrate its 100th anniversary, decided to look for a new site in the upper East Side. To take the leadership in this venture, they called Dr. Suter, and, after three years during which the whole matter of the distribution of churches on Manhattan Island was carefully studied, land was bought on the corner of York Avenue and 74th Street in a section of the city where there had never been an Episcopal church. Last May the beautiful new building was completely paid for, and it will be consecrated next October.

By his quiet, intelligent ministry, Dr. Suter has built up a growing congregation and has won their loyalty to a remarkable degree. In 1932 Dr. Suter received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Hobart College. In 1942 the Presiding Bishop appointed him Custodian of the Standard Book of Common Prayer. This was the first time that the office had passed from father to son. Dr. Suter is Secretary of the Standing Liturgical Commission of the Protestant Episcopal Church. He is the author of "Creative Teaching," "Open Doors in Religious Education," and "Prayers of the Spirit;" and the compiler of the "Book of English Collects," a collection of prayers from the seven prayer books of the Anglican Communion.

In 1913 Dr. Suter married Margaret Sturgis, and there are three children—a daughter, Mrs. Armistead Rood, of Washington, D. C., and two sons in the Army, John Wallace Suter, Jr., and Richard Sturgis Suter, who is overseas.

HOME-COMING DAY AT POHICK CHURCH

Lorton, Va.—Sunday, August 20th, will be Home-Coming Day at Pohick Church, Rev. C. E. Buxton, Rector. At the 11 o'clock morning service the Rev. J. Philip H. Mason, a son of the parish, will be the preacher and former rectors will take part.

At noon the ladies will serve a luncheon to the members, former parishioners and visitors in the parish hall with a social hour following at which Mrs. E. R. White will sing and Mr. Francis M. Wigmore will be the poet-laureate of the occasion. Chaplain Menicon will represent Ft. Belvoir.

Among the exhibits will be the Washington Bible given by Parke Custis to Pohick. Given to a northern soldier by a slave of General Lee at Arlington it was returned by him to Pohick. It originally belonged to General Washington at Mt. Vernon. Another interesting exhibit will be the cuff links of Rev. Lee Massey, who was a remarkable man, being a graduate in law, divinity and medicine. He was rector of Pohick when the present edifice was erected under the notable building committee of Colonel George Washington, Colonel George Mason, Hon. George William Fairfax, Captain Daniel McCarty, and Mr. Edward Payne.

JUNIOR GIRLS' CHOIR

Boston, Mass.—A Junior Choir School for girls is in full swing at the Lincoln Hill Camp, Foxboro, Massachusetts, having begun on August 26 with a five days' curriculum of instruction and recreation. It is an initial venture in this field by the diocesan Department of Religious Education, with which the Episcopal City Mission has cooperated by lending its pleasant summer camp with facilities for swimming and sports. Among the instructors are the Rev. Carl J. Webb, rector of St. Philip's Church, Easthampton, Albion Metcalf, organist and choirmaster of St. Stephen's Church, Lynn, and Miss Lillian M. Boyd, of the sponsoring department whose executive secretary is the Rev. Charles F. Lancaster.

RESOURCEFUL NAVY CHAPLAIN HAS UNUSUAL CHAPEL

Boston, Mass.—A resourceful Navy Chaplain has converted a camel barn into an attractive chapel. He reports about it to the Army and Navy Commission, saying that "Services up to this time were held in our mess hall with all the attendant racket from the galley and great open spaces that made it almost impossible not only to set up an inspiring chapel but to create a worshipful atmosphere. Apart from the barracks and mess hall was a separate building that was built for a camel barn. The iron mangers were still secured to the bulkheads, the feed bins evident under the mangers. Iron rings in the bulkheads showed where the Arabs had moored their ships of the desert fore and aft when the 'ships' got temperamental and tried to set up a squall.

"Permission was granted us (my Roman Catholic colleague and I) to try to turn this stinking, dirty barn into a place of worship. A work crew cleaned the place thoroughly, then some volunteers painted it, light grey from the deck, seven feet up, and the overhead and rest of the bulkheads flat white. A simple but impressive altar with canopy was moved in and set up at one end. One of our artists painted us an altar piece on the heavy Navy canvass that is used for sailors' hammocks. For paint he used ordinary household paint. The painting is seven feet high and 42 inches across, and depicts our Lord with hand upraised in blessing emerging out of storm clouds. In the foreground we see a patrol craft battling heavy seas with a ship of the line in the background. It is a masterpiece and symbolically portrays the blessing of God upon all who go down to the sea in ships. A Prayer Desk, Communion rail that will receive ten men, a lectern, portable organ and benches complete our furnishings. An altar cross and candlesticks and brass shell casings for vases complete our altr appointments. With the use of colors, linens and my silver Communion set we believe we have created one of the most beautiful places of worship in all North Africa, barring none. This is reflected in the steadily increasing attendance at both Protestant and Roman services."

CHURCH DIVINITY SCHOOL OF PACIFIC NOTES

Berkeley, Cal.—A summer session of ten weeks showed an enrollment of 16 students, with Dean Shires, Professors Miller and Parker in residence. The fall term will open on September 20. Dr. Pierson Parker will be in residence at Virginia and General Seminaries during the fall quarter.

The Post-War Rehabilitation Program, sponsored jointly by the Pacific School of Religion and the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, will continue in 1944-5, with Dr. Frank C. Foster as Dean. During the past year, Dr. Arthur Swift of Union Seminary has been the Dean. The Pacific School of Religion has announced the appointment of Dr. Hugh Vernon White, noted author, teacher, and secretary of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Congregational Church, as Professor of Christian Theology and World Christianity.

The Rev. Stephen C. Clark of Pasadena was in residence during the second summer term, gathering material for a history of the Diocese of Los Angeles.

Dr. Miller's The Challenge of the Church, a church school course for high school students, will be published as part of the Cloister series during the fall.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE TO BE HELD AT ST. MARK'S SCHOOL

Boston, Mass.—The annual conference sponsored by the diocesan Department on Youth, will draw 175 young people to St. Mark's School, Southborough, September 1-4 for a series of courses on the general theme of "Christian Brotherhood." The Rev. Robert Hatch, chairman of the Department and rector of St. John's Church, Arlington, will lead the sessions on "Brotherhood of the Church." The Rev. David Hunter of the Church of the Holy Spirit, Mattapan, and the Rev. Charles F. Hall, Grace Church, Medford, will lead courses on "Brotherhood of Races" and "God and the Nations." The recreation leader is the Rev. Daniel Boone, of the Memorial Church of the Ascension, Ipswich; conference organist is Miss Marjorie Fay Johnson, organist of the Church of the Epiphany, Dorchester. Miss Marjorie G. Mitchell, secretary to Archdeacon Arthur O. Phinney, executive secretary of the Department on Youth, is registrar and will address one of the evening sessions.

HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS CANNING VEGETABLES

Boston, Mass.—Farmerettes, a group of high school girls, are spending the last two weeks of August gathering and canning the vegetables grown by forty farm boys this summer at the Cathedral Farm, in Hubbardston, Mass., operated by the Cathedral Church of St. Paul of Boston. The Farm, under the care of an expert farmer, is annually given over to the young farmers in training and the Cathedral choir boys, under direction of the Rev. Richard S. Knight, of the Cathedral staff; the products of their labors, vegetables, apples, chickens and eggs, are sold weekly at a Boston booth in addition to the standing order from one of the more exclusive metropolitan hotels. The promotion of health, without and within, of the young people is one of the most valuable products of all.

DEDICATE ALTAR TO WORLD PEACE

Rockland, Me.—An outdoor altar dedicated to world peace, has been built against the wall of St. Peter's Episcopal Church, Rockland. The Rev. Ernest O. Kenyon, rector, tells that the altar was made possible by the interest of a number of men outside his parish. A quarry man at Clark's Island, not an Episcopalian, gave a fine granite stone for the top of the altar. A truckman, also of another communion, donated his services in hauling all the stone. A Baptist draftsman of the community drew the plans. A crucifix and the word "Pax" set into the wall above the altar, were carved by inmates of the State penitentiary.

RED CROSS BOXES FURNISH CHAPEL FOR WAR PRISONERS

Washington, D. C. — With wood from boxes in which American Red Cross supplies were sent to Stalag Luft III B, a prisoner of war camp in Germany, captured American Airmen have transformed one of their huts into an interdenominational chapel, according to information received by the Prisoners of War Bulletin, published by American Red Cross National Headquarters. The place of worship holds 350 men and is used by Protestant and Catholic prisoners for their weekly devotions.

Great ingenuity and skill went into the various fittings and decorations of the little church. Whittling and carving the pieces of wood from the Red Cross crates served the double purpose of keeping many of the men occupied and making the chapel interior more than just a drab hut. Some of the prisoners carved and built the altar. One man with exquisite artistry sculptured a crucifix. Other prisoners, more or less experienced as carpenters, built the pulpit and arranged the trellis-worked altar-rail.

Each man brought as a tribute his special skill. The untalented helped mix the cement and chip the pieces of stone and glass which an artist fashioned into a beautiful mosaic. This 500-pound work of art portraying Christ walking on the waters is now one of the show pieces of the camp. It is placed over the chapel entrance.

Within the chapel itself are other religious pictorial representations. Flanking the crucifix, for instance, are two oil paintings; one of Christ in Gethsemane, the other of the Virgin Mary. Hanging on other walls are two paintings also done by prisoners in their free time. These show Christ and the Fishermen and Christ healing the sick.

To the delegate of the International YMCA, instrumental in providing oil colors, paintbrushes, and tools for the interned men, Sergeant Robert Berger, who is one of the two Protestant lay preachers in the camp, fervently said:

"The building of this church is the work of those of us who wanted to thank God for delivering us. . . . I cannot give you the names of all those who helped in the construction, but everybody in camp is grateful to them for having made our church our House of GOD.

JAPANESE HYMNAL BATTLE SOUVENIR

Boston, Mass.—"An interesting souvenir which is in my possession is a Japanese Hymnal, picked up by a soldier on the battlefield," wrote Chaplain Francis W. Read to the Episcopal Church's Army and Navy Commission. "The preface and text of the hymns are printed in Japanese, and the tune names and first lines are also printed in English. As it contains many of our hymns, also the Creed, Kyrie, etc., I think it may be the Hymnal of the Nippon Sei Ko Kwai (Branch of the Anglican Communion in Japan). There are notes in Marshallese written on some of the pages, indicating that it had been used by some of the natives."

DEATHS

DEATH TAKES MRS. JOHNSON

Widow of Rev. J. W. Cantey Johnson, Formerly of Gastonia, Dies at Franklin

MRS. J. W. CANTEY JOHNSON, 67, former Gastonian, co-owner and editor of The Franklin Press at Franklin, died at her home there Sunday afternoon following an illness of several months.

Mrs. Johnson was the widow of Rev. J. W. C. Johnson, Episcopal clergyman who was for many years rector of St. Mark's Episcopal Church here, and who died some years ago.

Born in Rock Hill, S. C., Mrs. Johnson was the daughter of Mrs. William Blackburn Wilson, now of Washington, D. C., who survives, and the late Mr. Wilson.

She was married to Mr. Johnson, June 3, 1897. She was a graduate of Converse College, and served as president of the alumni association for a term. While living here Mrs. Johnson was secretary of the American Red Cross chapter, and in Franklin she served in that capacity until her death. She was prominent in the work of St. Agnes Episcopal Church at Franklin. She was a member of the board of trustees of St. Mary's College.

The funeral will be held Wednesday at 5 o'clock in St. Agnes Episcopal Church at Franklin, by the rector, Rev. Rufus A. Morgan. Interment will be made at Rock Hill, S. C.

Mrs. Johnson made her home in Asheville for a year before moving to Franklin in 1931. She had been editor of The Press for four years.

Besides her mother, Mrs. Johnson is survived by six sons, John A. of Atlanta, Lt. B. W., U. S. Army, serving overseas, W. Cantey, of Madison, Francis B., of Fort Worth, Tex., Cpl. William S., and Lieut. (jg) Richard R. Johnson, both of Franklin; six grandchildren; four brothers, W. B. Wilson of Rock Hill, William M. Wilson, of Washington, D. C., and Dr. Oscar B. Wilson of Spartanburg, and York L. Wilson of Washington, D. C.; and five sisters, Mrs. C. J. Walker of Rock Hill, Mrs. Lynton Estes of Gastonia, Miss Lulie M. Wilson and Miss Fannie B. Wilson, both of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Paul Sanders of Ritter.

UNITED CHURCH CANVASS ORGANIZED IN DETROIT

Detroit, Mich.—Churches of all faiths in Detroit are planning to join in the fall in a three-weeks' united campaign to present the claims of the Church to the whole population of the city. The United Church Canvass was started in Detroit last year and met with considerable success. This year the effort will be on a larger scale, and will be under the direction of Mr. John R. Watkins, a member of Christ Episcopal Church, Grosse Pointe Farms, and active also in St. Philip's and St. Stephen's parish, Detroit. He is a member of several important committees of the diocese of Michigan, and is chairman of the newly formed diocesan War Emergency Committee.

WALLACE MEMORIAL WINDOW DEDICATED

Richmond, Va.—A service of dedication for the memorial window to Lieutenant David A. Wallace was held July 30 at All Saints Episcopal Church at 11 o'clock. Lieutenant Wallace, of the Army Air Force Communications, was killed in action March 10, 1943. The war memorial was given by members of his family. The central figure in the window is St. Andrew, who was chosen because of his zeal, which David

As our bodies live in commerce with the light and air, in the environment of house and food and daily exercise of the limbs and senses, under the economy of material nature, so our spirits live by the breath of prayer, by faith and love towards God, by reference and filial submission, by communion with things unseen and eternal.—G. # Personal Notes Of Interest

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. W. Robert Webb has been appointed rector of Holy Trinity Parish, Juneau, Alaska, the National Council's Overseas Department announces. He will succeed the Rev. Charles E. Rice, who retires next November. Mr. Webb expects to sail for the field in October.

Mr. Webb is a native of Nashville, Tenn., 24 years old, with degrees from Vanderbilt University and the Virginia Seminary. He did graduate work in the Vanderbilt School of Religion in the early part of this year. He has been assistant at Christ Church, Nashville, and before ordination was lay reader in charge of missions in Virginia.

The Rev. Newton Liu escaped safely from the recent capture of Changsha and is in the southern part of the province of Hunan, according to word sent from China by Bishop A. A. Gilman in mid-July. Mr. Liu will be remembered as the priest in charge of Trinity Church, Changsha, who has remained in that much bombed and fought-for city, where his school and residence have been destroyed and his church badly damaged while he has continued holding services, teaching, helping refugees, visiting other isolated clergy within reach, and presenting candidates for confirmation whenever a bishop could get through to him. He has been on the mission staff since 1925.

Precious Stones

A tribute in Winnsboro Blue Granite marks the height of memorial perfection for its durability and its beauty cannot be excelled.

The beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

The men and women who do the most for religion are not its advocates, but its witnesses. Religion is best expressed in lives.—Dr. William Lyon Phelps.

Let no ill deceive you,
Christ is Lord and Master,
His right hand is building
Triumph from disaster.

Prayer imposed is empty and profitless; prayer inspired is sweet incense to God, and luxury to man.

When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we repent of, but our severity."

The experience of all great saints is that the Christian life is not a battle, but a war. They may lose the battle, but not the final victory.—William H. Nelson.

I looked for God. He was not there.
Begging for light, I cried in prayer,
Then, turning back with many a tear
I felt my shoulder touched: "Behold, I'm here!"
I looked for thee; "I am with thee."
And the great God went home with me.
—From the Persian.

I read the Acts and learned that the Apostles served God with gladness and singleness of heart. I looked back to John's Gospel to find the cause. It was that they had a Christ still alive, who was in them as the power of endless life. I had thought of union with Christ as sympathy and moral likeness; now I saw that it was a union of life—in which the Spirit of Christ interpenetrates and energizes our spirits.—Dr A. H. Strong.

Vol. 110—No. 35 9 SEPTEMBER, 1944

A VACATIONIST'S PRAYER

Lord, give me grace when I go from the mountains,
Away from the things that bring peace to the soul—
Hemlocks and spruces, fresh sweet-smelling balsams,
All green things of the earth which in beauty unroll.
Peaks in the sunrise, and peaks in the sunset—
Stars of pure gold in the clear, silent nights—
Mists full of stillness, bright clouds of soft whiteness—
Mystical glowing of far Northern Lights.
Help me I pray, when these joys are behind me,
When down to the flat-lying city I go,
Take me in spirit back, back to the mountains,
To rest in Thy presence, and be still and know.

Yours of August 19th before me.

I would not be honest if I did not say I am gratified to see the copy of my letter to you regarding "Letter to Gardiner Day from A. L. Taliaferro.

Since writing you, I have contacted my bishop, and as expressed in my letter, he was too busy to give any time to the literary controversy.

May I say thank you for the reproduction of this outburst of mine—the name Callahan will perhaps assist you in your query of "why all the loyalty." I happen to love him, that's all. He's my Bishop, and one of God's own. A guy doesn't average day in and day out anywhere from 200 to 500 miles, with perhaps three to five services a week, as Bishop, without a lot of love of God's people. According to all the rules surrounding the office of a bishop, he should be at his Episcopal P. C. (Post of Command), but his greatest joy is the driving of as many miles as he can in a day, and uplifting the most souls of men, including his clergy, of which I am one. And a visitation from Bishop Ziegler is to a rural rector what a drink is to a thirsty soldier on outpost duty—and I have been both—and how!

On September 1st I will remit $2 for a continuance of the "great little paper."

REV. C. L. CALLAHAN.

UNITARIAN SEEPAGE

Dear Mr. Editor:

Several months ago I chanced to pass the door of a Unitarian Church in this city where a new minister was being installed, a cultivated man from down Boston way. Among the speakers on the occasion was an eloquent Baltimore rabbi who started out by saying, "You know we Jews are the original Unitarians." The faces of some of the lay trustees were a study.

I recently read Sholem Asch's Apostle, in which nothing is made of St. Paul's conversion or of his intense yearning to have his fellow Jews see the light that had dawned upon him. Instead, Christianity is presented as a messianic cult within Judaism, and both St. Peter and St. Paul go to their deaths in the city of Rome with the great Jewish formula upon their lips: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one God." The fiction of this best seller is brilliant in its way and quite appealing in a sensate age, but as a historical novel it is basically false throughout and one of the subtlest contributions portraying the reduced Christ that has appeared in recent years. In the author's autobiography which came out in the Atlantic Monthly, Sholem Asch tells the story of how as a boy he was mistreated by young Polish Christian bigots in his Warsaw home. This may account for the intense passion with which he has written, first, The Nazarene, in which Judas Iscariot is represented as the strong man of the original Twelve, although Jesus said of him, "Have I not chosen you twelve, and one of you is a devil?" and Mary Magdalene, the classic redeemed penitent of Christianity who fell at Jesus' feet on Resurrection morning, crying, "My Lord and my God"—this woman is portrayed as the perfumed, alluring courtesan, matching in Hebrew annals Cleopatra of Egypt.

I often wonder why we find indiscriminate and encomiastic references to such books as these even in the religious press. Never was the full Nicene faith in our Lord's deity more important than it is for the world today, and yet never have there been subtler attacks upon our Lord's divine authority. The tragedy is that the Jews whose prophets foretold the Messiah, the Jews "of whom Christ was born according to the flesh," and who also gave us St. John and St. Paul, His greatest contemporary interpreters, should now be producing men bent on discrediting the original and authentic history.

APPEAL FOR ENROLLMENT OF CHAPLAINS

New York, N. Y.—An appeal to clergymen to enroll in the Navy for service as chaplains on warships and transports now building has been issued by Capt. Maurice M. Witherspoon, U. S. N., District Chaplain of the Third Naval District, with headquarters in New York City.

The appeal states that 750 clergymen are needed to fill these billets, many of which will take chaplains to fighting fronts all over the world.

Telephone inquiry from the National Council to Chaplain Witherspoon reveals that, although the Episcopal quota is overfilled, more Episcopal Chaplains will be accepted at this time, regardless of quota.

Clergy who are interested and who live in the Third Naval District, comprising New York, Connecticut, and the northern part of New Jersey, are asked to address District Chaplain, Room 1314, Federal Office Building, 90 Church Street, New York 7, N. Y. Telephone calls are welcomed the statement says—Rector 2-9100.

It is suggested that clergy who write or call on the District Chaplain should get in touch also with our own Army and Navy Commission, 1 Joy Street, Boston 8, Mass.

COURTESY IS ONE of life's greatest blessings and one of Christianity's finest virtues. Common courtesy, then, will be our theme this week.

St. Peter knew about courtesy and admonished the disciples in this manner:

"Finally be ye all of one mind, having compassion one of another, love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous: not rendering evil for evil, or railing for railing: but contrariwise blessing; knowing that ye are thereunto called, that ye should inherit a blessing." (I Peter 3:8-9).

THE MARKS OF COURTESY are many but they all tend to reveal an attitude, a manner, or an act which promotes agreeable or pleasant intercourse with others. Courtesy is that which marks the Christian gentleman and is far more than the outward manifestation of social training or even exquisite breeding. It is also more than rising when a lady enters the room and other gallantries of attention. It is far more than mere politeness and social grace, although the truly courteous one will possess all these niceties as well. Courtesy is that sweetness of disposition which flows easily as consideration and thoughtfulness, and is indicated "in a thousand little ceremonies flowing out of the most ordinary relations and observances of life." It is the right touch that gives richness and beauty, dignity and joy, graciousness and charm to a life which without it would be dull and boorish and unhappy.

It is one of the cheapest of possessions and can be the shiny presence of every home and gathering whether rich or poor, large or small.

It is the instinct for the right word and the right deed. It is a sensitiveness to the need of the moment. It is an alertness to the opportunities of human relationship. It is a kind of humility that pours out compassion and sympathy. Peter expressed it well when he said "For this is your vocation, to bless. . . ." by the looks you look, the words you speak, the very attitude of your listening, the very tone of your voice. Common courtesy is devoid of offensiveness and all in all gives wide latitude for the churlishness of another to spend itself before becoming the occasion for courtesy's end.

St. Frances of Assisi is one of our best examples of Christian courtesy. His kindness and thoughtfulness, even to the birds and beasts, are legendary. He was humble. His very presence gave a blessing. His love for others was prodigious because so was his love for God. "Be found of me, O Lord," he prayed, "so that in all things I may do Thy holy will." He gave himself as fully to a leper as to a prince, to a bird or a rabbit as to the Pope, Vincent III, himself. He was all attention in the presence of another upon that other and was never rude. Even his countenance radiated his interest. He said, "It becometh not a servant of God before his brother or any other to show sadness, and a troubled countenance. It belongs to the devil to be sad." Many stories of his courtesy are to be found in The Little Flowers.

Almighty and Everlasting God, give unto us the increase of faith, hope, and charity; and, that we may obtain that which Thou dost promise, make us to love that which Thou dost command; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

COMMON COURTESY wins friends and opens doors, and is a good sign that we have learned how to hold our tongues and direct our speech, how to forget self and ignore slights, how to carry into life Peter's injunction to "be courteous," by which he meant to make your every action and attitude a blessing for all the hours between the dawns.

Church school teachers and their pupils, as they begin the new fall session. Nothing is of more importance in a diocese or parish than a well developed program of religious education. The appalling lack of knowledge of things religious, to which most service chaplains can amply testify, should make all of us think more earnestly and labor more diligently, to effectively train the children and young people committed to our charge. Nurture in things Christian is necessary for "a just and durable peace."

2. THE SELF YOU HAVE TO LIVE WITH

By RICHARD R. BEASLEY

EUCLID, THE GREEK MATHEMATICIAN, gave to the world centuries ago, certain axioms—little fundamental rules of mathematics—and every school boy sooner or later has to become acquainted with them. Well, similarly, there are certain axioms of life.

Here are two of them. First, our mind grows by what it feeds on. Second, our thinking makes us what we are. Now there is nothing recent or modern about this idea. Tucked away in the center of the Old Testament one finds the echo of it. One of the verses in the book of Proverbs is on the same track: "Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life." That is distilled wisdom.

In fact when one sits down and reads the book of Psalms or Proverbs, it is like sitting by an old man and hearing him talk. He has reached a ripe old age; he has lived widely and deeply, and is talking out of his experience. "This is what I have learned," he says. "Life has taught me this. I have seen this with my own eyes. I pass this on to you for what it is worth: Keep thy heart with all diligence for out of it are the issues of life." So speaks deep wisdom.

SO IT WOULD SEEM that we can go a long way toward making ourselves. As a matter of fact we have three selves. One self is what we show the world. Another self is what God wants us to be. But the other self (to use a fertile idea of Winfred Rhoades is the self we have to live with. That self we can make. Thus we are self-creators and we are making that self by what we daily and hourly think and do, like an artist working on a statue. Thus we can determine our destiny. Thus we can make the kind of life we want.

But right away one hears a contrary opinion. Have you ever said this or heard some one say it: "I was born this way and I can't change"—(though there are millions of people who have actually changed from the way they were born); or, "It's a terrible situation and nothing can alter it"—(except the person himself). Or, "All my life I have been the victim of circumstances"—(history is full of people who have triumphed over circumstances). All this is unconscious fatalism and there is no greater error in life than this. The one thing we can change is the self we have to live with. When one sees a person with eyes with living hate in them—well, what terrifying thoughts must be the daily companion of that person! When one sees a person who goes through life with the demeanor of a porcupine, little needles of poison hurting people—what terrifying thoughts must be the daily companion of that person. When one sees a person whose face has written all over it dejection, melancholy, defeat—what thoughts that person must live with! Or, there is the person who resents correction or suggestions and goes on his selfish way regardless of other people—what thoughts that person must think! Or, there is the person who goes down life's way always whining and complaining and discontented—what thoughts, terrifying thoughts, must be that one's daily companion.

SUPPOSE WE SET OUT to make over ourselves. Others have done this. But before we can expect external conditions to change we have to change the self we have to live with. We will start work on a new mental diet. There will be harmful thoughts but we will not dwell on them. We will not focus on them; nor live with them; nor attend to them; nor nourish them. When they come—these enemies of our peace—we will drive them out, as we would any enemy. We will have resentments but we will not dwell on them; nor dwell on animosities; we will have excuses for fault-findings but we will not dwell on them. We will not dwell on dislikes or thwartings or disappointments or miseries. Every one has these thoughts; but the big, free souls do not dwell on them, because that is when they leave their poison in the mind and injure the self we have to live with.

To be sure, we cannot always control things that happen in life but we can control our reaction to them. We all have losses or frustrations or injuries or bad fortune. No one is ever immune from these things. But we can determine how they will leave us—miserable or embittered or beaten!

The self we have to live with is the self that determines what we will be—victor or victim? sick or well? confident or fearful? poised or chaotic? an asset to our friends and family or a liability? And it all depends on what thoughts we allow to enter and remain in residence in our minds.

THUS WE CAN GO TO WORK on the self we have to live with. "Keep thy heart with diligence for out of it are the issues of life." We can change our mental habits. We can keep the weeds out of our garden. A little girl was playing with a cat and the cat scratched her face. She told her mother afterwards: "The kitty scratched my face but it didn't get me." That's the self we have to live with: It didn't get me. And it requires constant hard work. It is easier to complain than be satisfied. It is easier to criticise than to look for the good. It is easier to resign and give in than to hold up your head bravely. It is easier to tear down than to build up. It takes constant mental effort. But how worthwhile it is. When we have changed our whole mental outlook and started re-making the self we have to live with there is such joy in the final product that we will hardly recognize ourselves. Said Shelley:

> Man who would be,
> Must rule the empire of himself; in it
> Must be supreme, establishing his throne,
> Of unvanquished will, quelling the anarchy
> Of hopes and fears, being himself alone.

We can make a picture of the kind of person we want to be. Every day will see how close we are coming to that ideal. With this picture we want to be we can measure it by life's greatest ideal. That is why Christianity is so redemptive. Before us always, it puts the peerless life: see how you can make your life with His help. You want the purity of Christ. You

The Place of Religion in the Post-War World

An address by Mr. Henry Martin, F. S. A., Editor-in-Chief, Press Association, delivered to a meeting of Provincial Newspaper Editors

IN talking to you today on "The Place of Religion in the Post-War Press" it is not my intention that my address shall be based upon religious grounds. What I am about to say is intended to be purely objective.

My chief point is that after the war, but preferably now, the Press, as a key industry, has got to determine its attitude to religion, whether it is to be cooperative, just benevolent, indecisive, aloof or even hostile. Up to now it has, in the main, shirked a realistic approach. It is only within the last year or two that we have seen a tangible stirring of the journalistic conscience, reflecting, if in reduced measure, a freer discussion of religious matters among all sections of the community. The question is whether in this respect as in others the Press will fulfil its function of mirroring the trend of thought of the people.

Spirit of Inquiry

It is significant that while a bare tenth of the population are churchgoers, a spirit of inquiry is manifesting itself in all ages and classes, a genuine desire to know what Christianity has to say to the world's problems and whether it can supply the answer. A few newspapers have faced up to the issue and started pioneer work. Generally speaking, religion has always been regarded, especially in London, as the leper at the rich newspaper table, where politics, industry, economics, finance, crime, sensation, and sport have been honored and pampered guests and a few odd crumbs have been thrown grudgingly to Lazarus, after art, the drama, music, archaeology and science have managed to secure a meagre ration.

Today the spiritual element, or the Christian ethic, is challenging you for the position as chief guest, as the physician called in as a last resort to cure the world's ills.

Whatever its shortcomings, the British Press sets an example to the world. Its quality of stewardship is now going to be tested. It faces the challenge whether it is prepared from a sense of conviction that it is in the public interest to approach from a spiritual or religious angle the post-war problems that will press for solution.

A Spiritual Revival is Most Likely

Here is the picture as I see it. A spiritual revival is most likely. People today are now more interested in God as distinct from goodness than they have ever been. A moral religion alone is being found insufficient. We have seen in the Axis countries how low-level idealism has degenerated into idolism. Tens of thousands of men and women returning from the Forces will look for a living faith, an all-satisfying philosophy. They will ask for an answer to the question whether the practice of Christian principles can avert a recurrence of the horrors of modern warfare. Is the Press going to be reliable guide? Is it going to pull its weight in stemming the tide of materialism?

Journalistic ideals, nobly maintained during the war, will be stimulated by peace. Newspaper managements will be looking for fresh fields to exploit. Editorial exterprise will enter upon a period of renaissance. You may have noted how the expression of the demand which religion makes upon the individual conscience has seeped very markedly this past year into newspaper columns. I predict that it will flow much more vigorously and insistently into them.

How Will the Press Respond?

How will the Press respond to this opportunity? I cannot be indifferent: it will not be allowed to. We are, first and foremost, newspapermen. Remaking the world is not something that you and I can or will ever say is not our business. The germs of a new world repose in the minds and consciences of each one of us. The foundation of the new order we wish to see rests upon the Christian home—I am quoting Her Majesty the Queen. Evolution or revolution is no more or less than the external patterning of the working of individual souls, and the Press is one of the most potent factors in determining how those souls shall think and act.

Since, therefore, the spiritual permeates every thought, every action, every decision, it follows that religion is news, news of the highest order, inescapable news, news of a kind that has never been adequately and clearly perceived in our profession.

The Christian Background

But the pendulum has swung back. Leaders of the Forces have testified to the help the Almighty has given them as a result of their daily request for guidance. The right of the Churches to express an opinion upon social politics and the attitude of the Christian towards citizenship have been actively canvassed. Statesmen are not hesitating to emphasize Christian principles. Leaders of industry are openly admitting the spiritual value of honest dealing. Trade Union leaders are urging an infusion of the Christian spirit into the solution of labor troubles, and one ex-T.U.C. president has appealed for the Christian code in the workshop and in giving the public a square deal.

This is news, religious news; and as testimony of this kind multiplies I cannot see how the Press can logically stop short at dispassionate reporting, which in the case of some newspapers, chiefly the nationals, is, in my judgment, still inadequate. Leading articles in which even a tiny thread of religion is interwoven are of extreme rarity in the daily newspapers; but I am convinced that the Press will find itself of necessity coming to accept religion as a background for relating, analyzing and interpreting the philosophies, problems and issues of the age just as certainly as at present it utilizes moral standards and conventions and political creeds for testing new proposals put forward in the public interest. Is it, I ask, prepared to Christianize public opinion?

I have no doubt that in common with other industries the newspaper organizations are setting up technical committees to scan the post-war horizon. I wonder what you will say to my suggestion of another. I mean a religious research committee, the aim of which should be to enfranchise religion, to give it a Magna Charta and embody that charter in the Press constitution.

Here, tentatively, are the terms of reference:

(1) To ascertain frankly why religion has been looked at askance in the Press, whether because it has been the reflection of public pressure or indifference to an apparently moribund topic or because of faulty ideas and an immature realization of its true value on the part of those concerned in newspaper direction.

(2) To consider what kind of ideologies and men and women are likely to prevail after the war as a result of the victory of the United Nations, and what factors in the present call for special study in order to secure a reliable answer.

(3) To consider, in the light of the present trend, the approximate extent to which the spiritual may be expected to replace the material outlook and permeate the life of the nation.

(4) To advise, if such permeation be deemed likely, upon the extent and method of response the Press should make to meet the need, and to estimate the effect on circulations.

(5) To take into account the reaction upon the thinking of the non-religious population to the repeated suggestion in newspapers of Christian principles as something differing from and transcending the mere moral argument in dealing with civic, national and international questions.

(6) To weigh the internal implications in newspaper offices of the adoption of a policy based upon religious standards.

All this is, I know, a big order, with a good deal of the intangible in it. Yet the general idea is well worth serious discussion. I do recommend district meetings of managers and editors, and meetings of editors and staffs, to take these rough terms of reference as a basis of discussion in order to see whether in individual offices or small groups of offices readjustments of policy are possible. If nothing else happens, such talks will, I feel, clear the air.

How does the Press react to religion? Generally speaking, with a certain wariness and frequently with contempt. There is an attitude of constraint, of suspicion that an attempt is being made to "sell" something for ulterior motives, to gatecrash the columns. Then there is the not unreasonable fear of partisanship, of being drawn into the cockpit of denominational discords, of venturing where even angels might fear to tread. Yet another reason may be the unnatural deportment of some of the clergy. The ordinary journalist has no difficulty in weighing up what is so frequently in his experience the hollowness of a clergyman and his failure, perhaps inability, to put into practice when dealing with the Press the principles of brotherhood which he outwardly professes. In brief, the whole terrain is unfamiliar and sown with hidden mines, and the journalist prefers safety first.

But it goes deeper than that. One sensed before the war that religion was regarded by those of the younger generation whose progress had been of the mushroom variety, as something almost indecent. To be associated with it was like appearing in the street with a friend who had taken off his clothes. And today either the verdict is "Poor chap, what a pity," or you encounter the scoffs of the "Blimps" or the virulent criticism of those who, onion-like, have lost their souls in layers of materialist accretions.

If a newspaper has political convictions, is there any reason why it should not have religious? Why be ashamed to have them? Advocates of materialism have no such qualms. Christian homes, team work, and mutual trust in industry and a united nation are, after all, what Britain is striving for. It was the Queen who said in her broadcast that women must be concerned with religion, as it is in Christian homes that real spiritual recovery and rebuilding of national life should start. And I am still waiting for an influential newspaper to urge the Cabinet to mobilize the spiritual strength of the nation and to advocate the Christian touch in the solution of the recurrent industrial and labor problems. Perilous stuff, perhaps, but opening up unexplored territory.

If a new spirit is to infuse the Press the first move must obviously come from proprietors or those responsible for newspaper management. Direction allied to goodwill from the very top is the only true orientation, for it will sweep away fear or reluctance on the part of a staff. It will enable an editor to receive representatives of organized religion and associated movements and talk frankly and freely with them without mental reservations. I am not suggesting that religion should be given a disparity of presentation. It must be a natural inclusion, an integration, an emanation rather than an excrescence. The commercial aspect, too, must be borne in mind. There is the necessity to remember the delicately balanced economic structure and to test the stress and strain to which such a policy may be calculated to subject a particular type of publication, serious-minded or popular. Circulation, it is true, may be lost. The test of a proprietor's faith would be his readiness to drop circulation, which, I cannot help thinking, would be only temporary.

---

Better Educated Journalists

It seems to me that a higher standard of education will have to be demanded from recruits to journalism and a watch kept on their intellectual growth as they ascend the ladder. In too many cases a promising young man has got a swollen head through facile success, and it is pathetic how these individuals, writing every day to instruct and influence, can come to look with contempt upon those whose minds and souls are on a far higher plane. The post-war journalist must be humble, and dig down deeply to appreciate what people are expecting of his profession.

The Press cannot, of course, present a new front to the public without putting its own house in order. I am reminded of the man whom a parson was trying to convert.

"Christianity has been here for nearly two thousand years," said the man, "and look at the state the world is in."

"Yes," retorted the parson, "water has been in the world for billions of years, and look at the state of your neck."

Needed Press Reforms

Freedom must remain freedom, not stray into license. Then one of the implications concerns closer relations between employers and employed, and office conditions. The code of professional conduct must be kept

EDITORIALS

No Desire for Controversy

Just prior to leaving for vacation we published a letter from Mr. A. L. Taliaferro of Rock Springs, Wyoming. In the August 26th issue, we published a reply to this letter and our editorial in the same issue (July 29th) from the Bishop of Wyoming. The Editor had not seen the Bishop of Wyoming's reply until after its publication. I trust he believes in our fairness in promptly publishing his reply. We also are printing in this issue a letter in defense of the Bishop by one of his own Diocesan clergy.

There are certain implications in the Bishop's letter to which we must reply. We believe in the fairness of the Bishop.

To keep the record straight, may we give the background of the publication of Mr. Taliaferro's letter? In the latter part of June or early July, we published the Statement of Purpose issued by the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship after its meeting of May last. Shortly thereafter the Editor received a letter from Mr. Taliaferro saying he had been much interested by the statement and would like to get in touch with such an organization. The writer, referred Mr. Taliaferro to the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, President of the Fellowship. Out of courtesy and entirely unsolicited Mr. Taliaferro sent this writer a copy of his letter to Mr. Day. It is this letter that we published, after we had wired Mr. Taliaferro for permission, which permission we received by return wire. We do not know Mr. Taliaferro. We did accept his statements as those of a responsible layman. We do believe it to be a disturbing letter to a great many people in the Church.

We deny that we have been unfair to the whole missionary cause of the church. Perhaps the Bishop and the writer are using Evangelical in a different sense. We refer him to our editorial of the 29th of July, in the second paragraph of which we wrote: "It has always seemed to us that the genius of the Anglican Communion has been its ability to hold within one fold widely divergent groups. This means that within his canonical rights the Bishop of the Missionary District may, if it seems wise in his judgment, emphasize a particular aspect of the approach to Catholic truth. With that we have no quarrel.' That is still our approach.

But we wonder, if the Bishop does not give permission to his clergy to make such unwarranted statements as quoted from Mr. Taliaferro's letter, why this layman had to write outside the missionary district for support of his position. What is there to fear in Protestant solidarity? True, we could not wish to attempt to achieve Protestant solidarity by raising the ugly head of intolerance. But we are keenly interested in Protestant solidarity and will continue to support all clergy and laity who are honestly working for it.

We are still more amused than alarmed.

Two Must Books.

In these stirring days, when the good news is running at full tide, for a seemingly early victory on the Western front, most of us are heart-searchingly anxious over the things that may happen in the post war world. Surely as Christians we are deeply concerned over the type of Peace Plans that will be effected when the armistice comes. As intelligent Churchmen we should read the best books that can be placed in our hands to form sensible opinions. Two books have just come off the press that should be read by every Churchman. They are "Time for Decision," by Sumner Welles, and "The Church and the War," by Karl Barth, with an introduction by Samuel McCrae Cavert of The Federal Council of Churches.

The first of these, "Time for Decision," is written by a man, who by training and experience is one of the best qualified men in this country to write on the International situation. We recommend particularly his chapters on the "German Menace Can Be Ended." and "World Organization." The former is a good antidote for the fanatical hate plans for Germany that are being suggested and will be suggested as the end draws near. The latter is a judicial and well reasoned plan for world cooperation. This is a "time for decision," and Christians should help make that decision, not in ephemeral idealistic patterns but in the pattern of realism backed by Christian principles.

The second book, "The Church and the War," is Karl Barth's answer to the question, "What have the Protestant churches of Europe learned and suffered and achieved in the world crises? What may be expected for them—and from them in the days to come?" If one wishes a clear, concise, and accurate answer to such questions we recommend this little book. Surely we feel our spiritual kinship with our Protestant brethren of Europe. Christianity is international. We reach hands across the sea to our Christian brethren in this war torn world. Christians have always learned through suffering. Karl Barth tells us that there are some things that our Christian brethren in war torn Europe have learned that may prove of real value to us in the days to come.

Read these two books and learn how to make your Christian voice in the shaping of public opinion more effective.

Church's Communicant Loss by Removals High

By RICHARD A. PARK

THE LOSS OF COMMUNICANTS by removal from one community to another is a perennial problem of the Church, which has been aggravated by the war with the accelerated migrations of people to defense industries and in relation to the armed forces. When the war is over the condition will continue to be serious, as people resume a more normal existence, returning to former homes or seeking new localities offering employment for new skills and interests.

This loss at times is alarmingly high. At all times it indicates a potential decrease in the effectual ministration of the Church to its members. Many communicants moving into new localities will naturally seek out the nearest parish and become active in it, but many others will immediately be lost to both the old parish and the new.

The Church has failed to "follow up" these losses by removal and make them gains instead. This failure is experienced by any clergyman who takes charge of a new field of work. In almost all cases, unless his predecessor is the exception, he will find on the communicant list a number of members no longer resident and concerning whom no information is available as to their present whereabouts. Eventually the names are removed from the parish list as "lapsed" or "moved," sometimes with serious implications as to the health of the parish and the diocese as indicated in the statistical reports.

Particular instances of this loss were illustrated recently in the Diocese of Texas. They are cited not as glaring examples of failure on the part of the clergy to keep track of their members, but as illustrations of what is happening in many parts of the Church.

The first instance concerned the interest of Bishop Quin in the problem. Like many bishops, he was puzzled by the fact that the diocese had not grown as rapidly as the number of confirmations would seem to indicate. Three representative parishes were asked to report to him the present activity and location of all of the members of recent confirmation classes. The reports showed that within the space of three years a large proportion of the confirmands had already been lost as to their present place of residence. Relatively few of those who had moved from the parishes had been transferred to other parishes.

THE SECOND INSTANCE occurred in connection with the revision of the diocesan mailing list for The Texas Churchman. Newly revised lists of members and addresses were obtained from all of the churches in the diocese, and on the basis of these lists a complete revision of the magazine's mailing list was made. The first mailing of the magazine which used the new list resulted in many corrections being returned to the editor by the Post Office Department. In the case of one large parish, the addresses of more than five per cent of the membership were either unknown or incorrect. In the case of smaller parishes and missions, such addresses in most instances had been culled prior to sending the original list.

The practice and canons of the Church place the responsibility for maintaining contact with the Church upon the individual members. It is upon their requests that letters of transfer are sought from one parish to another. The members are often ignorant of this responsibility. Too often they regard such letters as comparable to "joining the church" of our Protestant brethren, and take the attitude, "Once an Episcopalian, always an Episcopalian, no matter where I go." This is a commendable attitude, but it does not state the full responsibility of the member regarding canonical membership. The clergy, too, are often guilty of failing to abide by the canons. Letters of transfer are disregarded by them. In one parish of fair size to my knowledge only two transfers were recorded in eighteen years! How the three rectors who preceded me there were able to arrive at their annual reports is still a mystery to me.

Episcopalians do lose contact with the Church. The greatest loss occurs when they move into a new community as strangers. The presence of an Episcopal church in the community may be unknown to them. Lukewarm before to the Church, they make no effort to seek out the church, waiting for the clergy to seek them out instead. The more energetic but provincial newcomers do find the church in their new community but never identify themselves. The new church is "too small," "too large," "too high," or "too low" in comparison to their former parishes.

The clergy do lose contact with their members. A family moves from the community and the rector does nothing about notifying the clergy in the community to which the family has moved. Possibly he takes the attitude that the family will soon identify themselves to the rector of their new parish, and he will eventually receive a request for a letter of transfer. Sometimes members move without the rector knowing of it or of the new address. One day he makes a parish call to learn why the family is not attending church and discovers that they no longer live there. Drop them from the roll.

THE DIOCESE OF TEXAS is seeking to utilize another agency in maintaining contact with communicants who move. The Texas Churchman, the diocesan bulletin, is notified each month of all corrections in its mailing list. Experience shows that approximately one per cent of the communicants change their addresses each month. Most of these move their residence within the parish, but a considerable number move from one community to another and represent potential losses to the Church.

To alleviate this condition, notices are sent to the clergy nearest the member's new home, asking that the member be called upon and interested in his new parish. The information is not limited to moves within the diocese. Notices have been sent to many parts of the United States since the system was inaugurated two months ago. Several hundred communicants have thus been kept in contact with the Church, and replies have been received in several instances, indicating that the notice was the first information received as to the presence of the new member in the parish.

The department of promotion is in charge of this undertaking, with the hearty approval of the Bishop and the clergy of the diocese. The system is commended to other dioceses which have diocesan bulletins with second class mailing permits. Corrections of the mailing lists of such bulletins provide the necessary information. The expense is negligible, while the result is often continued activity and interest on the part of many members who otherwise might be lost to the Church.

IT DOES NOT ELIMINATE the responsibility of the member to seek out his new church home, nor of the clergy to inform their colleagues of new members in their parishes. It does provide an efficient and supplementary source of information as to such members as newcomers in need of pastoral care.

It does not take the place of letters of transfer. The canonical use of these must depend upon the education of both clergy and people. It is an attempt at offsetting the loss of communicants represented on canonical communicant lists by such notes as "Moved," "Address unknown," and similar entries.

THE PLACE OF RELIGION IN THE POST-WAR PRESS

taut. Intrusion into privacy must remain under control. One of the worst features of journalism before the war was the periodic witch-hunt. Akin to this is the baiting of the man who may have said something indiscreet. He is pilloried, and every time he pops up afresh out come all the old reference cuttings. One public man confessed to me that the Press had driven him to the brink of suicide.

Next, biased and distorted reporting should be judged as infringing the canons of honesty.

Something which it is worth while considering is the unpredictable way in which what is written influences public opinion. Experience has created a definite impression on my mind that readers follow what newspapers say about men and movements on which hasty, ill-considered and often prejudiced judgment is passed and the gallery played up to. It is curious that matters of goodness should be met in some sections of the Press with derision and depreciation and that not a fraction of the time and trouble is levied upon appraising them justly that is spent in verifying the facts of a story with but a passing interest.

Two things I know are coming. One is a Press campaign conducted on an extensive scale by organized religion. In this the Churches must show that they have something to publicize, and journalists that they are capable of recognizing and evaluating it impartially and correctly.

Science and Religion

Secondly, science will be seeking the cooperation of the Press in making the public science-conscious. Editors will need a ripe knowledge and wisdom to hold the balances evenly between the claims of science and religion, each of which is, like journalism, seeking after truth. The Archbishop of Canterbury, at the end of last year, expertly dissected their respective positions, showing that science, though master of its own sphere, has limitations against the wider horizon of things outside its realm.

Then I think it would be wise if the Archbishops could arrange guidance conferences and ask the Bishops to exchange views on matters of moment with journalists in the provinces. Contact between editors and the local clergy and ministers might also be made more effective, more sincere and mutually profitable. An exchange of viewpoints, a healthy, even vigorous, argument would enable each to see in a clearer light the problems and opinions of the other, and perhaps produce a novel suggestion or two. Local crusades to bring religion to the masses could be enormously encouraged by the allocation of space, particularly in the weeklies.

Positive Health

The Press cannot live on its traditions any more than the nation can. Newspapers as a part of public service can lead the quest for the highest truth and subtly redirect the thinking of millions into fresh and fruitful channels. They can show that while the soul of a nation, as of the individual, is full of unrest there can be no positive health. And positive health is something which we are going to hear a good deal about, not only from the Minister of Reconstruction, but also from the modern school of psychologists and doctors who are recognizing that a people must have religion. It may not be palatable or easy, may demand stern self-discipline, but is just as necessary as national service in wartime for national preservation.

Journalism Can Stimulate Christianity

Newspapers can continue their function as a corrective force. They can analyze and expose the blatant evils of the age—not leave it entirely to Bishops—and the more plausible but false philosophies which in one form or another will always crop up. When we note how the German youth have been poisoned by Nazi doctrines, we can see how essential it is to prevent our boys and girls being infected. The answer is to give them the right spiritual equipment. Journalism can discuss the religious aspect of public affairs and the public aspect of religious affairs both at home and abroad. The major task to which Christians have to address themselves is to bring its domestic and foreign policy into accord with the standards of our Christian tradition. So says Dr. J. H. Oldham.

Journalism can show that religion is not a bolt-hole or side-show, but that Christianity is a fighting faith from which this nation has derived its most precious elements, and that it can once again be woven not only into the fabric of personal living, but into a whole philosophy of progress whereby the future can be ensured as well as the present saved. There is courageous work and plenty of fighting with the pen for an enlightened Press.

My conviction is that progress primarily rests with the Press, which, with its customary sanity and vision, can fashion fresh traditions of stewardship. Our country is still nominally a Christian nation. Its Press can, if it will, line up with others to help to make it actually so. It can let its light so shine as to remove the reproach that it makes little or no use of its potential for good, and it can convey to a war-weary world the message of hope that is so desperately needed.

MAKING OURSELVES OVER

want the imperial confidence of Christ. You want the bigness of soul of Christ; and His faith in Himself; and His love of people; and His daily taking God at His word.

Thus the self you have to live with will be a new creation. You will have changed yourself and everything in your world will change as a result. Freedom will be unloosed. Fears will slink away. Inner tortures will cease. Power will be unchained. You will be victor over life. And the self you have to live with will be a great friend—a friend in Christ!

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Hiking Padre Of Marines

Marine Chaplain Compared to Circuit Riders of Olden Times

Boston, Mass.—In a mimeographed bulletin which he calls "Chopchat," Marine Chaplain Maurice W. Venno, formerly rector of St. John's, Kingston, N. Y., refers to himself as "The Hiking Padre." Explaining the title, "Chopchat" says: "Recalling the Methodist circuit riders of old, a Marine Chaplain in a combat area becomes a hiking padre. For his congregation may be scattered for miles along a wide and rugged front. His circuit, however, leads not over country roads and bypaths, but through dense jungles and over wave-swept beaches.

"Religious services are held whenever and wherever possible, usually in smaller units, since they are so spread out. In intense fighting action his time is occupied giving aid and spiritual comfort to the wounded, and in identifying and burying the dead. There is little time or place for a formal service except in the field hospital wards, and individual confessions and Communions.

"When the lines become stabilized, then the itinerant padre goes the rounds on week days, and of course, more especially on Sundays. If a jeep is available, when there is enough gas to permit, he tries to go as far as possible by this means. The traveling is far rougher than John Wesley ever experienced on horseback. Proceeding over beaches, through streams and mud which threaten to stick even the remarkable jeep—and often does—he visits such units as can be reached.

"More often, he straps the essentials in a field pack on his back; wine and wafers, the minimum in altar cloths, a small cross and Communion vessels, a few small service books, a few Testaments or magazines or whatever is available. In addition to this he takes his poncho for one never knows what moment he may be caught in a terrific downpour. And finally he takes his inseparable mess gear. Like the traditional country minister he is always prepared to indulge in the gastronomical delights of beans, corned willie, and the dehydrated specialties . Before long he knows where they make the best apple turnovers, cakes and other pastries (when supplies permit).

"Thus he sets out on a typical Sunday, having had one service in his own headquarters just after breakfast. With pack and stick he looks like Moses—or Rip Van Winkle, as some of the men remark. He is not too lonely on his long hike for his way passes near the jungle hammocks and shelters of Marines all along the trails, where he stops and has a cheery word with the men, passing out the latest scuttlebutt, and receiving in return, the stories of incidents and exciting experiences on the front lines.

"Following a stream's steep banks he finds a suitable crossing place on the stones in the river's bed, then up the bank and through the jungle to a Battalion at rest in a large kunai patch. Here the men have put up a tent fly for a chapel, complete with wooden cross, altar and log seats.

After that service, the Chaplain hurries on, traversing a trail through the kunai grass towering far above his head, arriving at the Command Post of another Battalion where another fly has been set up, and another service is held.

"Comes the long hike back," the statement concludes, and the padre takes off in a new direction for services at other scattered points, having a baptism at one of them, eating supper at another, securing the password and trudging back to headquarters as dusk sets in.

"Without lights the padre climbs in under his mosquito net, carrying out the Marine variation, 'Sighted Sack—Sank in Same,' dog-tired but exhilarated with a sense of carrying on an important function for the man in the field."

Chaplain Robert C. Clingman, whose father is the Bishop of Kentucky, in a recent report to the Army and Navy Commission said:

"I'm with the men constantly, share the same danger and lack of comfort, so I suppose the main thing is just to let them see the Cross and know I'm right there. Gradually I'm getting to know these boys as well as I did the old units, but it takes time. In the month activities include:

"Four preaching services; three Celebrations of the Holy Communion; two Holy Communion services visited; five services with other chaplains; visited one Mass and one Jewish service; nine hospital visits; five welfare cases; twenty-five pastoral contacts; three community sings; one Chaplains' meeting. In the services listed 800 men attended, and in the personal ministry contact was made with 250 men.

"Did I tell you about the native scouts who speak no English but can sing 'Onward Christian Soldiers,' repeat the Lord's Prayer and Nicene Creed with ease in impeccable English? Some turned up at one of my jungle services and impressed the soldiers no end. They had the Book of Common Prayer, one copy at least, pretty well battered, but recognizable in their Polynesian tongue."

CHURCH IN CHINA MAKES CONTRIBUTION

New York, N. Y.—With all the hardships of Christian life in China, the Church there continues to think, not merely of itself, but of its missionary obligation and privilege.

Evidence of this attitude emerges in some financial statements received by the National Council from Arthur Allen. He states that St. Luke's, Kutsing, the Union School Chapel, Tsingchen, and Trinity Church, Changsha, contribute $1,160, Chinese National Currency, equivalent to $29.23, in United States money, to the Good Friday Offering. Thus these Christians of the East aid the Christian work in the Near East, centering in Jerusalem.

Church of the Air

Distinguished Churchmen from Many Parts of World Have Spoken on Episcopal Periods

New York, N. Y.—The Church of the Air, sponsored by the Columbia Broadcasting System, will enter its 14th year of continuous broadcasting Sunday, September 3. The Episcopal Church of the Air has been a feature of that program almost from the first. The Rev. Dr. G. Warfield Hobbs has personally conducted the Episcopal broadcasts for thirteen years, and up to his retirement this summer.

In the 14 years of Columbia's Church of the Air, the Episcopal Church has had 104 broadcasts, the 100th having been from Washington, D. C., by the Archbishop of York, the 104th from New York by the Rev. John D. Bodger, of New Guinea.

Distinguished Churchmen from many parts of the world have spoken on the Episcopal periods. Among them were the Archbishop of York, the present Archbishop of Canterbury when he was Archbishop of York, the Bishop of London, the Primate of Canada, the Bishop of Antigua, the Bishop of British Honduras, and a long list of distinguished Bishops of the Church in the United States, as well as other Church leaders, clerical and lay.

The National Council's Division in charge of radio has never failed to have early each November, a "Presiding Bishop's Day," which is now a recognized annual feature of the Columbia program. Presiding Bishop John Gardner Murray was the first Presiding Bishop to use this period, and he was followed successively by Presiding Bishops Charles Palmerston Anderson, James DeWolf Perry, and Henry St. George Tucker.

Columbia officials frequently express surprise at the amount of "fan mail" which follows these Episcopal Church broadcasts. The record was Presiding Bishop Tucker's first broadcast, which brought 17,627 letters and cards. The average is something over 700 letters and cards.

In preparing its programs under supervision of Elinor Inman, Broadcast Director of Religious Programs, the "Church of the Air" is advised by a Board of Consultants composed of prominent clergymen of 12 denominations. All faiths, whether represented on the Board or not, share "Church of the Air" periods in proportion to the numerical strength of each group in the country.

Programs for the remainder of the anniversary month follow:

September 10—10 A. M., Dr. Oscar A. Benson, President, Illinois Conference of Evangelical Lutheran Augustana Synod, residing at Chicago, Ill. From Chicago. 1 P. M., the Rev. John Birch, Executive Secretary, Catholic Youth Organization, Archdiocese of Los Angeles. From Los Angeles.

September 17, 10 A. M., Bishop Henry Wise Hobson, D. D., Episcopal Diocese of Southern Ohio. From Cincinnati. 1 P. M., Dr. Jonah B. Wise, Rabbi, Central Synagogue, N. Y.

September 24—10 A. M., the Rev. John O. Gross, D. D., head of National Methodist Commission on Church-Related Colleges, Nashville, Tenn. (Origination to be announced). 1 P. M., the Rev. Louis J. Gallagher, S. J., Director, Jesuit Seminary Guild, New England Province. From Boston.

NATIVES WANT BIBLES

Somewhere in the Marshall Islands (Delayed)—Sergeant William C. Harris, of Savannah, Ga., a Marine Corps Combat Correspondent, tells in a special dispatch that the natives of his particular section of the Marshalls now have new Bibles in their own language, thanks to Marines and Navy men who learned of their desire to obtain them.

"When we landed here," Sergeant Harris said, "we were surprised to see in many huts Bibles translated into Marshallese, also song books in the island tongue. The gracious natives gladly gave them to those who expressed a wish for them. Later it was learned that it is the custom to give almost anything a friend expresses a desire for.

"Lieutenant George P. LaBarre, Navy Chaplain assigned to this Marine outfit, and formerly at Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, Virginia, as a member of the Episcopal clergy staff there, announced that he would attempt to secure new Bibles in Marshallese for the natives and would accept contributions in any amount for that purpose.

"One Marine Corporal donated $105. A total of more than $250 was contributed, and Chaplain LaBarre ordered the Bibles from the American Bible Society in Boston. They have just arrived and are being distributed to the natives by the Chaplain."

WAR BRINGING GREATER RELIGIOUS TOLERANCE

"War is bringing greater religious tolerance between men of different faiths," Lieut. Robert A. Matzke, (ChC) USNR, of Porterville, Calif., said in San Diego today after returning to the United States from 20 months duty as the chaplain of a Navy seaplane tender in the Pacific.

"At sea Protestant and Catholic Bluejackets constantly swapped watches so that each might be able to attend the worship service of his respective faith," the Navy Chaplain added.

"Exchanges also were made with Jewish men to permit them to attend Passover services. This courtesy was reciprocated in full by the Hebrew sailors."

Pastor of a floating parish, the Navy chaplain conducted his services each week on the hangar deck of his tender. His congregation sat on mess benches and piled one bench on top of another to furnish the base for an altar. Men sometimes sat on crated airplane motors on one side of the hangar.

'Whenever we were in port, we who were Protestant called on a ship or island with a Catholic chaplain and arranged for him to come aboard to conduct services for men of that faith," Lieutenant Matzke said. "The Catholic chaplains did the same."

Lieutenant Matzke found that the men on his ship liked to sing a variety of old-time choruses prior to the sermon.

"The men usually would request the songs they had sung in their home churches," he said.

He arranged for the first trees to be brought aboard his ship when his tender anchored near a palm-covered island Palm Sunday. Small trees and large palm leaves on each side of the ltar provided a home-church atmosphere to the crowded hangar-church.

Chaplain Matzke served at the U. S. Naval Air Station and the Naval Repair Base, San Diego, before going to sea aboard the tender.

During his tour of duty aboard ship he preached to Army and Marine groups as well as to Navy personnel while visiting islands in the South and Central Pacific. He now is awaiting new orders.

The Navy chaplain is an alumnus of the University of Southern California and Yale Divinity School. He was ordained in the Disciples of Christ Church and commissioned in the service in May, 1942. His parents are Mr. and Mrs. Herman Matzke, of Porterville, Calif.

CHURCHES SERVE MUNICIPAL HOSPITAL

At the invitation of Mr. J. W. Trevillian, Rehabilitation and Recreational Officer, of the Richmond Municipal Hospital, the Interdenominational Religious Work Foundation has undertaken to sponsor and direct the religious services for the patients being treated for venereal disease in that public health project. Two devotional services are held each Sunday by volunteer ministers. The Foundation arranges for the speakers, supplies a portable organ, hymnals, Bibles and devotional materials. The Rev. Henry Lee Robison, Jr., Director of Religious Work in State Institutions, and Dr. Millard C. Hanson, Richmond Director of Public Health, released these interesting facts concerning the first ten months of operation of the Municipal Hospital: more than half of the 786 persons treated entered the hospital voluntarily, the racial ratio is three white to four colored, the sexual ratio is one male to three females, and the disease ratio is four cases of gonorrhea to three cases of syphilis.

The modern treatment and new drugs have reduced the residence period to two weeks or less; thus the group reached by these religious services is constantly changing. Some patients are present at two services and some at only one but who can tell how important and far-reaching that contact may be? The churches of Virginia may well be proud of their organization and of its effort to bring the Gospel to all inmates and patients of our state institutions.

DEAN BODGER ON SPEAKING TOUR

New York, N. Y.—The Rev. John D. Bodger of Dogura, New Guinea, has returned to the United States from England, en route back to New Guinea. Before he sails from the West Coast, Dean Bodger is carrying out a five-weeks' speaking tour, including Wilkes-Barre, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis, St. Louis, Denver and Pueblo, Col., Salt Lake, and brief itineraries in the dioceses of California and Los Angeles.

During his three months in England, Dean Bodger, with what he describes as "American speed," preached twenty-eight times and gave seventy addresses or lectures. He was able to speak in support of some of the English missionary societies which have aided his field, such as the SPG, SPC K and Bible Society, to address a combined meeting of all the Church of England's major mission societies, and to speak at a special meeting of the International Missionary Council, at which the Archbishop of York presided. He spoke also to schools at Canterbury, Eton and Rugby, broadcast for the BBC, and addressed the Royal Institute of International Affairs. The British Ministry of Information used him in an intensive tour of airfields, camps, hospitals, RAF stations, rotary clubs, and factory lunch-hour meetings; to all of whom he pressed home the story that Christian missions plus good government were responsible for the loyalty of the Papuans.

He spoke to many groups of American soldiers, who, he reports, "appreciate England but are the most homesick nation on earth." He was asked a number of times to talk on the United States, about which he probably knows more than many Americans as his previous American tour, with a total of more than 200 addresses, conferences, etc., took him into many states. Traveling constantly by car in England, he gave lifts to many American men, had them for tea, and cheered them with first-hand news from home.

Looking forward to his return to New Guinea, he emphasizes the fact that in addition to obviously necessary reconstruction, which has already begun, work must be extended into areas not yet entered by the Church. The Bishop of New Guinea, Walter Baddeley, whom Dean Bodger saw in London, is asking him to make plans for this on his arrival. The lives of many thousands of native people who are not yet Christian have been radically altered by the war. The military invasion among them, Dean Bodger says, must be succeeded by a Christian invasion.

B. B. COMER LILE ACCEPTS CALL TO CHRIST CHURCH, ALEXANDRIA

The Rt. Rev. Beverley D. Tucker, Bishop of Ohio, announces with great regret the resignation of the Ven. B. B. Comer Lile as Archdeacon of the Diocese, effective October 15, 1944. Archdeacon Lile has accepted a call to become Rector of historic Christ Church, Alexandria, Virginia. He came to Ohio at Bishop Tucker's request on January 1, 1939, and during a period of nearly six years has performed valuable service in assisting the Bishop in the administration of the missions and aided parishes. He has also been Executive Secretary of the Field Department, Examining Chaplain, and, for part of the time, Secretary of the Diocese. Archdeacon Lile has played an important part in the Cleveland Church Federation, serving as Chairman of the Commission on Social Action. He has won a warm place in the affection and admiration of the clergy and laity alike and his going will be a great loss to the Diocese. He came to Ohio from the Church of the Ascension, Richmond, after graduating from the University of Virginia and the Virginia Theological Seminary. He returns to the Diocese of Virginia as Rector of Christ Church Alexandria, a parish which not only has a distinguished past but a bright opportunity in the present and the future under the ministry of Archdeacon Lile.

INTERESTING SIDELIGHTS FROM ARMY CHAPLAIN

Boston, Mass.—Chaplain at a great military training center, the Rev. Raymond E. Brook, formerly of St. Stephen's Church, Tottenville, Staten Island, tells the Army and Navy Commission of some of his self-appointed duties which are in addition to the usual duties of a Chaplain.

"Before the Red Cross was fully organized to handle the hand crafts to occupy the time of long-term patients in the hospital, I used my Discretionary Fund (supplied by the Army and Navy Commission) for small things to make by hand, such as airplanes, tanks, guns and the like. I got cards and games to give the men to play at their beds and showed them how to play solitaire, etc. I gave out reading matter by the hundreds, and I wrote letters for the illiterate, the injured, and the sick, and those who did not know how to write official letters in cases where official mail was necessary. I secured assignments and re-assignments, pay, parsonal belongings, etc., for the men.

"Our first chapel was an empty ward and as we were told it was only temporary I did very little to fix it up. We did have an altar made from an old packing case on a platform, and painted. The carpenter made me some candle sticks of wood which lasted until we got our regular equipmnt and a wooden cross. Then we moved into the Red Cross building, and I had an office.

"Recently I met a man who could not make out an allotment to his wife because she was only a common law wife and his home State did not recognize the common law relationship. The couple had been living faithfully together for about six years as man and wife, but they had never been formally married. However, as their home State does not recognize common-law marriages, it was necessary for the couple to get legally married according to the law of that State, so the wife could get the benefit of the allotment for herself and her five-year-old child. The Red Cross and I worked out the problem. They furnished the money for the wife to come on and found her a place to stay while she was near camp. An officer, an Episcopalian, when he heard about it because he was doing some work for the Red Cross, offered to buy a wedding ring. He also got some flowers and gave them to the groom to give the bride as though he had thought of it himself. I took them to the marriage license bureau and also helped select the ring and arranged to have the flowers given to the groom in such a way that he would not know where they came from either. The same officer acted in place of the girl's father and gave the bride away. The witnesses were members of the Red Cross staff and a few of the groom's friends, none of whom knew about the ring, the child, or any of the other details. It was just as though this were the real thing from the beginning. I have never taken part in anything more touching. Both man and wife were exceedingly happy over the whole affair, as well they might be. It was good for all of us."

RED CROSS BOXES FURNISH CHAPEL FOR WAR PRISONERS

Washington, D. C.—With wood from boxes in which American Red Cross supplies were sent to Stalag Luft III B, a prisoner of war camp in Germany, captured American airmen have transformed one of their huts into an interdenominational chapel, according to information received by the Prisoners of War Bulletin, published by American Red Cross National Headquarters. The place of worship holds 350 men and is used by Protestant and Catholic prisoners for their weekly devotions.

Great ingenuity and skill went into the various fittings and decorations of the little church. Whittling and carving the pieces of wood from the Red Cross crates served the double purpose of keeping many of the men occupied and making the chapel interior more than just a drab hut. Some of the prisoners carved and built the altar. One man with exquisite artistry sculptured a crucifix. Other prisoners, more or less experienced as carpenters, built the pulpit and arranged the trellis-worked altar-rail.

Each man brought as a tribute his special skill. The untalented helped mix the cement and chip the pieces of stone and glass which an artist fashioned into a beautiful mosaic. This 500-pound work of art portraying Christ walking on the waters is now one of the show pieces of the camp. It is placed over the chapel entrance.

Within the chapel itself are other religious pictorial representations. Flanking the crucifix, for instance, are two oil paintings; one of Christ in Gethsemane, the other of the Virgin Mary. Hanging on other walls are two paintings also done by prisoners in their free time. These show Christ and the Fishermen and Christ healing the sick.

To the delegate of the International Y. M. C. A., instrumental in providing oil colors, paintbrushes, and tools for the interned men, Sergeant Robert Berger, who is one of the two Protestant lay preachers in the camp, fervently said:

LETTERS TO ARMY AND NAVY CHAPLAINS

Boston, Mass.—Do service men and their families appreciate the work of chaplains? The files of the Army and Navy Commission contain hundreds of letters indicating the esteem in which the chaplains are held. From the many these few examples, names, of course, wtihheld:

"Visited my son, S. D. R., Jr., in the camp hospital yesterday and he told me how kind you have been and showed me the literature (Jewish) you had left him. I appreciate very much the interest you have taken in my son and want to assure you that the non-sectarian activities in camps when conducted in the manner you performed your services should be of lasting benefit for a period extending long after this war is concluded."

"Chaplain, I want to try to express myself on this point. I'm a Catholic, of course, and I shall never forget how swell you were to me. During those first few months as an Army Chaplain, I was in a fog. You taught me the answers and they were all right! My sincere gratitude for all your kindness and help. I'll be forever grateful to you and will always remember you as one true and loyal friend."

"Having been a patient in the hospital for a number of months, there hasn't been anything I have enjoyed as much as the sermons and services you have brought us. They have been, shall I say, a great deal more than inspiration to me as well as to the rest of us; they have been a source of courage, faith, and strength that have enabled me to come through thus far successfully."

FROM AN AIR CORPS REST HOME

Dear "Pop":

I have just returned from a rest home for flyers. I enjoyed myself quite a bit at the rest home. It was nice there, and this rest home was really a good deal. I had a swell time for the few days I was there. The Air Corps has a very good idea in these rest homes. They have an atmosphere as close to home as can possibly be without being there. We had golfing, riding, swimming, boating, and all sorts of sports—not to mention little things like fruit juices in bed, etc. We even had a butler.

I am very glad that my letters are coming to you regularly now, and that you do not have to worry about that. I have been pretty busy lately, but I still always find time to write home.

Lots of love, ——.

OUR CHAPLAINS NEED HELP

Do You Want This Work to Stop?

Honolulu.—The Chaplain is working for you. He is doing your job for your boys who have gone from your Church and your home to serve on every front—and every sea—in every sky. He needs your help NOW!

The need each day is for $1,000.00 to provide for our Chaplains and the essential work of the Army and Navy Commission. To meet this need the Commission made its appeal for $400,000.00 to cover its budget for 1944 and for the first three months of 1945.

The response up to May 24th was only $190,000.00, leaving a balance of $250,000.00 to reach our goal. There is grave danger that our program will have to be curtailed unless every Church, whether or not an offering has already been taken, will face the urgency of the present situation and make every possible effor to get a worthy contribution from every member.

We must not let our Chaplains down. They have been doing grand work—many of them with heroic sacrifice—in mud, torrid heat, bitter cold, jungle, desert, storm-pitched ship, landing barge, speeding plane, dreary camp, shell hole, and slit trench. They merit our continued full support, but cannot receive it unless the Church supports the Commission's program.

Your contributions provide: Chaplains with portable altars, essential equipment and discretionary funds; already half a million Prayer Books for Soldiers and Sailors; hundreds of thousands of War Crosses; thousands of dollars worth of literture each month; pension premiums for Chaplains; and grants to Parishes in seventy Dioceses needing assistance in programs for men and women in the armed forces.

A comparison shows that our budget is reasonable: WORLD WAR I—for two years $800,000.00. WORLD WAR II—three and one-half years, more than twice as many Chaplains—still under $800,000.00.

August 6th was the Sunday that was designated in this District as Army and Navy Commission Sunday, but in some parishes and missions it may be necessary to take another Sunday.

The Bishop's Office, Queen Emma Square, Honolulu 43, will be glad to receive any contributions that for any reason cannot be given through the parishes or missions.

Personal Notes Of Interest

Mr. K. Jefferies Adorkor, Jr., traveling auditor for the Liberian Government and one of the Liberian delegation to the recent Bretton Woods, N. H., monetary conference, is a lay reader at Trinity Church, Monrovia. In New York on his way back from the conference he stopped at National Council headquarters with news of the Liberia mission staff. He meets most of them in the course of his official travels sees the missions in operation, and does considerable volunteer work for them. Trinity Church, Monrovia, with some 800 members, is now self-supporting. The Rev. W. Davies-Jones is rector.

Mr. Adorkor reports that new developments in travel are having a marked effect in opening up the country. Air travel is bringing many new contacts, and increased shipping will follow. Work has already begun on improving the harbor at Monrovia.

Mr. Hobson is president of the Missionary Society at the Seminary this year. He is a son of the Rev. Jennings W. Hobson of Bluefield, W. Va., who is a cousin of Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio.

Logan Roots, M. D., who has been serving as doctor at Central China College, left China with his family to return to the United States, arriving in India June 6. Word came early in August that they were delayed indefinitely in Bombay—probably due to difficulty in getting passage.

Mrs. John Coe writes that friendly contacts with various United States army units or individuals have done much to lighten the extreme isolation of Central China College, at Hsichow, near the Burma border. She and her husband are now almost the only foreigners on the college staff. Mrs. Coe writes that on a recent Sunday two American army men, a private and a major, had come to call, went to church, and stayed to lunch. The private, a coal miner in normal life, said he had not sat down at a family table in the past two years. The major was an ex-missionary and "very much in his elements."

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Dr. Paley, noted scholar, said: "There is a principle which bars all information, is proof against all argument and cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance. This principle is contempt prior to examination."

Phillips Brooks was eminently correct when he said of Christ: "His power is greater than all the armies that ever marched, all the navies that were ever built, all the parliaments that ever sat, and all the kings that ever reigned."

'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past hours,
And ask them what report they bore to heaven;
And how they might have borne more welcome news.
—Young.

Law always implies a distinction between that which is and that which ought to be. Of the believer, however, what Luther says is true: "An apple tree needs no law that it shall bear apples rather than thorns; the sun needs none that he shall shine and run his course; the water none that it shall flow, and fire none that it shall burn."

Never worry about dying. Go on living and let the end come when God decrees it. Fill life full of joy, purpose, good works and usefulness and let the end come when it may.
—Baptist Standard.

Knowledge and timber shouldn't be much used till they are seasoned.
—O. W. Holmes.

Cleanse the Temple from prudent care
That doubts the God who answers prayer;
Tear from thy heart the secret sin,
So shalt thou pray, "Thy reign begin!"
—Zion's Herald.

Dr. Albert Schweitzer, missionary in Africa, in one of his books tells of an old man who used to come to his father's church. He was deaf as a post, and yet he came to church every Sunday. Someone asked him one day why he came to the services if he could not hear a word. His reply was, "The communion of the saints."

A Generation Asks Forgiveness

I beg forgiveness, son of mine,
That you should find a world like this,
As one of those who lived for self,
Who sought for pleasure and for pelf,
Who confidently talked for right
While secretly admiring might,
Who smugly bragged of rugged days
Yet turned to drifting, easy ways.
If this mad world will let you live,
Oh, please forgive, my boy, forgive.

LETTERS

July 18, 1944.

The following two letters have just been received from the Rev. Robert E. Wood. The one dated April 10 was probably from Suez and the one dated St. Marks Day, April 25, from Aden. I received a message from Mr. Wood through the wife of an Army flier in India more than two months ago saying that he had arrived safely and that he had written me from Suez and Aden. In this message he mentioned that he had had one active submarine attack and plane attack en route. The second letter has been slightly mutilated, but there is a notice with the letter that the United States censors are not responsible for the mutilation.

J. Earl Fowler.

April 18, 1944.

Mr. Earl Fowler
Church Missions House
281 Fourth Avenue
New York, N. Y.

My dear Earl:

How can I ever thank you and Dr. Addison and all the staff at "281" for the way you arranged all my affairs and all the details of this wonderful journey for me! And here I am thus far! And everyone who has been praying for a safe journey for me has abundant reason now for thanking the good Lord for the wonderful way in which that prayer has been answered. How I wish I could go into detail, but that part will have to wait until later. I am not traveling on a passenger liner. In fact my Presbyterian missionary cabin-mate and I are the only "passengers". But such wonderful kindness and consideration, as we have received from the captain and all on board it would be hard to beat. The captain is much concerned for our welfare and after any eventuality comes around to inquire how we are getting on. For example, one day at 1:15 a. m. he came to say he had a "jovial crew" and with characteristic British hospitality hot tea was served. I often found it difficult during my 19 months in the U. S .A. to realize that there was a war on, but I am never allowed to forget it these days. And it is doing me a world of good to be associated with these splendid brave men who are constantly exposed to danger but never show signs of fear.

On that same early morning I found the offices of Lauds and Prime in that precious Office Book which Father Eckman, S. S. J. E., gave me as a parting gift, most expressive of my thankfulness to God, and still more appropriate, was the subject for that day in my book of meditation. "Jesus drew Himself near and went with them".

I was unable to celebrate the Holy Eucharist on Palm Sunday (except the Ante-Communion) as the sea was so rough. I was afraid to risk upsetting the chalice. On another Sunday I had the great joy of giving his first communion to a fine young man who had been confirmed in England just before starting, but had had no opportunity for communion. I am so thankful to have the beautiful memorial chalice and paten belonging to Bishop Y. Y. Tsu.

Everybody is most encouraging and cheerful. Our mealtimes are quite delightful. Our principal recreation is watching a most bewitching cat and dog at play. Several of us, including our captain himself, crowded into the chief steward's cabin to watch them, and such antics you never saw in your whole life!

Please send this on to my friends with the request that they keep on the good work of praying for a safe passage for the rest of the way, and please don't forget to add plenty of thanksgiving to God for His Goodness.

And once more with a thousand thanks to you and all my friends.

Faithfully yours,
(Signed) Robert E. Wood.

St. Mark's Day, April 25, 1944

I hope my letter No. 1 (censored) is well on its way by this time. I also hope that the "eventualities" referred to may now be mentioned a little more in detail, seeing that they are long since passed. But in case the censor should think otherwise, and delete any part of this letter I am sure he would not (censored). Besides these two kinds, there was the constant possibility of fresh attacks, so that for many nights we slept fully dressed, sometimes with life belts on, and one night the captain thought the safest place for his two passengers was in camp chairs in the wheel house. I had Bishop Y. Y. Tsu's precious chalice and paten and a few other things packed up, hoping I could rescue them, in case we had to take to the lifeboats. I must confess that while I was in the U. S. A. I often found it difficult to realize what actual warfare is like (although I had had some experience of it at Wuchang, China!) but to see men (in another ship) meet a most terrible death when a torpedo from a submarine struck their ship and blew it up is something I shall never forget. Furthermore it was a narrow escape for us. And on another occasion, during an aircraft attack, when bombs were falling all about it, and our own gunners were busy meeting the attack, we realized what a wonderful deliverance was ours. That is why, in my last letter I asked all the good friends who had been praying for a safe journey for me, to add many thanksgivings to the good Lord.

I mentioned before what splendid officers and crew there are on this British ship. It is such a joy and privilege to me to conduct Church of England services and to pray for "our most gracious Sovereign Lord King George". On one Sunday morning two fine young communicants, who had been on night duty and had had only two hours of well-earned rest, yet got up and came to make their communions. Just as I was about to begin that service a warning was given "aircraft attack imminent", but my kind, thoughtful English friends did not tell me, and I went on, in blissful ignorance with nothing to disturb the blessedness of our Lord's visit to us. The only thing I noticed was that my friends had placed my lifebelt along side of me. (I must confess it would have been a bit awkward to put on over vestments!) But as a matter of fact the "aircraft attack" did not materialize on that occasion! So you can imagine what thanksgivings went up after Communion on that Sunday morning! Please keep on praying and thanking God.

Yours incerely,
(signed) Robert E. Wood.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

ALL THE LEAVES on the trees are green. This is because each wriggling one is tipped by a sunbeam. No matter how deep it is within the densest part the sun filters through and touches it with light. The smallest, lowliest leaf is fed, is given light so long as it catches the wind and keeps turning toward the sun, exposing itself to all the sun it can get. How perfectly God has made the trees. Not a single leaf is neglected. Each one has a chance for life, no matter whether it is on the topmost twig literally bathed in sunshine or on the lowestmost limb twirling in the cool shadowy parts where its portion of light must be struggled for and must literally fight its way through. But there is always sufficient seepage to bring the ingredients of greenness to the remotest spot on every tree.

Thinking along in this manner should remind us of many similarities between man and leaves, both made by the same God, both living together side by side. Man has often pondered the loveliness of trees and other parts of God's creation and marvelled over their ways. Even novelists have used trees to symbolize their message. A Tree Grows in Brooklyn is a fine example of the life of a tree, which never stops reaching out to absorb the light and uses it to grow with in spite of climate, soil or lack of breathing space.

THE BIBLICAL WRITERS knew of this wonder, the tree, and its leaves spinning in the light and said, "his leaf shall not wither," "her leaf shall be green." Of course, there are other factors in the life of the tree we must not forget, for without the roots doing a good supply job from their busy centers underground, the sun would beat upon dead leaves and lifeless limbs. Look up the words "tree" and "trees" in your concordance and note the many references to them scattered literally from Genesis to Revelation. We can easily tell the condition of a tree in its season by the greenness of its leaves and the abundance of its fruit whether that fruit be beauty or shade, nuts or sweet heaviness of peach or pear.

Analogies between the tree and me begin to pop up all over the place and come to make my day's beginning more full of faith and hope. If God so clothes the trees with beauty and abundance, and keeps them in the light of His presence, so will God not neglect me nor withhold from me the rays of light that reach into my innermost darkness and need. But, like the leaf, I must do my share of twisting and turning to get all the light that comes my way and use it to make greenness in my soul. The chemical process that turns sunlight into chlorophyl is not understood by the tree but it continues to work. The transmutation of glimpses of God in Christ and fleeting perceptions of His presence into an abiding strength and power of spirit is not understood by man, but continues to happen.

Prayer is that turning toward the light for us and the trees. When the leaf begins to fade and wither, it has ceased to do its God-given job of reaching for God's light and life. And so man.

COLLECT FOR FIFTEENTH SUNDAY AFTER TRINITY

Keep, we beseech Thee, O Lord, Thy Church with Thy perpetual mercy; and, because the frailty of man without Thee cannot but fail, keep us ever by Thy help from all things hurtful, and lead us to all things profitable to our salvation; through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY. By Leonard Hodgson. Scribners. $2.50.

What is probably the most difficult topic in Christian theology is dealt with in this book in terms of reason, modern concepts, and reliance on the Scriptures. It is a clear and persuasive presentation of the orthodox view, enhanced by two modern insights: the appeal to experience as a basis for belief (as that experience is mediated through the Bible and Church history) and the idea of organic unity. Understanding the Trinity has been made difficult by an insistance upon mathematical three-in-oneness, whereas Canon Hodgson insists on an internally constitutive unity. He rejects the idea that the Son is subordinate to the Father, he admits that here is an ultimate mystery but that it is not irrational, and he insists on the full personaliy ("he-ness") of the Holy Spirit. The argument is fully documented, the Latin quotations are translated in footnotes, and there are eight appendices of additional information. If more theology were written in this brilliant and informative fashion, more preachers would be able to relate theology to life, as Professor Hodgson does in the seventh lecture.

What Are We Fighting For?

By GARDINER M. DAY

WE CANNOT ENJOY the privilege of being here today in this beautiful and sacred place without being keenly aware that we are only able to hold this service in peace and safety by virtue of the fact that thousands of our fellow countrymen are giving their lives in battle to preserve democracy against the forces of tyranny in many parts of the world. Newspaper correspondents and chaplains frequently assert, nevertheless, that the majority of men in our armed forces do not know what they are fighting for. Many of them believe that it is a world mess created by power politics. Their interest is chiefly to get through with it as soon as possible and return home. In my own experience in Cambridge I have found wives of both officers and enlisted men holding similar views. One wife said to me that she didn't see why her husband should be fighting in a war in which he has no interest.

While it is fortunate that there are many men and many wives who are cognizant of the significance of the present war, nevertheless, because of the prevalence and the lack of understanding of what we are fighting for, I believe that the most helpful thing that I can do today is to attempt to give an interpretation of the significance of the war and the goals for which, I believe, we are fighting.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE WAR

This war differs from all former great wars in that it is not simply a struggle for power between several nations within the framework of an ordered society in which we believe. For example, the Civil War was fought over the question of the preservation of the Union and the freedom of the slaves. Had the South won the war Negro slavery would not have been abolished, but the general economic and social framework of society would not have been drastically changed. World War I was a struggle for power between Germany and the countries with which she was allied and Great Britain and her allies. Had Germany won, Great Britain and her allies would have undoubtedly suffered great material losses through the treaty of peace, but the economic and social order under the Kaiser who had been the symbol of power, would not have differed markedly from that which followed the victory of the Allies. The present war represents, however, a struggle between nations representing two totally and diametrically opposed philosophies of life. If the Axis powers win this war (fortunately they won't) it would mean a severe defeat for the most cherished ideals of modern civilization—our democratic ideals and our Christian ideals. To find a comparable crisis one has to turn back the pages of history to the eighth century when the Mohammedan Moors, invading Spain from North Africa, strove to bring all of Europe under the Mohammedan yoke. If Charles Martel had failed of victory in the battle of Tours, A. D. 732, and the Mohammedanism host had won, it would have changed the entire character of European civilization. Instead of Christianity, Mohammedanism would have dominated the life of Europe.

The War today is a struggle between dictatorship and democracy. I believe that everyone knows what those two words stand for even though our own definitions might differ considerably. Dictatorship means government by "That Man" or "That Gang" who by ruthless violence are able to gain control of their fellow men and compel them to do their bidding. Democracy means that form of human cooperation by which people by their own rules restrain and expend themselves for the common good.

It is no accident that Hitler has tried consistently to crush the Church. He knows that the soil in which democracy thrives is religion. He knows that democracy—and our country is perhaps the best example of it—has been nurtured and inspired by Protestant Christianity. He knows that if he can wipe out the Church and religion he will knock the foundation out from under the essential pillars of democracy.

THE PILLARS OF DEMOCRACY

The pillars of democracy rest on four Christian convictions.

I
Man is a Child of God

This pillar of democracy finds its classic expression in the Declaration of Independence in which our forefathers declared: "That all men are created equal and that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights." They asserted that man was related to God, for he was created by God. Therefore, because of his relation to God he possesses intrinsic worth. He is, to use the Christian term, a child of God. And because he is a child of God, he possesses certain inalienable rights. Therefore, if belief in God is destroyed of what value is man? If he is no longer related to God and does not possess a spirit akin to the Divine, but is simply human flesh, he is only of value in reference to the society or the state in which he lives. If the state or Hitler needs him for cannon fodder or other purposes, then he has value; but if the state does not want him, he is of no value and his life may be snuffed out as the Nazis have snuffed out the lives of thousands upon thousands of Jews and others whom they did not want to exist. When belief in God is destroyed, the first pillar of democracy is knocked down; namely, that man is a child of God.

Furthermore, if belief in God disappears someone, be he called Caesar or Hitler, will arise and make himself God. He will say: "If there be no God then I will be God. I will make other men to do my bidding. I will determine whether they live or die." When belief in God disappears the incarnation of selfishness and power becomes God and man is no longer a child of God endowed by his Creator with inalienable rights but simply a pawn in the hands of a human dictator.

II
Eternal Truth

The second pillar of democracy is the Christians' conviction that there is eternal truth. A Christian believes that no matter how many lies a Goebbels or a Hitler may invent and no matter how often they are repeated they cannot make propaganda equal truth. The Christian believes that there is a truth that is the same yesterday, today, and forever. He believes that one of the most precious possessions that man has been given by God is the freedom to discover truth. He further has the unshakable conviction that ultimately truth will triumph. He knows that even though the dictator tries with almost superhuman determination to suppress truth, the day will evitably dawn when the suppressor of truth will be overthrown. Then the falsity of propaganda will be revealed immediately and truth will reign supreme. In a word, the Christian knows that it matters not how hard man tries to suppress truth; ultimately truth will triumph.

III

Human Brotherhood

The third pillar of democracy is the belief in the possibility of human brotherhood being established by the Grace of God throughout the world. We believe that a society based on righteousness and justice rather than violence and selfishness is possible. There have always been those who declare that this Christian conviction is simply a sentimental ideal. They assert that men differ far too much in race, nationality, and character ever to be formed into one human brotherhood. In recent years, however, modern science has brought to us knowledge which saves us from believing in the existence of a pure race or in the existence of special characteristics common to any large group of human beings which make them permanently superior to their fellow human beings.

Some years before the present war had made blood banks so common an American Roman Catholic patient of German extraction was brought into a Methodist Episcopal hospital in a western city desperately ill. A blood transfusion was needed. Among the relatives of the patient none was found with blood of the necessary type. A young American doctor in the hospital of Rumanian Jewish extraction said that he would be glad to give his blood if it could be used. His blood proved to be the type needed and consequently the life of a Roman Catholic patient in a Protestant hospital was preserved by the transfusion of the blood of a Rumanian Jew. Thus science is mighty chastening with its truth and instead of revealing any blood superiority, it puts the seal forever on the Biblical affirmation that "God has made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell upon the face of the whole earth." Even at this moment blood donations are being given all over the world to the fighting men of many nations. The life of an American soldier may be saved by Chinese blood, while the life of a Chinese soldier may be saved by American blood. This only makes us realize that, despite the worst things that can be said against the Japanese or the Germans, all races and nationalities are far closer to us in this similarity and natural kinship than they are separated by differences of any kind whatsoever.

Therefore, if man's faith in the possibility of the creation of a human brotherhood here on earth is destroyed, democracy has not a chance for survival. This faith is the foundation on which the third pillar of democracy rests.

IV

Man's Individual Responsibility

The fourth pillar of democracy is the Christian's belief in individual responsibility before God. If our relation to the Creator endows us with certain inalienable rights it inevitably requires the assumption of responsibility. Jesus declared: "For unto whomsoever much is given, from him shall be much required." (St. Luke 12:48). The success of a dictatorship depends on the ability of one man, but the success of democracy depends on the cooperation of every man for the common welfare.

THE GOLDEN RULE

It is easy to talk about the meaning of a Christian's responsibility for cooperation in general terms without coming to grips with any specific problem. For example, we frequently hear people say that cooperation simply means living up to the Golden Rule as if that were the first simple step in the A B C's of the Christian life. On the contrary, it is much closer to the final step in the achievement of Christian character. To live up to the Golden Rule is so difficult that none of us do it. We can only approximate its achievement as a result of a life time of trying to conquer our own selfishness. To do unto others as you would that they should do unto you means acquiring the ability to put yourself in the other person's shoes and then to act toward him as you believe you would want him to act toward you if the relationship were reversed.

Specific Application

Therefore, let us see what the application of the Golden Rule would mean in a couple of specific areas. For instance, if you live in a lovely home and another person lives in the slums, you must try to understand how you would feel if you lived in the slums and he lived in your home. In this case you would not want him to come and live in the slums for that would not improve your situation at all; but you would want him to do everything in his power to help create the kind of society which would prevent you or anyone else having to live in the slums.

Or again, if you are thinking in terms of race, you much strive to imagine how you would feel if you were a Negro and because you were born black were relegated to the gallery of a theater or the back of the bus and were not allowed to eat in the best restaurants or to sleep in the best hotels. If you were a Negro you would not want the white man to come and sit with you in the back of the bus; but you would want him to do everything in his power to repeal the laws and overcome the prejudices that uphold this discrimination and thus enable you and all other Negroes to enjoy the same inalienable rights in bus or theater, restaurant or hotel that are enjoyed by those who, through no fault of their own, have been born white.

I mention this last instance because I believe that the most serious and important problem in the field of human relations today is that of race relations. We who are Christians have a special responsibility to practice our Christian principles in our relation to men of other races. Most of us who are white have little appreciation of the acute agony of spirit that the Negro suffers because of discrimination and in particular since the beginning of the war.

The other day I was talking to an intelligent Negro friend of mine whose son is in the army stationed in the South. On asking how his son was getting along he replied: "So far as his work in the Army is concerned he is doing well, but the way he is treated makes him extremely unhappy." Then the father continued: "Only the other day I wrote him a letter and said, "Son, I am writing you now not as a father but as a veteran of the last war. Be careful; don't talk too much; don't say what you really think; and don't write me everything that you think, for if your letters are censored they might be misunderstood or cause trouble for you."

I believe that the advice that my friend was giving his son was good advice for the boy in this particular situation. But when you analyze it what was the advice? It was simply to be completely self-contained. To boil with indignation, and yet not cry out in protest; to be insulted, and yet not retaliate. One does not need a course in psychology in order to realize that if a man has to repress his feelings continually in this way there will almost certainly come a time when his feelings can no longer be repressed but will boil over and the lid will be blown off. How long can a man boil within himself without an explosion? How long can a race continue to boil without an explosion?

In a recent New Yorker a story was told of a Negro soldier who was told at a certain restaurant that he could go to the back door and eat in the kitchen. While he was eating in the kitchen he looked out into the main dining room and saw German prisoners being fed there. Many times Negro soldiers who are willing to give their lives for our democracy are not given the privileges that we give even to our enemies simply because the latter were born white.

A SURGICAL OPERATION NEEDED

I have stressed race relations not only because of its seriousness in the life of our democracy but because there is not one of us who does not have an opportunity almost every day to show by attitude, word, or action that we believe we are children of God and brothers in Christ, deserving of equal rights and privileges irrespective of the color of our skin or the shape of our nose. As Christians we cannot and must not tolerate racial discrimination. I know that it is extremely difficult to overcome the prejudice that leads to discrimination. Prejudice is one of the most insidious poisons in the life of man and racial prejudice is the most virulent of all. To eradicate it from ourselves frequently takes a spiritual surgical operation. Yet as Christians we have the privilege of leading in rooting out racial prejudice and bearing witness to the fact that we believe that all men are brothers in Christ and members one of another.

FROM OVERSEAS

I sincerely hope that many of the men returning from overseas who have fought side by side with men of other races will have redoubled determination to aid in this battle for justice and democracy.

An encouraging sample of this spirit of some of the men in our armed forces is evident in the following excerpt from a letter received by Bishop Hobson from an overseas soldier. "I am not ready or willing to die—or proud to die. if need be—so that we white men can hold the world in the palm of our hands and milk it at will for another age. My friends who have died here and those other places did not die for that, I am sure. Those men have gone—and I will have gone, if the cards go that way—so that Johnny and Bill, Jr., and Alice and Dot, and all those fine, beautiful, not yet children, can grow up in a world where they won't feel guilty every time they drive to town and pass through a slum—so they won't have to slow up their Packard to keep from running over urchins playing in stinking streets—so that all of us can feel in our inner hearts that the world is fairing up."

IN CONCLUSION

Let me summarize briefly the four pillars. First, as Christians we believe that man is the child of God while Nazism considers him simply a tool of the state. Secondly, we believe in the existence of eternal truth, in our freedom to discover it, and in its ultimate triumph while Nazism teaches that truth is simply man made propaganda. Thirdly, we believe in the possibilities of brotherhood here on earth while Nazism teaches that Germans belong to a superior or master race. Finally, we believe in the responsibility of each individual before God while Nazism teaches that the dictator alone has the responsibility to decide what a man can do with his own life. Democracy depends on these principles. Not all the soldiers in our army are Christians, but I believe that whether they are cognizant of it or not they are part of a war that is being fought to keep open the possibility of a civilization governed by these principles. If Nazism should win, religion and the church would be driven underground. We may win the war and yet not build a more democratic or more Christian society, but at least the opportunity of building a society based on Christian principles will remain a real one.

In the Epistle to the Hebrews the author in speaking to Moses says (and I quote the Moffatt translation), "Like one who saw the King Invisible he never flinched." At the close of this conference in which we have been trying to come close to the King Invisible (I know from the testimony that I heard some of you give last night that you have come close to the King Invisible), we are deeply conscious both of those who have given their lives in the past and of our fellow countrymen who are today giving their last measure of devotion in the defense of democracy.

A commander of one of our submarines lay wounded on the deck of his ship which was being strafed by the enemy. He gave the command: "Take her down." Thus forgetting himself he ordered his own death in order to save his crew and his ship. Surely it could be said of him: "Like one who saw the King Invisible, he never flinched." In the South Pacific some of our troops had to evacuate an island. "A suicide squad" was left to protect the beach while the main body of troops was being evacuated. When a chaplain in a small boat pushing off shore realized what was happening, he said to his companions, "You don't need me; there will be plenty of other chaplains where you are going, but these men holding the beach have no one. am going to stay with them." And forgetting himself he jumped out of the boat and joined the men of the suic'de squad. "Like one who saw the King Invisible he never flinched."

Thus even in the thick darkness of the world's agony and man's savage cruelty to man, the light of the heroism in man's nature continues to shine and remind us that man is not simply a beast, but a child of God—that he can act like one who saw the King Insibible and never flinched.

My prayer is that you may go forth from this conference knowing what you are fighting to preserve, keenly aware of its significance for the future of the world, and that it may be said of each of you: "Like one who saw the King Invisible, he never flinched."

inspired and directed the first Nation-wide Campaign. It is out of this Campaign that our present National Council came. Surely through its work we have seen develop a growing consciousness of the corporateness of our Church.

We salute a great spirit. We can but rejoice that God has opened to him the gates of larger life, wherein he may win with God's servants "everywhere the eternal victory, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

EDITORIALS

In Grateful Appreciation

We trust that some of our readers,—at least a few—take a glance at the masthead. Beginning with this issue we art privileged to publish on our masthead the names of a group of associate editors. Most of these men have for a long time been frequent and infrequent contributors to our columns. We welcome them as co-laborers in the interesting and exciting field of religious journalism. We are certain that our readers share with us grateful appreciation for their services.

For over a century now the Southern Churchman has attempted to make some small contribution to the religious life of these United States. This publication has seen wars come and go. It has had its own wars. In these stirring days, when the hearts of all men are being literally, not figuratively tried, the Southern Churchman opens its columns to this group of distinguished associate editors. In the immediate years that lie ahead we believe that we have a service to render, and with this group of helpful leaders, we may make that service both effective and helpful.

Laymen's Importance

One of the glories of the Anglican Communion, and of the Protestant Episcopal Church, is its recognition of the place of laymen in the Church's work. Very often this has only been on paper. In fact two often has this been the case. The Vestry, the Diocesan Council, General Convention, have by canonical enactment recognized the place of the layman. This has been all to the good.

But in practice this beautiful and encouraging fact has been anything but a fact in practical experience. Other denominations have gone far ahead of us in the working position of laymen. Lay activity has not been an outstanding characteristic of the Protestant Episcopal Church. We have unconsciously in many cases, and consciously in many other cases, curbed the activity of our laymen. Oh, yes, we have depended upon Vesture and Trustees for the very proper functioning of our Churches upon a sound financial basis. But as for the much more important work of presenting to men the challenging opportunities offered by the Christian way of life, we have been not only dull but stupid.

We feel that this situation is now in the process of being corrected. The step forward was taken last fall by the National Council, when it appointed the Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, as Secretary for laymen's work. Mr. Campbell working with Mr. Harvey Firestone, Jr., as Chairman of the Presiding Bishop's Committee for Laymen's Work, is doing an excellent job.

It became the privilege of this editor to sit in on a Conference held under the leadership of Mr. Campbell, for the Third Province. This was an inspiring experience. Key laymen from all the thirteen dioceses of the Province were present. Their interest and enthusiasm was manifest. We commend the work of Mr. Campbell and the laymen, from all over the Church, who are working with him.

We are certain in our own mind that out of these provincial conferences will come many helpful suggestions, that will strengthen the laymen's work in the Church. Nothing is of greater importance now.

With thousands of service men returning to the normal ways of civilian life, what could be more inspiring to them, than to find an aroused activity on the part of the laymen of the Church? Again we say the importance of laymen's activity in the Church cannot be over-emphasized.

God speed to you, Bill Campbell and the key laymen, who are co-operating with you in this important project.

We reach a point in life, where we dislike the breaking of ties that bind us to a happy childhood of the past. One of the first clergymen that this writer remembers in vivid memory, was a parson by the name of Bob Patton. The writer was a child in the Sunday school of Christ Church, Roanoke. The young minister, almost just out of Seminary, made a great appeal to the young people of the struggling little church to which he had just been called. This childish memory continues to be a treasure in this writer's mind.

Years later when we had entered seminary, we were thrilled when we learned that Bob Patton was to be a speaker on our mission program. Years had not done much damage physically to our beloved parson; certainly they had done no damage to a radiant spirit. Instead they had added growth in vision and in courage to the stature of a man who was a true soldier of the Cross.

We are saddened by the passing of the Reverend Robert William Patton. We are gladdened when in a true Christian sense, we envision the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant," being said to this doughty Soldier of the Cross.

Bob Patton needs no one to catalogue his deeds. They are written in the lives of those with whom he came in touch. The Negro in the South owes much to this revered clergyman. He understood them. He worked for them under the aegis of Christ. Many social workers today could learn much from Bob Patton, the founder and guiding genius of the American Church Institute for Negroes. If the work of the Episcopal Church with the Negro has any merit, it is due to the influence and the directing counsel of Bob Patton.

There is another debt this Church of ours owes to Bob Patton. He is one of the original group that

CONQUERING THAT FEELING OF INFERIORITY

By RICHARD R. BEASLEY

A SENSE OF INFERIORITY is one of the most prevalent conditions in life. There are few people wo do not suffer from it now in their lives; and there are few people who if they do not have it now, once had it in their childhood or youth. Surely it causes as much personal misery and distress as any other one thing, and so often we bear it alone—because we cannot bring ourselves to tell any one else about it.

And it is so discernible. It is behind the fear of adults to stand up in public and make a speech. It is behind so much chronic drunkenness: under the influence of drink the timid person forgets his timidity and his sense of inadequacy. It is behind the unsociableness of certain people who dare not expose themselves to a group of strangers. It makes us hold tight to our little ruts, where things are secure and familiar and not launch out into new adventures. So when we are talking about a sense of inferiority, we are talking about something that is common to the vast majority of human beings—whatever may be their age or background or education or wealth or experience.

But when we bring it out into the open and look at it, the natural question arises: What are its roots? How did it start? Where did it commence? As we study it in ourselves or if we know the background intimately of others, the answers are not hard to find. So often it began in childhood. It began, first, in too much protection of the child. The child grew up shielded; he was not allowed to do the hard things and make his own way and prepare himself for what was to come. How we parents err in this! The result is that when the young person has to leave home and make his way in unfamiliar settings and among difficult surroundings and with strange and non-magnanimous people that young person is naturally unprepared. A gnawing sense of inferiority begins.

ANOTHER CAUSE may be something else that can be traced to those early years. It is a deep cut embarrassment or hurt. The wound was made and through the years instead of healing we allowed it to keep open as we let our worst imagination play around it. So now it plagues us even though many years have passed and the event may have long since been forgotten. So many adult personal miseries do go back to some unfortunate event in youth or childhood.

Where else does this inferiority come from? Fundamentally it is an inner insecurity. We are not sure of ourselves. We never have built up our self-confidence. We have made the habit of self-minimizing. We have thought in these terms so long that now we accept it as a fact. Too, we consider our personal security to rest on some position we have held, or some possession we have enjoyed to which our life has grown accustomed. We believe our whole life resides in holding tight to those little securities and anything that threatens them we fight with the fangs of a wild animal. And yet the deep, satisfied, growing personalities are constantly enlarging their securities!

Of course all this goes back to a habit of mind. It is destructive, negative thinking. We will never conquer our sense of inferiority unless we get our thinking going in new and emancipating directions. We can think ourselves inferior and inadequiate long enough and there comes a time when nothing under heaven can make us think differently. Let a person keep that mental companionship, day after day, and the sense of inferiority grows deeper and deeper in his life.

It is easy, too, to see what form this inferiority takes—how it expresses itself. It always makes us do one of three things, at least. The person who habitually tells himself that he is inferior, for example is sure to bluster. To cover it up he talks loudly, or he is boastful or he lauds it over others. Yet underneath all that apparent confidence there is nothing but an inflated balloon. But no effort is being made to conquer that inner insecurity.

There is another form it takes, too. The person who habitually tells himself that he is inferior cringes. Believing himself beaten at the start, he retreats all through life. He has a false and pitiable meekness. He is too afraid to raise his voice or assert himself or demand his rightful place. That is tragic, too. Life does that to many people. They become the door-mat for a callous world. They retreat within themselves and accept their hard fate like a beaten animal. But they, too, are doing nothing to correct a situation which is unfair and intolerable.

BUT THE THIRD FORM of the sense of inferiority is the most prevalent. It is the person who fights. Having been injured he injures others. Knowing himself inferior he criticizes in others what he lacks himself. That person does not want some one else happy because he is not; nor successful because he is not. In the intimate life of any parish church that kind of person is easily recognized. He (or she) is the troublemaker or the perpetual malcontent. He has a chip on his shoulder; he is oversensitive and easily offended. He attacks every effort any one else makes and often ridicules it. So often behind this difficult spirit is a personal failure which they will not allow themselves to recognize; and instead of going to work humbly to correct it they take the easier way of making life uncomfortable for others.

Thus we are focussing our attention on something fundamental to us all. It exists in major or minor degree in every one. Is there a way to cure it? Is there a technique of treatment? These suggestions are offered.

FIRST, resolve here and now to get the habit of courage. That comes by doing the hard thing. One is reminded of Emerson's comment: "It was high counsel that Jones heard given to a young person: 'Always do what you are afraid to do.'" We may have to begin modestly; but every day do something that demands courage. Thus when we conquer here we will be so reinforced inferiorly that we can conquer the next time. We gained our sense of inferiority by indulging the temptation to do the easy things and so lost our morale and our confidence in that indulgence. We will recover it by doing, step by step, the hard things—that from which we shrink from doing. "Trials, temptations, disappointments," said James Buckham, "all these are helps instead of hindrances, if one uses them rightly. They not only test the fibre of character, but strengthen it. Every conquered temptation represents a new fund of moral energy. Every trial endured and weathered in the right spirit makes a soul nobler and stronger than it was before." So we gain the habit of courage by doing what is hard and demanding.

SECOND, remember that there are countless others who have the same sense of inferiority you have. It is so universal that Alfred Adler, the famous Viennese psychiatrist, has given it a scientific name, known by every one, "inferiority complex." (He will probably go down in history as the author of that expression). You have much company—and usually among those you least expect.

THIRD, realize that you have something very distinctive yourself, however limited you may think yourself to be. Every single human being is separate and distinct, endowed in special ways. A certain banker once failed as an insurance agent. That was not his gift. But he had another—now he is a successful man of finance. Phillips Brooks, America's foremost preacher, taught school for a year but he failed miserably. That was not his right place. He became though a great and world famous preacher instead. We must build where we are strong. We have a faculty, gift, endowment which is ours peculiarly and in that province we can be secure and make a very real contribution. And Mrs. Browning's insight is worth remembering:

"Let us be content to work
To do the things we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little."

FOURTH, re-build yourself in your thinking. This will mean hard discipline, many failures and new starts, arduous work, but nothing will bring greater rewards. Keep the door closed on discouragements and failures and frustrations. Let the past be forgotten, and think rather of the new person you are capable of becoming. You have infinitely more capacity than you have allowed yourself to think you have. If you think this way as a habit, every hour and every day, what will happen inside you will surprise and delight and emancipate you!

FIFTH, let God help you. Stop and say a little prayer every time you face something difficult. Moses, you recall, had an inferiority complex and he shrank from the responsibility God placed on him to be the leader of the Israelites in the exodus out of Egypt. But God promised to help him, to tell him what to do, to guide him in the right way. Because Moses took God at His word and relied on Him all the way, we see what happened! God will always give us courage and strength to be our best. The boundless energy of His spirit can flow in and through us—to re-empower our weakness and re-enforce our high resolves.

So there is an answer to this crippling sense of inferiority. It can be changed into new-found strength if we reach deep down within ourselves and release us from ways of thinking that have kept us tied and imprisoned, and if we face each trial and test with the companionship of God to go along with us.

"No, when the fight begins within himself,
A man's worth something. God stoops o'er his head."

NANCY SUE'S KITTEN

Nancy Sue was very, very tired. She had been traveling with Mother on the train since six o'clock in the morning, and it was now three o'clock in the afternoon. Mother said they would not get to Uncle Jack's station until six o'clock at night. Three more hours! thought Nancy Sue. How could she stand it?

It had been such fun at first to see the telegraph poles fly by, and to go by the houses and see the children playing in the yards. But she had been watching all day, and she was so tired of the flying telegraph poles and little white cottages in the middle of green fields. She gave an impatient sigh and flung herself against the back of the seat.

Mother put down the book she was reading and smiled. "It has been a long day," she said, "but we shall be there very soon. Now, let's play a game. Let us watch out of the window for all the animals we can see, and keep count of them. Then when we get to Uncle Jack's station we shall see how many we have found."

Nancy Sue thought that would be fun. Soon the train went by a field where a red cow was eating grass and Nancy Sue saw her first. Then Mother saw a cow and a calf before Nancy Sue did.

All at once the train began to go through a large city, where there seemed to be nothing but houses and people, and people and big buildings.

All at once Nancy Sue gave a little squeal. "Oh, I almost didn't see it," she said, "because I didn't think about animals in the city. I forgot about cats. There was the dearest little white kitten sitting on the doorstep of a house. Oh, Mother, I wish I had a little white kitten like that!"

Nancy Sue was so busy thinking about the little white kitten that Mother saw a mother pig and a whole lot of little ones, eating apples under an apple tree, and two cows and three dogs. Then she saw Nancy Sue wasn't thinking about the game any more, so she went back to her book.

Nancy Sue thought and thought about the little white kitten. She played it belonged to her, and in her mind she imagined all kinds of things they did together. She forgot all about how long the journey was, and was surprised when Mother said that the next station was where they were to get off.

And what do you suppose? Uncle Jack met them at the station, and drove them out to the farm, and there on the doorstep, sitting waiting for her, was a tiny white kitten, just exactly like the one Nancy Sue had been wishing for.—E. M. Bush, in S. S. Times.

Commission on Peace Strategy

Dr. Walter Marshall Horton to Head Study of Peace Strategy of the Churches

New York, Sept. 7—A commission of 25 prominent churchmen, headed by Dr. Walter Marshall Horton, professor of theology, Oberlin College, has been created to study the basic problem of the peace strategy of the churches and report its findings to the "peace conference" of Protestant church leaders at Cleveland, Jan. 16-19.

Announcement of the personnel of "The Commission on the Peace Strategy of the Churches" and the subject of its study was made today by the Federal Council of Churches' Commission on a Just and Durable Peace, under whose auspices between 350 and 400 protestant church leaders will attend the Cleveland conference.

The study commission, one of two to be named to prepare findings and recommendations in advance to facilitate the work of the Cleveland conference, will consider an eight point agenda and complete its work by Dec. 15. The eight points are.

1. An effort to define the aspects of the Christian faith relative to the problems of peace.

2. A discussion of the continued witness of the Christian Church concerning world order regardless of day-by-day developments of secular governments.

3. Considerations involved in support or non-support of intermediate procedures which fall short of the long range ends to which the churches generally are committed.

4. The place of the churches in influencing public opinion and the methods that appropriately may be used by the churches in this respect.

5. An examination of the obstacles in the way of the achievement of a just and durable peace in terms of the attitudes of Christians, taking into account as far as possible psychological factors, with suggestions for meeting the situation.

6. The psychological and cultural factors as they are related to our Christian faith which are involved in the reconstituting of Europe (Germany) and the Far East (Japan) after the war.

7. How concretely can the World Mission of the Church be made a contributing factor in the achievement of world order?

8. Steps that might be taken to strengthen the purpose of Christians to insure postwar collaboration on the part of the United States.

Another study commission is being formed to appraise the international situation and such developments as the Dumbarton Oaks, Teheran, Moscow, Cairo and other conferences in the light of the churchmen's approach to a peace based on spiritual principles. These are embodied in the Guiding Principles approved by the first church peace conference held three years ago at Delaware, O., and the Six Pillars of Peace promulgated by the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace.

Dr. Horton, the chairman of the study commission, is an ordained Baptist minister who has devoted his career to teaching and writing. He spent three years as an instructor at Union Theological Seminary, New York, before joining the faculty of the Oberlin Graduate School of Theology in 1925. He has been Fairchild professor of theology since 1926. He is the author of many books on religion, including "Can Christianity Save Civilization?" He was born at Somerville, Mass., and was awarded degrees by Harvard, Columbia and Union Theological Seminary.

Other members of the Peace Strategy Commission are:

Prof. Elmer J. Arndt, Professor Philosophy of Religion, Eden Theological Seminary, Webster Groves, Mo.

Dr. Conrad Bergendoff, President Augustana College and Theological Seminary, Rock Island, Ill.

Dr. Rufus D. Bowman, President Bethany Biblical Seminary, Oak Park, Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. H. R. Chamberlin, member World's Committee of Y. W. C. A., Toledo, O.

Bishop Ralph S. Cushman, Methodist, St. Paul, Minn.

Bishop Arthur R. Clippinger, United Brethren in Christ, Dayton, O.

Dr. Charles W. Gilkey, Dean of the Divinity School, University of Chicago, Ill.

Dr. L. W. Goebel, President of the Evangelical and Reformed Church, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Georgia Harkness, Professor of Applied Theology, Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill.

Dr. Harold J. Heininger, President Evangelical Theological Seminary, Naperville, Ill.

Rev. William H. Hudnut, Jr., pastor First Presbyterian Church, Springfield, Ill.

Dr. Paul Hutchinson, managing editor The Christian Century, Chicago, Ill.

Rev. J. H. Jackson, pastor Olivet Baptist Church, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Wilber G. Katz, Dean of Law School, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. William B. Mather, chairman Northern Baptist Christian Council on Social Progress, DePauw University, Greencastle, Ind.

Dr. Charles Clayton Morrison, editor The Christian Century, Chicago, Ill.

Professor Richard Oudersluys—lecturer in New Testament Greek and Exegesis, Western Theological Seminary, Holland, Mich.

Dr. Albert W. Palmer, president Chicago Theological Seminary, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Harris F. Rall, professor of Systematic Theology, Garrett Biblical Institute, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. W. W. Sweet, professor of Church History, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Ernest Trice Thompson, professor of Church History, Union Theological Seminary, Richmond, Va.

Postwar Ministry Set Up

Presiding Bishop Appoints Committee According to Action Taken by National Council

New York, N. J.—In accordance with action taken by the National Council at its April meeting, the Presiding Bishop has appointed a Committee on the Postwar Ministry. Bishop Tucker is chairman, the other members being: Bishop Henry W. Hobson, as a representative of the Army and Navy Commission. the Very Rev. Hughell Fosbroke, representing the Joint Commission on Theological Education; Lt. Comdr. C. Leslie Glenn, representing the Church Society for College Work; Mr. Donald Wright, alternate for the Church Society; the Rev. Raymond Cunningham, of the Society for the Increase of the Ministry; the Very Rev. Alden D. Kelley, formerly executive of the National Council's Division of College Work, and the Rev. Dr. Almon R. Pepper, executive of the National Council's Division of Christian Social Relations.

The Committee has been set up to keep in touch with service men who are thinking of going into the Christian ministry, and to place before suitable service men the claims of the ministry as a vocation. Contacts are made with Chaplains in the armed services, and already some of the Chaplains have responded with names of men whom they regard as good future material. The committee corresponds regularly with such men, and sends them literature to aid their consideration of the ministry as their post-war vocation.

The General Theological Seminary has set aside a room, so that a service man who is considering the ministry may stay overnight, see a seminary in action, and get acquainted with seminary ways. Other of the theological seminaries are planning a similar arrangement.

Presiding Bishop Tucker explains the purposes of the new committee as follows:

"It is obvious that at the present time a large proportion of the young men who are qualified to render useful service in the ministry of the Church are in the armed forces of our country. If the Church is to serve the spiritual needs of our people after the war it is of extreme importance that the Church's need for clergy in the post-war period should be adequately presented to those men in the armed forces who are qualified for such leadership.

"The Committee on Post-war Ministry has been organized for this purpose. I shall greatly appreciate any cooperation in their effort to influence the proper kind of men now serving in the armed services to give consideration to the Church's need for clergy and in the opportunity for service which the ministry will present. During the post-war period I sincerely believe the possibility of the Church's meeting the spiritual needs of society will depend very largely upon its ability to secure from among those men who are so splendidly serving our country in war, a reasonable number of candidates for the ministry."

CLERGYMEN APPLY FOR COMMISSIONS AS ARMY CHAPLAINS

Baltimore, Aug. 1944—A total of 212 clergymen from Maryland, Pennsylvania and Virginia have applied for commissions as Army chaplains in the period from July, 1943, until August of this year, Major General Philip Hayes, Commanding General, announced today.

Colonel Ralph C. Deibert, Third Service Command Chaplain, said that an urgent need for Army chaplains of all faiths still exists. He stated that there are 76 chaplains on duty at present at installations within the Command. Of these, 52 are Protestants, 20 Roman Catholics and 4 Jewish. Taking the month of June as an average, the Colonel said that 1,458 services were conducted with an attendance of 82,870, within the tri-state area.

Colonel Deibert explained that applications for commissions are sent by him to the Chief of Chaplains, War Department, Washington. Upon the latter's recommendation, the clergymen are sent to the Chaplain's School at Harvard University for a five week course, after which they are ordered to posts anywhere in the United States, or overseas.

A chaplain must be physically qualified and under 50 years of age to receive an overseas assignment. The Colonel pointed out that one Protestant and one Catholic chaplain are assigned to every Air Corps Combat Unit and to every numbered General Hospital overseas.

Colonel Deibert, who has been in the Army for 25 years, was an instructor for two years at the Chaplain's School at Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and at Harvard University, before taking over his present post in February of this year. In those two years he trained nearly 6,500 chaplains.

WOLCOTT MEMORIAL CHAPEL DEDICATED

Brookline, Mass.—The Wolcott Memorial Chapel, dedicated in St. Paul's Church, Brookline, by the Rev. Frederic C. Lawrence, rector, on September 10, is the gift of Mrs. Henry Wolcott for the praise and worship of God in memory of her husband and members of his family, including Henry and Elizabeth Wolcott who came to America from England in 1630. A detail of special interest is the hatchment bearing the Wolcott coat of arms which hangs on the south wall and symbolizes the bond between this chapel and the parish church of Lydiard St. Lawrence in Somersetshire, England, where the sixteenth century baptismal records of the family are still preserved. Hatchments are recognized features of many old country churches in England, but, so far as known, this is the first one to be used in this country. Another fetature of interest are the cushions, designed and worked with the Chevron of the Wolcott arms by Mrs. Wolcott in memory of Miss Charlotte M. Yonge, authoress of the Victorian era, who wielded a life-long influence in spiritual matters through her writings. Mrs. Wolcott also gave her great-grandfather's candlesticks and equally old rench porcelain vases for the altar, while the cross, altar book and stand, and basin for communion alms, are gifts by other members of the family. The shelf for the alms basin is an expression of interest in the building of the chapel by Mr. and Mrs. Howard R. Lasher.

NO SUMMER DROUGHT

Since our last report of collections issued early in July the Church has not been idle. While collections for this period have been below the $156,000, which is the amount due each month, they have been unusually good for the vacation period.

Allowing one month for collection and remittance, the amount paid to September 1st was 110% of the amount due.

Eighty dioceses and districts out of 98 are in the 100% column. Alabama and Honolulu have already paid the amount due for the entire year.

Some dioceses while filed Expectations below the amount of their Quotas seem to have good chances of reaching the higher figure.

May the Autumn season be a fruitful one.

Treasurer.

TRINITY CHURCH REDUCES MORTGAGE

Shamokin, Pennsylvania. — Trinity Church is rejoicing in the reduction of the mortgage on its parish house and rectory from $30,600 to less than $6,500, which was recently announced by the rector, the Rev. George B. Armstrong, at a parish meeting held to hear the result of a campaign for funds which had been conducted since early in the year. The banks which held the mortgages have been paid in full, the balance of the obligation being underwritten by officers and members of the parish. Plans for the campaign to clear the parish from indebtedness were developed by the rector, with the counsel and cooperation of the Bishop of Harrisburg, the Rt. Rev. John Thomas Heistand.

The parish debt was contracted for the erection of a spacious parish house in the late 1920's, since which time the interest charges have been a heavy burden upon the parish. The result of this present campaign is considered exceptional in consideration of the fact that the entire church membership, including children and many persons long absent from the parish, is under 230.

The Rev. Mr. Armstrong came to Shamokin from the Diocese of Toronto less than two years ago.

FINAL PORCH SERVICES OF THE SEASON HELD AT ST. PAUL'S

Boston, Mass. — The Cathedral Church of St. Paul held its final porch service of the season on September 10, when, in token of its inter-faith character, Rabbi Sidney S. Guthman was the preacher. Earlier in the day, two other alliances were honored when the Eastern Territorial Commander of the Salvation Army, preached at 11 a. m. in honor of the latter's sixtieth anniversary of establishment in Boston, and when Chaplain Higgins of the Royal Navy preached at 4 p. m. at the annual memorial service of the British Naval and Military Association. The Very Rev. Edwin Jan ven Etten returns to his pulpit and his new season of broadcasts on September 17.

NARRAGANSETT CONFERENCES AT ST. GEORGE'S SCHOOL

The principal events in this Diocese this past week were the series of conferences at St. George's School at Newport.

There were three conferences in all. First came that for the women, then the clergy, and over last Saturday and Sunday the conference for laymen.

Both Bishop Perry and Bishop Bennett participated in the conference, along with the conference leaders, the Rev. Messrs. Theodore P. Ferris, Gerald F. Burrill, John R. Wyatt, and Avis Harvey.

Subjects covered included Forward in Service, The Fellowship of the Prayer Book, the work of the Woman's Auxiliary, and finally "The Plan for Action" for Rhode Island.

The Rev. Thom Williamson, rector of St. Peter's-by-the-Sea, Narragansett, is taking the services at St. John's Saunderstown, during the vacation of the rector there, the Rev. Canon Leonard Flisher, for the month of September.

The Rev. Harold C. Whitmarsh, who for some years was rector at Wickford and Saunderstown, and has recently been Assistant Rector at St. Bartholomew's, New York City, has been called as rector of St. James' Church, Woonsocket.

What the Church Will Do for College Students After the War Discussed

Bloomfield Hills, Mich.—What the Church will do for college students after the war was discussed by Dean Washburn, the Rev. George L. Cadigan of Salem and the Rev. C. F. Hall, Chaplain for Tufts College at a recent conference at the Harvard Faculty Club in Cambridge, sponsored by the New England Provincial Commission on College Work and the Church Society for College Work.

Forty-three rectors and vestrymen from Boston and nearby parishes heard Chaplain C. Leslie Glenn, U. S. N. R., the principal speaker, tell of the need for greater participation on the part of the home parishes financially and otherwise in student work.

Rev. Frederic B. Kellogg, chaplain to Episcopal students at Harvard University, pointed out that there will be more students in colleges after the war than ever before in history. Included among these, he said, will be many men who have had a "taste of the realities of life and will therefore be more concerned with religion."

The conference voted unanimously that only through greater participation, by both men and women, through lay college work committees in every region would we begin to build up the interest of college youth and win their future leadership.

Two prominent business men, Byron T. Atwood, of Salem, and H. L. Dalbeck, of Belmont, accepted the responsibility of forming a laymen's committee to put the ideas brought forward in the conference in effect in the Massachusetts area. Delegates to the conference agreed that "everyone interested in this important work should be a member of the C. S. C. W."

Bishop McElwain Will Assist for Few Months in Michigan

Detroit, Michigan—Because of the fact that no Bishop Coadjutor will be coming into the Diocese of Michigan in the early fall, as had been hoped, arrangements have been made by the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., Bishop of the Diocese, for Episcopal assistance throughout the fall, winter and early spring. The Rt. Rev. Frank A. McElwain, D. D., former Bishop of Minnesota and now retired, will come into the Diocese in mid-September for a stay of several months. Bishop McElwain is President, Dean and Professor of Pastoral Theology and Homiletics at the Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, Illinois. He will be accompanied to Michigan by Mrs. McElwain. The heavy schedule of Visitations in Michigan's 120 parishes and missions will be shared by Bishop Creighton and Bishop McElwain throughout the season.

The election of a Bishop Coadjutor for the Diocese of Michigan was approved by the annual Diocesan Convention in January of this year. The necessary consents were secured, and at a special Convention in May, the Rev. Donald D. Aldrich, D. D., rector of the Church of the Ascension, New York City (now on leave as a Chaplain with the United States Navy) was elected on the second ballot. Dr. Aldrich, however, subsequently declined the election. Present plans are that another election of a Bishop Coadjutor will be held at the conference and in attendance were the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Retired Bishop, twenty-three clergymen and two laymen; one of these soon to be ordained to the diaconate.

Several of the ministers in the diocese were unable to be present on account of illness or for other reasons.

The conference was in the form of lectures by Dr. Howe, each followed by a discussion period. He took up various problems arising from time to time in the work of a parish priest in relation to baptism, confirmation classes, consultations before and after marriages, visiting the sick, family life, etc. Of especial interest and value was Dr. Howe's discussion of these important matters from the point of view of a trained psychologist.

Also the conference provided an excellent opportunity for the clergy of the diocese to become well acquainted with the Virginia Episcopal School and its Headmaster, Dr. George L. Barton, Jr., and several members of the faculty who were in residence in advance of the opening of the fall session. The school was opened in 1916 with the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, previously at Emmanuel Church, Staunton, as its founder and first Rector and Dr. Jett continued as the head of the school until March, 1920, when he was consecrated as the first Bishop of the newly organized Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. Thereafter, during his eighteen and a half years as Bishop, he was ex-officio chairman of the Trustees of the School and this fine diocesan institution continues to be one of his chief interests.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

Dr. Paley, noted scholar, said: "There is a principle which bars all information, is proof against all argument and cannot fail to keep a man in everlasting ignorance. This principle is contempt prior to examination."

'Tis greatly wise to talk with our past hours,
And ask them what report they bore to heaven;
And how they might have borne more welcome news.—Young.

Never worry about dying. Go on living and let the end come when God decrees it. Fill life full of joy, purpose, good works and usefulness and let the end come when it may.—Baptist Standard.

Knowledge and timber shouldn't be much used till they are seasoned.—O. W. Holmes.

Cleanse the Temple from prudent care,
That doubts the God Who answers prayer;
Tear from thy heart the secret sin,
So shalt thou pray, "Thy reign begin!"
—Zion's Herald

Dr. Albert Schweitzer, missionary in Africa, in one of his books tells of an old man who used to come to his father's church. He was deaf as a post, and yet he came to church every Sunday. Someone asked him one day why he came to the services if he could not hear a word. His reply was, "The communion of the saints; the communion.

What reality is there in your Christianity if you look at men struggling in darkness and are content to congratulate yourselves that you are in the light?—F. W. Robertson.

As our bodies live in commerce with the light and air, in the environment of house and food and daily exercise of the limbs and senses, under the economy of material nature, so our spirits live by the breath of prayer, by faith and love towards God, by reverance and filial submission, by communion with things unseen and eternal.—G. G. Findley.

The Christian dares to be an optimist, because he sees a remedy that goes to the root of the world's ills. Christ, and no other, can forgive the sinfulness of the past, break its hold upon us, and give power to build that New Order which the world seeks. God, not man, must be its architect. It is missionary work that is building the foundations of His plan, the One Church living and growing in every country of the world, Christ's instrument for His work.—Oversea News.

A War-Time Prayer

O ETERNAL GOD, in Whose Will is our peace, we commend to Thee the needs of all the world. Where there is hatred, give love; where there is injury, pardon; where there is doubt, faith; where there is despair, hope; where there is darkness, light; where there is sadness, joy. May we ourselves seek not so much to be consoled as to console; to be understood as to understand; to be loved as to love. For it is in giving that we receive; it is in pardoning that we are pardoned; it is in dying that we are born to eternal life in Thy Blessed Son, Jesus Christ our Lord."

LETTERS

Tsingchen, July 11, 1944.

My dear folks:

Tsingchen is the summer resort for me. Since my last letter the weather has been satisfactory enough for Mr. Kemp. Also Li Tz Fu's food has had such a wonderful psychological effect upon him that he has recovered completely from his indigestion. Day by day he is also consuming more Bean Milk.

Kweichow may well be considered the Province of the Red Berries. You will recall how enthusiastic I was about the berries last fall. This spring we have another bush which is all over the place which produces a large cluster of brilliantly red berries. A week ago Sunday afternoon I prowled around the waist of our hill. I failed to meet the big snake, but I saw many shrubs that interested me. Last Sunday I went down to the city for the service. On the way I met a black man driving a truck and there were many other trucks driven by men from his country.

I have heard through Mr. Allen that Newton Liu is safely in Chuanhsien where the Middle School used to be. Friday I was surprised on opening my door to discover Bishop Stevens there. He was out prospecting for a refuge for himself and Eric Hague. He was quite pleased with our situation and they may come out for the summer. This will please me as they are both chess players. I can beat the one and the other can beat me.

Last night was a great day for Boone, as the Brass Band returned in strength. Several of the boys can play so that a small pandemonium broke loose to celebrate the arrival of fifteen instruments which Mr. Higgins had carried to the College. I think that this will go a long way to making Mr. Kemp happy. All the students like his "Burma Road" and "On the Banks of the Yangtsz" and so do I.

Just below my window there is blooming at present a very attractive large flower. It is a head, a good pink like a milkweed, but the plant is very much larger. I am sorry to be without a botany book here.

One might say that I was having a term in the penitentiary, as I am living on a stone floor, the windows are barred, I am allowed only religious books and get my exercise breaking up rock. This morning I succeeded in breaking the handle which will give me a chance to do gardening tomorrow instead of road making.

The first copy of the WASC bulletin came to us this week. Both Mr. Kemp and I enjoyed it immensely, because it gave us a very vivid picture of the battle of Hengyang and the Siang River. It begins to look as though this campaign into Hunan will be even more costly for the Japanese than all the rest. It is, of course, the most costly for the Chinese as well as for all the missionaries in that region.

All of the missionaries have been evacuated from Kweilin and the Hunan region. Miss Hammond has been carried home to America on a hospital plane with her friend, Miss Graves of Ginling, to look after her.

I was about to lament in this letter that I had not heard from New Jersey for a long time, when in came a long letter and two pictures from Edward and Priscilla. I am delighted to have the pictures. I am glad that they sent an extra of the baby as in the other I might have thought that the baby was a ghost.

Near the city there is a peach orchard which allows all comers to eat all the peaches they wish. These red peaches are sold quite cheaply and we have a large number out in the courtyard drying for winter use. Last year there were practically no peaches, so that there is a very heavy crop this year. It is very sad that I cannot get hold of my canning machine and the cans with it.

With loving greetings to all from
ALFRED A. GILMAN.

THE D DAYS IN THE PACIFIC

Early in July the Publicity Department of the Bishop and Council, with the advice and assistance of Bishop Kennedy, sent the following outline of information to the editors of the National Church papers of the Episcopal Church.

We feel that editors living on the Eastern Seaboard have a difficult time letting their imaginations travel ten thousand miles westward. We feel this summary reflects the attitudes of our citizens in this Territory and our urgent desire to create an understanding of our common problems among our fellow citizens through the United States. We do need the prayers of the whole Church. The outline follows:

"The extent of the global war in which the United States is engaged is appreciated by those who live in the Pacific area. The Church in Hawaii took pride in the leadership of our Presiding Bishop in his comprehensive plans for a prayerful observance of D-Day. We entered into those plans throughout the churches of our Islands. We now take the privilege of asking the prayers of the whole Church on the many D-Days in the Pacific area and call your attention to certain facts which we have not seen reflected in the editorials of our Church press.

"The casualties of the invasion of Saipan, not to mention the invasions of the Gilbert and Marshall Islands, were fifty per cent of those suffered by United States forces in the invasion of Normandy.

"The war against Japan is distinctly our war. The United States must bear the burden and alone prosecute it. In the Southwest we have a little help, but the march across the vastness of the Pacific is our problem, and we are doing the job alone. We have accomplished a magnificent campaign, but we have just touched the fringes of the empire of the enemy. Invasions will follow one another with a rising crescendo and each will be more bloody. We need the prayers of the whole Church.

"Our United States forces have advanced three thousand miles in this Pacific area, the farthest advance made by any of the Allied armies.

"The question of distance is appalling, six and seven thousand miles of ocean between the Mainland United States and the homeland of the enemy, and this must be traversed before we come to grips with the most implacable foe the United States faces in this global war. This is vastly different from the twenty or eighty miles across the English Channel. The problem of supplies for the huge force required is beyond the imagination of the layman.

"The problems of the future for the United States lie in the Pacific. The problems of Europe are small in comparison with the problems of the Orient. The world of the future will center in the far reaches of the Pacific area. The United States must begin to learn something of that vast region. The prayers of the whole Church are needed now and in the future for the D-Days of crisis.

"Our men of the land, sea and air know they will find no mercy if they are captured from the type of enemy they are facing in the Pacific. The intensity of emotional reactions among our men seems far greater than with our armies in other theaters of war.

"An Admiral in the Pacific area wrote on his calling card and inserted in his offering envelope two Sundays after

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

IN THE BOOK OF DEUTERONOMY, chapter 32, verse 2, I found this verse: Moses is speaking.

"My doctrine shall drop as the rain,
My speech shall distil as the dew,
As the small rain upon the tender herb,
And as the showers upon the grass."

"Small rain"—I like that. It expresses well what I would say at this high hour.

"Small rain" is what we most often need. Not a cloudburst to break a long drought, not a flood. Just a little moisture to keep us growing and cool, each day. Like a spring—only a trickle comes at any one time, but that every day, sufficient unto the day.

Moses' words of blessing, from which this verse comes, inspired a book for children—perhaps too for others. It contains short verses from the Bible with an appropriate picture showing the point and application of each—"small rain" making each blade of grass erect and green.

"The heavens declare the glory of God . . ."
"The earth is the Lord's . . ."
"Let the heavens be glad . . ."
"Make a joyful noise unto the Lord."
"I will sing unto the Lord . . ."
"The Lord is my shepherd . . ."
"If I take the wings of the morning . . ."
"If any lack wisdom . . ."
"There shall be showers of blessing."
"Our Father . . ."
"Be ye kind one to another . . ."
"Search me, O Lord, and know my heart . . ."
"Blessed are the pure in heart . . . the peacemakers. . ."
"The Lord shall preserve thy going out . . ."
"The Lord is thy keeper . . ."

Yes, "small rain" each day is enough for us, if it is from God received. If His revelations come in strange and familiar places—new visions that come we know not how; arrow prayers in times of devotion, a word comes alive from His Book as we read.

Yes, "small rain" each week is enough for us, if it from the habitual and the unexpected comes down from God—worship in His House with a note of a hymn or a caught and held flash of beauty; from the soft gleams of love and care that cool us as they strike.

"Small rain," drip, drip, never cease.
A word fitly spoken.
A handclasp on the shoulder.
A smile.
One's presence in a moment of sorrow.
Little deeds in a second done.
Small, cooling and refreshing rain.

Like April showers on dusty paths, beauty in a buttercup, a thimbleful of cheer, dwarfs of goodness, dancing elves of light. It takes very little to keep us moving and happy.

We are like children—give a little, take a little; a red or yellow sucker sweet, a pat, a look in or a watching.

"Small rain" like gentle people, light touches, a peach blossom, a letter, a minute on the telephone—bits of manna in the wilderness.

The smear of radium left in a dish; a tiny, fragile flower among the desolation of a city dump; the first sniff of fall; a fire on the hearth; a cup of tea; a visit from a friend—"small rain," gently falling, quenching our thirst.

A drop or two of spiritual vitamin—like a dropper full of B1 that stirred our begonia to life—small rain from a friend.

"The Little Flowers of St. Francis."

Thanksgiving to Almighty God

By WILLIAM T. MANNING

Address "For the Victory Granted in the Battle of Britain, September, 1940," by Bishop Manning, at the service held in the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, on Sunday, September 17, 1944, in conjunction with similar services held in England and in every free part of the world, at the suggestion of the Archbishop of Canterbury.

WE ARE ALL GIVING THANKS for the great victories in Europe at this time. There may be desperate battles and grievous losses still to come but our Armies and the Armies of our Allies are advancing into Germany.

The day of the Nazi Terror is near its end. The liberation of the enslaved countries is taking place. Complete victory over the Nazi Forces is in sight, and victory over the Japanese aggressors will follow.

But we are here today to look back to a time when the situation was a very different one. We are gathered here in this Cathedral in New York to give thanks to God for the victory granted four years ago in the epochal Battle of Britain, the Battle of Britain which stemmed the tide, which checked the onrush of the Nazi conquerors, and which held the gates of freedom for the world.

We think of the situation four years ago when Britain stood absolutely alone—alone and with almost no land forces or equipment—against the Axis forces flushed with victory, drunk with power, and already the masters of a great part of Europe. We think of those immortal words of Winston Churchill to the people of Britain as they faced invasion, when he told them that he could offer them only blood, sweat, and tears in their desperate struggle. We remember his tribute to the marvellous deeds of the Royal Air Force when he said that "never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few." And we give thanks to God for the heroism, the fortitude, the never faltering courage with which Britain met that great day of moral and spiritual crisis for humanity. That Battle of Britain in 1940 was one of the most crucial victories in the history of the world. It was not a victory only for the British people, it was a victory for all who love justice and freedom. If Britain had surrendered, Nazi Germany would have dominated the world. The Battle of Britain, like the defence of Stalingrad, was a miracle. It was a miracle of the free spirit of man which no power of tyranny or terror can destroy. The character and spirit of the British people and their faith in God and the right was the rock on which Hitlerism struck and was halted.

IN THAT GREAT HOUR when Britain stood alone while all around her had been beaten down, the British people wrote the finest chapter in their long history and rendered service to us in this land beyond all measure. It was the Battle of Britain which gave us in America time; time to realize the real nature of this conflict, which some among us were strangely slow to do; time to realize that this was our war just as much as it was Great Britain's; time to perform our miracles of production and to take our great and crucial part in the conflict. Today our nation is giving its whole life and strength in the struggle but it is because of what Britain did then, in those first desperate years, that victory is now close at hand.

Through the whole war, the achievements of Great Britain, her immense war production and the achievements of the British fleet, the British air force, and the British armies have been amazing indeed. Months ago, before the events accompanying the great invasion of Europe and the freeing of France, the New York Times in an editorial gave the following picture of what, up to that time, Britain had done in this war: "Since the beginning of the War," that editorial said, "the Royal Navy, that is the Fleet of England, has lost ninety-five ships of war and 41,000 men, a great navy in itself. A fifth of her merchant seamen will not come home. The British Navy and Air Force have destroyed two enemy navies, sunk more than half of the German U-boats yielding prisoners, and 40 per cent of others known to have been sunk. The R. A. F., carrying the war to Germany, has lost more than the Navy, 48,700 men and 10,400 planes. The British Army, recruited from England, Wales, and Scotland, has fought all over the world, suffering harrowing defeats yet winning victories that will ring through history. Its ranks have been thinned by warfare in nineteen separate countries or colonies. On every front its contribution has been far out of proportion to the population of the British Isles."

Through all this war, London and all of England have been under fire, and in the weeks just past we have seen another illustration of the spirit of the British people as they stood under the insensate, murderous, and indiscriminate assault of the Robot Bomb. The news has just come that these Robot Bombs have destroyed one hundred and eleven churches in the London area. But the news has also come that on this very day, September 17, the lights are on again in London and the Blackout, which has continued through all these years of war, is ended.

WE PAY FULL HONOR to all those, in all countries, who have resisted so far as possible the wicked and brutal powers which attacked them. We honor the people of China in their long and heroic struggle, and pray that adequate help may soon reach them. We honor the marvelous spirit and achievements of the Russian people who have played so great a part in the approaching victory. We honor those brave men and women of France, who, in spite of the enemy from without and the traitors within, never gave up hope and effort, and we give fervent thanks that France is again free. But we do not forget, and the world will not forget, that in the hour of supreme crisis it was Britain who stood alone while all around her went down in ruin. And so today we commemorate the Battle of Britain and express our sense of the immeasurable debt which we in America owe, and all lovers of freedom owe, to the King and Government, the Royal Navy, the Royal Air Force, the Armies, and the people of Great Britain, and we join with them in giving thanks to God for the service of their great Prime Minister and leader, Winston Churchill, to Britain in her time of supreme trial and to the cause of freedom throughout the world.

Realizing Your Heart's Desire

By RICHARD R. BEASLEY

LIFE SELDOM GIVES us all that we ask for. Disappointments come to every one sooner or later. Beethoven wrote some of the greatest music this world has ever heard; but Beethoven never had the love of any woman. Gamaliel Bradford wrote many great biographies and attained literary fame but his life was one long pain from arthritis. The senior Rockefeller, possessing more money almost than any one else, yet in the later years of his life said this more than once: "I'd give all my wealth to be able to eat one good meal again." So few of us are given all that we want.

But if that is true something else is true, too. Every one has a secret hope for his life. He doesn't mention it to any one else and people very likely would ridicule him if he told them about it. But back in his heart, far back in the inner being, every one has a secret wish, a plan, a dream, an ambition for his life—something more than anything he wants to be or do or have. What do we call that? We call it our heart's desire and every one has a heart's desire. We may not always realize it. We may have to alter it as we grow older. We may even have to give it up when life teaches us that it is impossible or unworthy. But we are thinking here of the good heart's desire—the worthy, realizable heart's desire.

BUT WHERE DID IT COME FROM? Emmet Fox would seem to be right when he says that our heart's desire came from God. Some day God whispered this in our ear and it has stayed with us ever since. You see, it is a little (or big) plan God has worked out that our life may realize its fullest possibilities. He wants us to be at our tip-top best. For after all we are His agents. Isaiah discovered this in the Temple: "Who shall I send and who will go for me; then said I, Here am I, send me." Jesus similarly saw the same thing as He said of His disciples, "As Thou hast sent Me into the world have I sent them into the world." The writer of Theologica Germanica echoes the same: "I will be to the Everlasting Goodness what a man's right hand is to a man."

God, then, works through us. We are the outlet for the Creative Mind.

So this heart's desire is nothing of which to be ashamed. God once upon a time spoke to us: "I want you to do this or be this or have this."

Carry the thought further. We have a better chance to realize our fullest possibilities if we stop regularly and ask ourselves: "What is God's will for my career or my business? What is God's will for my marriage or my family"? "Aye, what is God's will for my own life." Surely He wills that I have health of body and of mind. Surely He wills freedom for me. But there is no freedom if I am in the wrong job; or if I struggle always in needless poverty; or if I am in that niche in life where my best capacities and powers have no chance of expression; or if I have gifts locked within me—planted there by this Creative God—which are never used.

Indeed, what is God's will for me? It is not that I be unhappy or worried or fearful or embittered or defeated. Truly God does not want these attitudes in my life. Rather God wants me to realize my heart's desire. He won't let me forget it—so He puts it behind me, as it were (like Francis Thompson's Hound of Heaven), always stalking me and never leaving me alone. He wants me to realize my heart's desire.

HERE ARE TWO EXAMPLES on a very small scale of what is meant. A certain person for years wanted to paint. There were no artists in that family nor had any one ever taken lessons. But this person had a consuming desire to be a painter. So this person went to work—bought books and read them; made friends with an artist; went to exhibitions; took lessons. Now that person can paint. Some great, deep area within that life now finds self-expression. Again, the newspapers carried recently an item that told of a world famous choral leader in England who died at a ripe age. He began the study of music when he was forty years old! There must have been an exciting story behind that simple announcement. He indeed realized his heart's desire.

Now there is this next logical question. Why don't we realize our heart's desire? We have our major disappointments—yes; but there is so much that we can by our disciplined resolution realize if we give it effort and devotion. Why don't we realize our heart's desire?

First, because we do not trust ourselves. "Trust yourself," said Emerson. "Every heart vibrates to that iron string." The greatest temptation we have is to under-estimate ourselves. But all the while we can do just what we set our minds to do. Each of us has hidden ores of ability and capacity that go unmined and unused. The greatest fear we have is the fear that we will fail. So, consenting to that, we go ahead and—fail. But we need not. Rather we should say, "I can do this, and, by all that's holy, I am going to do it. Others no more able than I am have succeeded and I will, too." Trust yourself! Let no task, or responsibility frighten you. Take it step by step and you will grow stronger as you go ahead.

WHY DON'T WE REALIZE our heart's desire? Because, second, we do not see that it has to come from withi nourselves and not from the outside. No manipulating of external circumstances is going to make us succeed until we first conquer things on the inside. Remember Emerson's words: "That only which we have within, can we see without. If we meet no gods, it is because we harbor none. If there is grandeur in you, you will find grandeur in porters and sweeps. He only is rightly immortal, to whom all things are immortal." Powers locked within us have to be released and then we can change the external conditions and make them conform to our will. How often do we hear some one say, "I didn't think I had in me to do this." External events are controlled and determined by the release from within us of endowments and abilities and these in turn change things around us.

Third, no one ever realized his heart's desire without daily, constant goals. There was a Greek Proverb:

"No good e'er comes of leisure purposeless;
And Heaven ne'er helps the man who will not act."

Make this analysis of your life. Say to yourself here and now, "What three things do I most want to happen more than anything else"? We think very carefully and determine what we most want and then put them down on paper and look at them. Then we do something else. Ask ourselves this: "What three things must I change in my life before these three secret hopes can be realized"? There they are: the goals we seek and the things which prevent the realization of those goals. Then we go to work on those obstructions to our heart's desire and if we do not give up but drive ahead, these are sure to disappear. But we must have goals! It is a good thing to list the goals at the start of the year, for example, and compare them each month and have them before us all the time. We will not fail unless we want to fail. But we concur with Stevenson:

"Oh, for faith and strength to win
Every battle we begin!
Oh, for patience to put through Every task we plan to do!"

BUT WHAT IF WE SHOULD FAIL—there is that chance, of course. Life, despite all our bravest effort and strongest act of will, does not work out as we may always want it.

"But what if I fail in my purpose here?
It is but to keep the nerves at strain,
To dry one's eyes and laugh at a fall,
And baffled get up and begin again,
So the chase takes up one's life, that's all."

But when we fret and complain and make ourselves perpetually miserable, grow embittered, let life's sweetness turn sour, so think only of ourselves as to injure others around us—what good does all this serve? Does it ever build anything solid—this negative, maiming attitude of ours? Aren't we going down hill rapidly when we indulge in it? And, too, isn't it really closing the outlet with which the Creative Mind may have a chance to express itself in us? What chance, moreover, does serenity have in our life? The positive, brave souls put that first on their list. When we are serene in our life—and is there truly any fruit of old age more precious than that?—we have the chance for God's peace to flow in and through us. We have something which outer fortunes cannot disturb but which makes all of life worthwhile. We are free! —when we have achieved serenity.

But the other point is what is crucially important for us. So much of our future we can control ourselves. We are not victims of fate as the Hindus believe themselves to be. Enormous reserves are locked in each of us waiting to be used. We will not sit down supinely, resign ourselves to any fate, and allow anything to happen to us. Rather we will see what we want to bring to pass and believe with all our strength in ourselves; use all the help which God will so abundantly give us; and thus realize our heart's desire!

THANKSGIVING TO ALMIGHTY GOD

In a very short time, please God, thanksgivings will be offered in all our churches for complete victory over the Nazi terror, with prayers for speedy victory over the aggressors in the Pacific. Let our prayer be for God's help and guidance for our Nation and our Allies that we may use the Victory aright, that America and the British Commonwealth and all the peace-loving nations may cooperate as truly for the maintenance of peace as they have for the prosecution of the war, that such International Organization shall be established as shall make impossible another such war as this, and that we as a nation may do all that is in our power to help make this a better world, a World of Peace and Brotherhood and Economic Justice for all, a World worthy of the sacrifice of those from our own land, from the British Commonwealth, and from all over the World, who have given their lives for Right and Freedom.

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

SLAVERY AND FREEDOM. By Nicolas Berdyaev. Scribners, New York, 1944. 268 pages. $2.75.

The name of Nicolas Berdyaev is deservedly distinguished in the field of philosophy of religion. This latest book by the great Russian Orthodox thinker deals principally with the problems of personality. Berdyaev's thesis (which is reminiscent of Dostoyevsky's Legend of the Grand Inquisitor) seems to be that man is afraid of freedom and seeks to enclose himself. And yet man yearns for freedom, and this tension is at the basis of human life. Personality is identified with freedom, impersonality with slavery. This slavery results from what Berdyaev calls "objectivization," or the ascendancy of anything external to the person. Man's personality can thus be enslaved by the state, by the church, by philosophy, by sex, by social consciousness, even, says Berdyaev, by man's idea of God, though by the latter he seems to mean false ideas of God. This position the author defends as "personalism."

It must be observed that there is much valuable truth in this most stimulating book. Berdyaev's deep appreciation of the values of personality is sorely needed in this materialistic and mechanistic age. But the position is vulnerable in that it is likely to dissolve into a mere subjectivism. Perhaps Berdyaev, in his consuming passion for the freedom of the personality, forgets that the tension between personality and these various external "enslaving factors" such as church, state, and society is the real source of creativeness in the individual personality.

This book is a very rich diet, full of strong meat, but it will be appreciated by the really thoughtful reader.

WHAT A MAN CAN BELIEVE. By James D. Smart. Westminster Press. $2.00.

Here is another excellent volume of theology for the layman, written in a clear style, full of profound insights, and sure to be helpful. The author is the minister of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Peterborough, Ontario, and he writes from a Calvinist point of view. He deals with the same major topics as Pittenger in THE CHRISTIAN WAY IN A MODERN WORLD, or Whale in CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE, or my own WHAT WE CAN BELIEVE. But whereas Pittenger is a "liberal Catholic," and Whale is a "traditional Protestant," Smart is a "Biblical realist," who seeks the basis of all doctrines in the New Testament. He has avoided all the paraphenalia of scholarship, and there are no footnotes, no bibliography, and no index. The book is meant to be read through as a continuous story, but "there can be no conclusion to this book unless it has failed as a presentation of the Christian faith. . . . The questions remain open for the writer and for the reader. If we let them close this side of the grave, it means we have closed our minds to God." (p. 251).

Editor's Note

Sensing the importance of post-war recruiting for the ministry, we are privileged to publish this very fine statement by the Archbishop of Canterbury. This statement has been issued through our own Church's Committee on the Post-War ministry.

Man's Highest Calling

One of the most urgent problems before the Church today is the recruiting of men for the Ministry. If its work is to be efficiently carried on and if it is to exert an effective influence upon the post-war reconstruction of the national life, it is essential that an adequate supply of men duly qualified to serve God and their fellows in the Ministry of the Church should be forthcoming. At the present time the number of men being ordained is inevitably decreasing; should the war continue for any length of time the supply of ordinands will almost entirely cease; it is of the utmost importance that it should begin to flow again at the earliest possible moment after the cessation of hostilities.

But of even greater importance than the number of ordinands is their quality. It cannot be denied that the vitality of the Church and the effectiveness of its work depend to a large extent upon the sincerity, the devotion, and the capacity of its clergy. It is, therefore, essential that those ordained after the war should be at least of such a standard as would fit them to play a responsible part in any other calling. Such men as fall below that standard should not be admitted to the Ministry.

We need to recruit the best type of men and we can confidently appeal to them because the Ministry is almost the only vocation in which a man is free to employ all his gifts to the full in service of God and of his fellowmen. We believe that there are in the Forces today many men of real ability who, if they had a vision of the opportunity for service and leadership which the Ministry provides, would offer themselves for ordination. It is to be hoped that between now and the end of the war it will be possible to build up from among them a body of carefully selected men who will be ready to proceed to colleges and theological seminaries, having in the meantime undertaken such preliminary studies as may be possible under service conditions.

The responsibility for finding the right men and encouraging them to consider whether God may not be calling them to the Ministry, as well as for discouraging the obviously unsuitable, rests very largely upon those who are serving as chaplains of the Forces. For their guidance we suggest the following points should be borne in mind in this very responsible task of helping a man to discover if he has a true vocation or not:

1. In considering a man as a possible candidate for ordination we should look first for evidence of the reality of his own faith in God. His convictions, if sincere, will find expression in worship, and in a serious regard for God's law in the ordering of his own moral life. No man who fails to bear witness to God in either of these respects should be seriously considered. Generally speaking, the man should be known and respected as a practising Christian by the better sort of his fellows, while he is known and valued by his superiors for faithfulness in the way he does his job. "A bad soldier" should be at once disqualified, however "devout"; the opinion of his superiors on this point should be obtained and weighed. It is just here that the layman's opinion is really valuable.

2. Not every enthusiastic communicant and good-living man, however, is a suitable candidate for Holy Orders. That vocation normally presupposes certain special aptitudes:

Intelligence. It should be recognized that the service of the Church today requires in her ministry an average of intellectual ability above, rather than below, that of e. g., doctors or solicitors. Intelligence, however, is essentially the power of understanding: it involves capacity for reasoning, clearly and consecutively, but it is neither exclusively or invariably to be found in unusually "clever" or learned persons. A rough estimate can usually be formed by noting a man's interests, tastes in reading, topics of conversation, etc.

Promise of pastoral capacity and power of leadership. Normally, the ordinand should possess a manifest interest in men as men, and some real ability to get on with people of varying types. The parson's job is concerned with persons, not things. This pastoral capacity may be apparent in the ordinary ways of true friendship as well as in the more noticeable signs of real leadership.

Devotion, i. e., readiness for sacrifice. What is in question here is not a matter of the man's natural endowment or constitution, but of the surrender of his own will in love. Life in the Services will normally provide its own tests of practical unselfishness. Devotion is no substitute for intelligence, or force of character: but these things without devotion are, in a priest, ultimately useless

All Need Christian Education

By JAMES L. KRAFT

*Chairman of the Board, Kraft Cheese Company, and Acting President of the International Council of Religious Education.

Note: The following statements were written at the request of the International Council of Religious Education, Chicago, endorsing the fourteenth annual continent-wide observance of Religious Education Week, September 24 to October 1:

I BELIEVE IN Christian education. It is possible that some other nation might survive without it, but our nation as it was conceived, will not. God with His infinite knowledge and foresight, arranged from the beginning that people seeking freedom should occupy this land. When oppression became unbearable, God-inspired people came from other lands and occupied this continent and established the great fundamental of religious freedom as the cardinal principle of Government. To understand God's purpose for our individual lives, requires that we study, be educated, know His will as revealed in the Old and New Testament.

The logical place for such an education is the church school. I believe in old people going to Sunday school because they find there Christian companionship and the solace of God's word. I believe in the middle-aged attending Sunday school because they will find there in the study of the weekly lessons a sure guide to right living. I believe in young people going to Sunday school because at the beginning of their career they need the inspiration of the teaching of Jesus to prevent them from making grave and serious mistakes.

I believe in children going to Sunday school because Jesus said, "Suffer the little children to come unto Me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

THE CHURCH TURNS TO ITS TEACHERS

By FRANCES DUNLAP HERON

Written for the joint committee on "Mission to Christian Teachers" of the International Council of Religious Education and the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

ONCE THERE WAS A CHURCH with a building fund, a lighted bulletin board, and a conscientious minister who always stopped preaching promptly at twelve o'clock. But among the many empty pews at morning worship were those of the Sunday school teachers.

Once there was a church that was having such a hard time keeping Sunday school teachers because everybody was so busy with war jobs. The officers agreed it didn't seem like the same old church either, with so many members moving away and "those strangers" moving in.

Once there was a church with a decreasing Sunday school attendance. So many boys and girls dropped out just when they got to high school. So many children didn't attend because their mothers and fathers didn't.

In 1944 there are churches like these in New York, in Los Angeles, in San Antonio, in Sunnyville. Their ministers and church school superintendents asked their state councils of churches and religious education and their denominational executives, "What are we going to do about it?"

The question focused on the International Council of Religious Education and on the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, the cooperative agencies of the Protestant churches. So it was that representatives of the United Christian Education Advance (an International Council project) and of the Federal Council Department of Evangelism got together and decided something could be done about it in a

National Mission to Christian Teachers

This planning committee discovered that the underlying trouble with all these churches is the same: their members, their church school teachers and their pupils need a voice within them urging, "My life belongs to God! Jesus showed me how to use it. Following Him and leading others to Him is the most important thing in the world today—for it can save the world!"

Would not such an attitude fill the empty pews, hold the high school youth, make Sunday school teaching exciting and momentous?

True, the United Christian Education Advance already has made progress in improving teaching skill and methods, in approaching some of the 15,000,000 American boys and girls who receive no religious instruction through no fault of their own. But the spirit of evangelism has not yet sufficiently gripped the great majority of the two and a quarter million lay teachers of the land.

Because the church school, as the educational agency of the church, is the natural trainer for church membership and Christian social responsibility, the planners realized that this new vigor must spring from Sunday school teachers with a fire in their souls along with well-prepared lessons in their hands.

Educational and evangelistic leaders of the different denominations agreed, therefore, that the place to start an evangelistic movement is in the church school teaching staff. They agreed, further, that only by acting together, as the forces of Christ in the world today, could the denominations hope to reach all the spiritually hungry people in New York, in Los Angeles, in San Antonio, in Sunnyville.

Accordingly, they have planned 32 three-day Missions to Christian Teachers to be held in different parts of the United States during October and November—to put that prodding voice within the hearts of church school teachers.

State Leaders Will Talk It Over

National teams of six or seven men and women—specialists in children's work, youth work, adult work, and leadership training, as well as prominent pastors, evangelistic workers and seminary teachers—will travel around the country holding three-day conferences.

In the daytime, they will hold state-wide sessions for denominational and interdenominational state workers. Each such "State Conference on Evangelism through the Church School" will select prayerfully the best ways of carrying the message of educational evangelism to every church school teacher and officer in the state. The conferees may plan Missions to Teachers in local communities throughout the state, or Sunday conventions to wake up the whole church membership of a town, or leadership training classes and schools for church workers, or procedures by which pastors can qualify and guide their own teachers for evangelistic roles.

Each of these state conferences will be organized by the state council or by a committee of state denominational representatives.

Teachers Will Take It Over

In each city where a state conference is held, a local mission committee representing congregations of the city will organize a Mission to Christian Teachers of that locality. On the three days of the state conference, the same national team of specialists will hold late afternoon and evening sessions for this local mission. Teachers, officers and pastors will ask, "How can we reach the unreached in our community?" and "How can we win those we reach and teach to Christ?" The national and state leaders will try to inspire, instruct and mobilize this nucleus of local workers into a model specimen unit of the movement which they hope will be copied throughout the state.

On the third evening, the local workers of each denomination will hold a supper conference to discuss methods and materials. After this will come a closing mass meeting at which all local workers will share in a commitment service, pledging: "We will make our church shine with something stronger than a lighted bulletin board!"

PRESENT GENERATION INADEQUATELY TAUGHT

By CAPTAIN J. V. CLAYPOOL
Chaplain, U. S. Naval Training Station, Naval Operating Base, Norfolk, Virginia

Every living, breathing person is entitled to the solid foundation of character which comes from knowing the universal doctrines of the Christian gospel. The war has revealed in alarming fashion the inadequate deposit of Christian teaching which we have given the present generation. Even more, the war has portrayed our acquiescence to the total disregard of religious teaching in many areas of our country.

The most glaring fact concerning the religious education of the present decade is that we do not have enough of it and that it does not go deep enough. I have been asked by men on shipboard, facing combat, if there is not a verse in the Bible which they can turn to, place their hand on, and pray, and have bleeding stop. I have had brought to me a printed prayer which carried the statement, "Anyone who says this prayer will never meet a violent death, a death by accident, a death by drowning, nor a death by the activity of the enemy."

On Sunday aboard ship, I preached a sermon which dealt wholly with the relation of God to this war and to the men who are fighting it; not man's activity but our Heavenly Father's activity in combat. It was a doctrinal sermon, rather heavy theology, though interpreted in understandable speech. A number of men said it was just what they needed to know and wanted to hear. A few British Chaplains and some other of our Americans have told me of similar experiences.

In war time when people value life and virtue the more and money and comfort the less, they should be privileged to have all the benefit which the teaching of religion can bring. I hope that the observance of Religious Education Week this year will be more widespread, more meaningful and have a greater carry-over than in any previous year.

HAVEN

A pinch of salt, a moonbeam through a crack, a look in on the sick abed, a penny candle in the dark.

Not a blade of withered grass so long as the small rain falls.

Moses be thanked for his simple words.

Cup your hands for small rain falling; let your speech be as fresh and gentle as the dew; may your love for God and the blessedness of His nearness drop from you as the small rain upon all who have dried a bit and would be growing again.

Go from this hour apart with "small rain" in your pocket damp.

God will use it in parched places and in dusty nooks and it will turn into a blessing. God grant "small rain" upon us all may fall this day.

or harmful (cf. I Corinthians 13). Therefore a man's motives in seeking ordination should be carefully studied, remembering always that he may be largely unconscious of them himself. Why does he want to be ordained? Weigh his reply well, noting any unconscious indications it may give of e. g. ambition, self-importance, of mere escapism. On the other hand, some of the best men are often diffident about themselves, and where there is strong reason to suppose from knowledge of the man concerned that he has in him great gifts which could be used in the Ministry of the Church it may be quite legitimate to say to him "Is there any reason why you should not be ordained?" leaving him to answer the question in that form rather than the other.

3. In all this, regard should be had to potentiality rather than to actuality. The chaplain's recollection of his own state of mind and soul before he went to his university or theological seminary will probably prepare him to find that a candidate's ideas and desires at this stage are often largely unformulated. Too much weight, therefore, must not be attached to a crude, or even an unsatisfactory, reply to a particular question: it is more important to discover whether the man can really see the point when it is put to him. Similarly with regard to intellectual ability. Less importance ought to be attached to the examinations that a man has already passed, than to the use he has made of whatever opportunities he has enjoyed, regarded as a guide to his potentiality: and, above all, to evidence (or the absence of it) of a serious interest in the real meaning of things.

No Speed Limit

Each autumn, as the birds wing their way southward, we marvel at the insnstinct that guides them on their journey, and speculate as to how fast they fly.

Hunters tell "tall tales' about the speed of the duck that got away, and there is some ground for their stories when we know that canvasbacks and teal are known to fly at 50 to 55 miles an hour. A pheasant's best speed has been ascertained to be 40 miles an hour, while a partridge travels at about 25 miles an hour.

Birds of prey, such as eagles and hawks, have great flying speed, but not for sustained flights over long distances.

More data has been obtained on the speed of homing pigeons than almost any other birds. As a result of the many races held among homing pigeons it has been proved that their best speed is not more than a mile a minute. Pigeons can rise almost vertically and attain their maximum speed quickly.

The hummingbird, however, has real pickup. High-speed cameras have shown that he flies froh a standing start at 45 miles an hour, which means that his wings vibrate at the rate of 55-75 beats a second. Perhaps the fastest fliers of all the birds are, as their name suggests, the swifts. So streamlined are these birds that even their nostrils point backwards. An Asiatic species has been estimated to fly at the rate of possibly 220 miles an hour.

Such excessive speed for such small creatures would be incredible were it not for the fact that they are built for speed and the breast muscles of a bird are 100 times more powerful, relatively, than those of a man..

HOW TITO LEARNED TO SING

Tito, a feathered visitor, came to me whenever his foster parents went vacationing. Living in an apartment house, I never assumed the responsibility of a pet, but having one on borrowed time intrigued me.

On one of these visits Tito's dejected mood contrasted sharply with the gayness of his body—a ball of yellow fluff. I tried to tempt him by giving him the special song food seed. Nothing lured him from his apparent gloom. And if a canary can revel in gloom, Tito did just that. For months he had been in the doldrums.

While I was playing on the piano one morning, I drifted into Schumann's "Bird as Prophet". Suddenly Tito joined me in an outburst as if all the months of pent-up song were released. I played the piece over and over with Tito continuing his obbligato. Naturally I rejoiced to feel that my music had been an inspiration to the little canary.

However, my elation was short lived. The next morning Tito poured forth his exuberant song with like gusto and fervor when I manipulated the vacuum cleaner instead of the piano. Often after this he would put his head down, pick up a song seed, then lift his head, trilling a few notes, take a few more seeds and again raise his head in song.

From that time on his singing became almost continuous, much to the satisfaction of his foster parents when they returned to claim him.—Caroline K. Fuller, in Our Dumb Animals.

THE NEXT DOOR KITTEN

Sally Sue sat on a bench close to the hedge between her house and the house next door. She was knitting a scarf for her doll Isabel. Grandmother had taught her how to put a loop of the yarn over the hook and to draw one loop through the other and now stitch by stitch she had made the scarf an inch long.

She knit away industriously so as not to think how lonesome she was. They had only lived here a week. It was not so bad the first few days, for they were busy getting unpacked and settled. Every now and then as Sally Sue looked out of the window she saw a little girl next door, playing with a gray kitten, but most of the time there was no little girl in sight. Sally Sue wondered what she was doing to keep her so busy that she only came out once in a while. She would have liked to know her neighbor, and how she would have liked to play with the kitten! As she thought about it, she gave an impatient tug at her knitting, and several stitches came off the needle and her ball of yarn rolled under the leaves of the hedge.

She was busy getting back the lost stitches on the needle, when she felt a tug at the ball of yarn, and there was the gray kitten from next door, lying on his back and holding the yarn in his feet and kicking at it with all his might.

"Oh, you cute kitten!" cried Sally Sue, as she picked him up. "I suppose I must carry you home. But how I would like to play with you this afternoon!"

She hurried into the next yard with the kitten, but although she rang the bell over and over, no one answered. The house seemed all shut up.

"I can have you for a little while anyway," she said to the gray kitten. "I hope they stay away a long, long time."

First Sally Sue and the kitten had a game of romp all over the yard; then when the kitten was tired and lay down, Sally Sue lifted him into her doll carriage. Carefully she spread the blanket over him, and as he fell asleep she wheeled him up and down the walk and around the block, and home again.

As she came home again after the third time around the block, she saw the little girl who lived next door coming along with her father and mother, and she was crying.

"I wonder what is the matter," thought Sally Sue, "perhaps she thinks the kitten is lost. I must carry him over."

She slowly wheeled the carriage over into the yard next door. "Here is your kitten," she said. "I wanted him dreadfully, but of course he belongs to you, and when he came over to my yard I just borrowed him."

The little girl next door stopped her tears. "Would you really like him?" she asked. "Oh, I would be so glad if you would take him. You see, we are going to move way out to California, and I could not take Smoky with me. We have just been to the Animal Rescue League to arrange for them to take him tomorrow when we go."

"Oh, please, let me have him!" said Sally Sue. "Mother has been promising me that when we get all settled I should have a kitten. I will take good care of Smoky, and if you wish I will write you and tell you about him sometimes."

"Oh, I would love that!" said the little girl next door, happily. "Now we can telephone the League not to come for him. I am so glad he is going to stay with you. As soon as we are settled in California I shall write to you and give you my address. Then you can tell me all about him."

And Smoky, waking up, purred happily as if he, too, was glad to have such a nice little playmate, and he never knew how very, very near he came to being an Animal League Cat.—P. R. Wade, in Sunday School Times.

To Symbolize Christian Fellowship

World Wide Communion To Be Observed October 1

New York, September 8—In churches the world over, in army camps and on naval vessels millions of civilians and service men and women will join on Sunday, October 1, in the observance of World Wide Communion.

Sponsored for the fifth consecutive year in this country by the Federal Council of Churches and abroad by the World Council of Churches with the cooperation of the International Missionary Council, the event will "demonstrate and symbolize in a time of division and conflict, the unbroken Christian fellowship in every church around the world."

According to Dr. Jesse M. Bader, Executive Secretary of the Federal Council's Department of Evangelism, virtually every mission field abroad is cooperating in Communion plans. On the basis of orders for literature a 25 per cent increase in attendance is expected this year. Letters from chaplains planning services in army camps and on battle ships point to a record attendance among the service men and women in all parts of the world.

In this country union communion services are not contemplated, but rather each local congregation will seek to have its members present at its own communion service. National promotion for the observance aims at achieving 100 per cent attendance at the services in the local churches, and at stimulating increased church attendance throughout the year.

In commenting editorially on World Wide Communion, the Federal Council Bulletin stated in the September issue:

"As anxiety and sorrow come to more and more homes an increasing number of people are being driven back to the ultimate source of inward security. The circle of the fellowship of suffering has been greatly enlarged during the last year. . . . Christians of all lands find their peace and strength in the Sacrament of the Holy Communion more than in any other experience. That is where they find both comfort and the understanding of God's mercy and redeeming power through the suffering and death of Christ."

READJUSTMENTS FACE RETURNING SERVICEMEN

New York, N. Y.—Servicemen returning from overseas duty are likely to find themselves and their families mental strangers.

This is the opinion of C. Leslie Glenn, who, as chaplain of the USNR Midshipmen's School, New York City, has come into direct contact with thousands of men home on leave. Help in this critical situation, he believes, must come for the most part from the Church, the USO and other similarly well-equipped bodies.

"Against the numbers of men whose horizon has been broadened by overseas duty," he explained in an interview, "there are countless more whose judgment of nations and people has been, and is being molded by purely personal and highly limited experiences. For instance, men who live month after month on a ship carrying material to our allies see the Lend-Lease as only a one-way agreement. Erroneously, though quite understandably, they conclude that the United States is shouldering the whole burden of supply and they form their opinion of what the peace settlement should be on this conclusion. Others base their ideas on their personal disapproval or approval of a handful of Germans or Japs with whom they have come into superficial contact.

"Despite the fine educational efforts made in behalf of the men in uniform, overseas duty gives them little opportunity to read newspapers, to listen to the radio or to talk with others than their own service-mates. Consequently their views on world affairs is confined to these pathetically narrow experiences and naturally, they accept them as universal truths. They return home veritable Rip Van Winkles to find their families with broad and up-to-date ideas which they neither understand nor find sympathetic."

The chaplains can do a great deal for the men in camps and overseas, declared Chaplain Glenn, whereas at home, the task is largely in the hands of the civilian clergy who can operate through church organizations or the USO.

"The USO conducts service wives clubs," he continued, "and a great deal of good can start in these groups. The women need help in understanding their men, just as much as the men need help. The local ministers should address these women and teach them, in a practical way, one of the greatest aids in this problem—patience. And the time to do that is now—not when the problem is aggravated beyond remedy."

SIGNIFICANT CONFERENCES OF CLERGY AND LAITY

Albany, N. Y.—Two of the most fruitful conferences ever held in the Diocese, one for clergy and one for laymen, each extending through several days and so providing valued personal contacts and creating desired fellowship, were conducted at St. Agnes School the first week in September.

The Clergy Conference began Wednesday and lasted through Friday. There was a celebration of Holy Communion in the morning and Compline at night, with lecture and discussion periods between led by the Rev. Theodore O. Wedel, Ph. D., warden of the College of Preachers, the Very Rev. Lawrence Rose, S. T. D., dean of Berkeley Divinity School, the Rev. Otis R. Rice, chaplain of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, and the Rev. C. W. Jones, provincial field secretary of the Department of Promotion. Topics discussed by the first three speakers were: The Nature of the Church, The Worship of

Attack Freedom Of Religion

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from Latin America

Montevideo, Uruguay—A subtle, concerted assault against religious freedom in Latin America is under way.

From Mexico to Argentina the fires of religious persecution smolder and at times burst into small flame.

No major conflagration has occurred, but there have been many signs of a Roman Catholic clerical movement aimed at curtailing religious liberty.

Protestant minorities in Latin America bear the brunt of these restrictive efforts.

Tents of Protestant missionaries have been burned.

Indians have been incited to acts of violence.

At least one incident of burning a Protestant Bible has been reported.

Tense Struggle

Peru has been the scene of a particularly tense struggle between advocates of full religious freedom and a hierarchy intent on limiting this freedom in the effort to regain a monopoly lost early in this century.

The dispute reached the floor of the Peruvian Congress, where a group of liberal legislators won their point in defense of Protestant missionaries and the granting of new visas to them.

In Argentina, the present military dictatorship and the Roman Catholic hierarchy are repeating a Fascist pattern made familiar in Spain during the Civil War that brought the Franco regime to power.

For years the Argentine hierarchy had agitated for a return of Roman Catholic instruction in the public schools. Former civilian Governments steadily refused to wipe out a reform that dated back to the separation of Church and State in Argentina.

"Moral Instruction"

In a decree signed December 31, 1943, the teaching of Roman Catholicism is made compulsory in "all public schools of primary, elementary, secondary, and special education", as well as in "high schools and special subsidiaries of the National Universities" and "common schools administered by the National Council of Education", with the exception that parents who object may have their children excused from regular religious classes. These children, however, must take "moral instruction" instead.

Teachers of these classes are appointed by the Government, subject to approval by ecclesiastical authorities. Textbooks must have Church and Government approval.

This decree is described as a complete reversal of policies followed toward religious instruction by the former Argentine Republic.

Such prizes for the hierarchy explain its collaboration with Fascist military forces now in control of several countries and plotting to seize power in many more.

"Clerical Stranglehold"

In Peru the pattern has been made unmistakably plain.

A well-qualified observer who went into Peru after an absence of two years says that he found a "clerical stranglehold" on his return.

The drift of clerical thinking is shown in a pastoral letter issued December 18, 1943, by the Peruvian hierarchy. Directed against "Protestant propaganda", it complained that Methodists arrived in 1877, followed by other Protestant sects. These and anti-Roman Catholic societies "refused to rest till they had succeeded by specious pretexts in inducing our legislative chambers first to mutilate and later to repeal the Fourth Article of our Constitution, which constituted a sacred bulwark of our religious belief and a powerful restraint against sectarian audacity."

The Fourth Article had protected a Roman Catholic monopoly by declaring Roman Catholicism to be the state religion to the exclusion of all other forms of worship. It was replaced by a guarantee of religious freedom.

The Peruvian pastoral letter concludes with directions for combating Protestant missionaries who are depicted as "supplying the incendiary torch of their heretical blasphemy, . . . belching forth upon the ignorant populace . . . the whole content of their falsehood."

Issue Intensified

The issue, however, is by no means limited to Peru. It has been intensified by the sending of new Protestant missionaries to South America after the war had curtailed their other fields abroad.

A phenomenon widely observed by Protestant and Roman Catholic writers is the declining influence of the hierarchy among the people in many parts of South America.

This trend is seen by close observers as an explanation for recent clerical efforts to stem the tide of liberal religious thought. An authority listed the three foes of democracy in South America in this order: 1. The Roman Catholic hierarchy. 2. The military caste. 3. Large landholders.

A principal target has been the Protestant missionary.

The controversy reached high ecclesiastical ranks when the Roman Catholic Archbishops and Bishops of the United States in a meeting attended by 102 members of the hierarchy issued a public statement condemning efforts of Protestant missionaries in Latin America. That was in November, 1942.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America promptly replied.

The Roman Catholic efforts to exclude Protestant missionaries from South America has led to criticism of the State Department for allegedly yielding to pressure. Some Protestants have reported difficulty in obtaining passports while new Roman Catholic missionaries were said to be going through without hindrance.

The shortage of priests in South America is a major concern of the hierarchy. Figures for 1942 showed the Protestant United States with one Roman Catholic priest for every 655 Roman Catholics. In proportion to the total United States population, there were 3,637 persons to every Roman Catholic priest.

Even Peru could muster only one Roman Catholic priest for every 5,909 members of its predominantly Roman Catholic population. Argentina had one to 8,571, and Brazil one to 9,528.

Gaps in Ranks

Young South American men do not join the priesthood in sufficient numbers to keep the ranks filled.

Lately, several orders of Roman Catholic missionaries from the United States have been sent into remote parts of Bolivia and other countries.

The Roman Catholics claim that South America has been converted to Christianity and thus has ceased to be a proper field for missionary activity by Protestants. There has been opposition especially to missionary activity in cities. Rome's expressed view is that missionaries should go to pagan lands, that most of South America has been converted to Roman Catholicism, so no longer is pagan.

the conference and in attendance were the Rt. Rev. Robert C. Jett, D. D., Retired Bishop, twenty-three clergymen and two laymen; one of these soon to be ordained to the diaconate.

Several of the ministers in the diocese were unable to be present on account of illness or for other reasons.

The conference was in the form of lectures by Dr. Howe, each followed by a discussion period. He took up various problems arising from time to time in the work of a parish priest in relation to baptism, confirmation classes, consultations before and after marriages, visiting the sick, family life, etc. Of especial interest and value was Dr. Howe's discussion of these important matters from the point of view of a trained psychologist.

Also the conference provided an excellent opportunity for the clergy of the diocese to become well acquainted with the Virginia Episcopal School and its Headmaster, Dr. George L. Barton, Jr., and several members of the faculty who were in residence in advance of the opening of the fall session. The school was opened in 1916 with the Rev. Robert Carter Jett, previously at Emmanuel Church, Staunton, as its founder and first Rector and Dr. Jett continued as the head of the school until March, 1920, when he was consecrated as the first Bishop of the newly organized Diocese of Southwestern Virginia. Thereafter, during his eighteen and a half years as Bishop, he was ex-officio chairman of the Trustees of the School and this fine diocesan institution continues to be one of his chief interests.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Walk with holiness in unholy streets."

"I will hold brave loneliness as a shield against despair."

"Love has the longest reach in the world, and the strongest pull."

It takes the infinitely Great One to know me, the finitely small one.—Sel.

If with humble and contrite hearts we have sought admission into His presence and at length found entrance into the secret places of the tabernacle of the Most High, then what earthly power, what diabolical force can penetrate to that transcendent height and pluck us out of the protection of His sovereign hand? Can tribulation? Can death? No, in all these things we are more than conquerors, not in our own power, but in His.—Dr. W. M. Horton.

As a panacea for every despair, follow Jesus from the Upper Room to Gethsemane, from Gethsemane to the judgment hall, from the judgment hall to Calvary. Catch His spiritual poise, His magnificent courage, and no matter what may face you in life, you will be saying with Him, "Rise, let us be going."—Col. George O. Fallis.

The providence of Heaven rests upon the world as does the sunlight upon a field, but many human beings neither see nor comprehend it. We know only that harassed and stricken mortals suddenly grasp the reality of its presence.—Selected.

"The grandest thing I have ever seen was an airman with a broken back who will never walk again grinning at a fine athlete's perfect body."—From an American writer.

Are there not two points in the adventure of a diver? One, when, a beggar, he prepares to plunge; one, when, a prince, he rises, with his pearl.—Browning.

The quieter voices are too often unheard. Yet at last, when passion is spent the work of reconstruction is eventually done by the people who have had the strength and vision to seek the truth and arrive at conclusions with wisdom, justice and charity.—Hon. Adolf Berle.

"God forgive those of us who are parents who have failed to emphasize the church as privilege, who have failed to witness to the joy of faith."

REVERENCE

We are so taken up with creature life,
Its peaceful business and its warring strife,
That we omit the reverence we owe
To Him, Whom through His Works and Word we know.

Therefore henceforth let us His Presence seek,
And in the Sacred Pages hear Him speak;
Then with faith's upward look and heartfelt cry
Own that in Christ we are to God brought nigh.

Let us not give worship one day alone,
And other times neglect God on the throne,
Rather let reverence mark every day,
Listening, and replying, as we pray.

400TH ANNIVERSARY OF TRANSLATION OF LITANY

Editor Southern Churchman:

This year, 1944, is the 400th anniversary of the translation of the Litany into English, and its public use in England. The king had directed Archbishop Cranmer, the Archbishop of Canterbury, to prepare a Litany in English, and on June 11, 1544, the king sent this Litany to Parliament with the command that it be used in every city and town, parish and church in England.

This was the first beginning in modern England of public worship in language understood by the people, and it was followed five years later, on Whit Sunday, 1549, by the introduction of the first Prayer Book in English of the Church of England.

This event, the first translation of the Litany, was commemorated in England on June 11, 1944, but no public notice of this anniversary has as yet been taken in the American Episcopal Church. According to a contemporary chronicle St. Luke's Day, October 18, 1544, was noted as the day when the Litany in English was first sung in St. Paul's Cathedral in London. In view of the fact that we have permitted the earlier date to pass without public recognition I am eager to see Sunday, October 15, 1944, as the nearest Sunday to St. Luke's Day, celebrated generally as the 400th anniversary of the use of the Litany in English.

I feel very strongly that such a celebration will not be merely the anniversary of a historic event in the dim past, but will help us all to bring to mind more clearly the meaning and value, and the great importance in the Christian Church, of our common worship of prayer and praise. It has been said by a recent lecturer that a service in a foreign language can never serve to bring people together in a sense of common and united worship in a corporate capacity. This I think is profoundly true; and for that reason the introduction for the first time of a Litany, or form of prayer in English, which all the people could understand, and in which all could join, was the first step in the development of a sense of fellowship in corporate worship which is one of the profound values brought into the religious life of England by the Protestant Reformation.

This sense of fellowship in corporate worship is vastly deepened by the realization that as the various services of the Prayer Book are used by congregations of the Anglican Communion all over the world, and in many languages, the fellowship of worship widens out from the devotion of people gathered in the visible association of one congregation into a great circling roll of worship arising from congregations in every clime, as the usual hour of morning worship passes round the world.

This realization of the wider meaning of public corporate worship, each in his own language in which he was born, but voicing together the same aspirations and expressions of praise and thanksgiving, should be a very real help to Christian people in enabling them to formulate a clearer conception of the Holy Catholic Church, which is, as we say in the Creed, "The Communion of Saints," and in the Holy Communion, "the mystical body of Christ, which is the blessed company of all faithful people."

The Presiding Bishop's "Plan for Action" for the year 1944-45, in preparation for which we are now engaged, is stressing various aspects of interracial fellowship as its chief concept, and has included the Fellowship of the Prayer Book as one of its important divisions. Recognizing as I do the great significance of fellowship in common worship as a part of the fellowship of all races in the Holy Catholic Church, I think that the celebration of the 400th anniversary of the first use of the Litany in English will give a great opportunity of stressing the meaning of our fellowship in prayer and in our Prayer Book.

E. Maclaren Brydon.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

NORMAN VINCENT PEALE once told a group of ministers that he began the day with the thought: I am God's Man. The thought, he said, relaxed him and made him conscious of God's power within him to see him through as well as his own inescapable responsibility for standing up straight and tall as God's representative amongst the gaunt slim shadows that picketed the avenues of the day's life. We, too, might say "I am God's man, therefore, today I shall take a walk in the sun and find what it requires to keep upright and true, to keep moving ahead with poise and grace."

Suppose we were to make such a declaration this morning, is there a chance it would help us to combat more successfully the temptations of Saturday? If we spoke the words because they were already a banner of belief waving within, yes. If we had already burned the content of them into thought grooves in our minds, yes. If we had already possessed the good feel of them as caressings of the Holy Spirit in our hearts, yes.

THINK UPON THE PHRASE "I am God's man" and certain positive influences are felt. Even the sound of the words as we speak them aloud snaps us to attention and fills us with an expectant attitude of God's orders as we march through the day: "Halt, double quick, column right" and many other familiar commands which automatically control our movements through long association and practice.

If "I am God's man" today, what does it mean I shall be? Settle down and meditate upon this phrase for a while and see what comes to make it of paramount importance for this instant and of flash value at odd moments of need throughout the day.

First the willing surrender of self to God is indicated, the free giving of control into God's hands, a belonging to Him. This further implies some knowledge of Him and trust in Him. The knowledge may be sketchy and the trust scant but added together they point clearly to a decision to go His way.

Second, it gives the clear impression that since I belong to Him I am responsible to Him for my actions. He holds me accountable for what I do since my every move is in some measure revealing of His power or lack of it. Because of this I am more apt to check what I do against the background of His life in me.

Third, if I really get down to the meat of the phrase, I see it means that God is on my side, or rather that I am on His side; that God is for me, therefore it matters not who is against me. It is possible to believe then with Paul that the powers of darkness can make no impression upon me, no impression at all.

Fourth, since the term "God's Man" reveals a relationship, I am bound by it to keep in touch one with the other. I with Him and He with me. We remain in constant relationship with Him through times apart like this and through recurring incidents of referral to Him all through the day, yes and the hours of the night.

"I AM GOD'S MAN"—say it aloud to yourself. You hear it like a song singing—triumphant of the road He has laid within. It forces you to look up and to stand up, and to face ahead with greater courage and certainty. God will not fail His man. God will stay by his side. No matter what befalls him God will not betray or desert. True identification has produced a oneness of thought and movement and the great and frequent prayer of Jesus for oneness of God and man is accomplished partly or perfectly.

The Years the Locusts Have Eaten

By The Rev. VINCENT C. FRANKS, D. D.,

Text: And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, . . . Joel 2:25.

The prophet Joel lived some five hundred years before Christ, and during his lifetime a scourge of locusts laid waste the land of Judah. They came in solid droves that literally filled the sky. The sound of their coming and the rattling of their wings was like the tumult of chariots. They turned the heat of the day into the chill of night. Their hunger was that of a mighty pestilence, for they ate the bark off the white birch trees, crept into houses and devoured all clothing, swallowed up fields in one great corporate gulp and ate up a nation between two moons. They had eaten up the garden of Eden. Rain was man's only hope of relief for rain destroyed their eggs. Our prophet likened them to a ravaging army and described them in these words:

> Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains. Before their faces the people shall climb the walls like men of war. The land is as the garden of Eden before them. The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. . . . Yea, and nothing shall escape them.

Dreadful was the devastating blight of the locusts, fearful the wastage they caused.

Now Joel had no faith in any man's ability nor any government's ingenuity to restore the blighted land, only God could restore the years that the locust had eaten. All of which has a familiar ring to it for there is a blight on the world today, the scourge of war has laid it waste. My thesis is that only God can restore the years that the locusts have eaten, that man is quite incapable of doing it by himself.

I

The poets have much to say on the subject. Many recent poets, some directly, some indirectly, bombard with devastating shards this popular idea that man in capable of fashioning a jubilant world on the strength of his own initiative. Carl Sandburg writes to the point, though indirectly, in his poem "The People, Yes."

> The czar has eight million men with guns and bayonets,
> Nothing can happen to the czar.
> The czar is the voice of God and shall live forever.
> Turn and look at the forest of steel and cannon
> Where the czar is guarded by eight million soldiers.
> Nothing can happen to the czar!
> They said that for years and in the summer of 1914
> In the Year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Fourteen
> As a portent and assurance they said with owl faces:
> "Nothing can happen to the czar."
> Yet the czar and his bodyguard of eight million vanished.

The might of eight million armed men was insufficient to preserve the throne of the czar.

Or read T. S. Eliot's poem, "The Hollow Men." After the last war there arose a farflung school of disillusioned thinkers. To them civilization had reached an impasse, they despaired of a better world, all was blasphemous hopelessness. The world was "shape without form, shade without color." Men had lost their initiative and "gathered on stony soil in a valley of dying stars." In "The Hollow Men" Eliot epitomized in ironic lines any power of man in himself to build a noble world. He writes of his generation who had lost their lives:

> We are the hollow men
> We are the stuffed men
> Leaning together
> Headpiece filled with straw. Alas!
> Our dried voices, when
> We whisper together
> Are quiet and meaningless
> As wind in dry grass . . .
> Those who have crossed
> With direct eyes, to death's other kingdom
> Remember us—if at all—not as lost
> Violent souls, but only
> As the hollow men
> The stuffed men.
> This is the way the world ends
> This is the way the world ends
> This is the way the world ends
> Not with a bang but a whisper.

Sandburg would have taken a butcher's broom to W. E. Henley and Eliot violently laughed in his face for writing such arrogant nonsense as > I am the master of my fate:

> I am the captain of my soul.

Both those poets, particularly Eliot at the time he wrote "The Hollow Men"—he has changed since—were pessimists; still in their own way, they saw the truth that the prophet Joel saw—that man of himself is unable to happily solve the problems of his world, unable of his own power to restore the years that the locusts have eaten.

There was Adolph Hitler and his clientele of hoodlums who set out in Germany to restore the years that the locusts had eaten, and set out to do it on the strength of their own ingenuity. God was taken to the frontiers of Germany and impolitely bowed out of His own universe. "Good-bye God," they said, "We'll handle this thing ourselves and make our own rules, and, whether You like it or not, build an empire that will last a thousand years."

We are the masters of our fate:
We are captains of our souls.

But having ruled God out of their schemes, made their own rules and rewritten the Sermon on the Mount to suit their own ends, the story of Hitler and his cohorts closes thus:

We are the hollow men
We are the stuffed men
Leaning together
Headpiece filled with straw.
This is the way our world ends . . .
Not with a bang but a whisper.

But coming nearer home, after the last war we in America became imbibed with this idea (it was taught in practically every university in the land) that man of himself and quite independent of God, could restore the years that the locusts had eaten,

We were the masters of our fate:
We were the captains of our souls.

So we played politics in Congress, repudiated our international obligations, drew into an isolationist shell and lived for ourselves alone. It wasn't that we slandered God, we were more respectful than that, we were just indifferent to the divine teachings, made our own rules and tried to "run the show ourselves." We ran it into the spending orgy of the 1920's, ran it into the sullen economic depression of the 1930's, closed our eyes to reality and ran it toward Pearl Harbor. Don't you see that the stars in their courses have always fought against peoples who thrust the divine teachings aside and make their own rules?

This the way their world ends
Not with a bang but a whisper.

I have taken a disproportionate time on this negative side of our thought because it seems necessary in order to try and slay this perpetual universal lie, which many church people unthinkingly accept, that man can brush aside the teaching of Christ, make his own rules and of his own genius happily solve the problems of his world. That gilded lie is shot full of poison for we are not masters of our fate nor captains of our souls, we can't of our own genius restore the years that the locusts have eaten. Behind the dim unknown standeth God behind the shadows, and unless we build on His teachings and follow His rules judgment will strike again, and we be

The hollow men
The stuffed men . . .
Headpiece filled with straw. . . .

II

Now all that may be depressing to some and give the impression that this writer is another dour theologian sounding on the old theme of the depravity of man. Well, taken as a whole, man—which includes the whole human race—Anglo-Saxons, Teutons, Slavs, Asiatics, Negroids, Eskimos; good, bad and indifferent—taken as a whole, man is far from being noble.

But I think we should draw a clear distinction between the general and the particular, between those who try to live by the principles of Christ and those who make their own rules. There is I submit a great gulf fixed between those who live on a pagan's code and those who follow Christ. Jesus Christ said to His followers, "Ye are the salt of the earth." Sinful, yes, (He would have added that); warped by manifold flaws and moles; pinned and wiggling against the pull of unhappy environment and heredity, but for all that "the salt of the earth." When, then, I say that man is bad, but a little higher than the animals, I mean man as a whole, Nazi hoodlums, Hindoo snake charmers, Eskimo whalers, African pigmies, New York Jews, Chicago clubwomen and Christian apostles. Man taken as a whole is not good, in the mass he is greedy, mean, self seeking, boorish, lustful. But at his best, on the Christian level, he is the salt of the earth, kindly, social-minded, lovable spiritual; a sinner, true, but the crest and crown of all created things. When, then, I speak of man and make an estimate of him, I have to make that distinction between the general and the particular, between pagan man and spiritual man.

With that in mind I come to the point of this sermon. And its point is not how can man get back to where he was before the war, but how can man be redeemed? And he cannot be redeemed, saved, liberated, restored, ennobled—call it what you will—by any crack economic schemes nor by the supposed magic of education nor by princely science. Only God can redeem us. We have not the native power to be masters of our own fate or captains of our own souls, for back of everything is the power of God. No one of us could so much as lift a foot from off the ground had not God endowed us with the power to do it, no one of us could head into the wind had not God put flexibility into our limbs and no one of himself, cut loose from the power of God, could dot an "i" or smell the good rich earth. We cannot of ourselves redeem the blight that is in us nor have our rulers in Congress the power to better or even restore the years that the locusts have eaten.

And so it all comes down to this: Germany needs cleansing, or, to phrase it in theological terms, Germany needs to be redeemed. On that we should all agree. The Weimer republic did not cleanse her, neither has Hitler. But further, you need redemption, so do I—to be cleansed from our sins and set in line with the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. And one step further, America needs to be redeemed. We have not the wits nor the genius to redeem ourselves. Here is a blight in all our souls and the more Christian a man is, the more he knows that is true. Wherefore what ever the cure is the cure must be profound. And crack economic schemes and higher education and the blessings of science, much as they will help, are not the basic cure for a world sick to its heart, they do not go deep enough.

Now since man has followed his own rules and tried, disastrously, to "run the show himself," and since that has been going on for numberless centuries, the cure must indeed be profound—strike to the grassroots of human nature. This is God's world, He made it and revealed the principles whereby we can happily solve our problems. We know what those principles are. We may not like the sound of them. I suppose that is as true as anything that has been written here. Many of us have grown up in the sanction of man-made rules, rules that play to our greed, our hatreds, our desire for special privileges, our animal emotions. Here, however, are God's principles. The word "love" comes into them. But do not think of love in terms of softness or sentimentality, rather think of it in terms of strength for love includes justice, a desire to be of assistance, sometimes it includes judgment. Here then are some of the divine principles:

And seeing the multitude Jesus said, Thou

The Presiding Bishop's Message to the Church

AS WE BEGIN our year's effort to go forward in the service which God expects from His Church, I wish to send a word of greeting to all those who have been signed with the sign of the Cross in token that they will continue Christ's faithful soldiers and servants unto their life's end. The success of any effort on the part of the Church to make its service more effective depends upon participation in that service by all of its members. To those who through baptism have been dedicated to God's service, our Lord's words apply, "He that is not with Me is against Me." The greatest obstacle to the establishment of the Kingdom of God in human society is not opposition from without but rather indifference within the Church. Our first concern each year, therefore, should be to have every member a worshipper and a worker.

Indifference within the Church is often due to a failure on the part of those who are interested to communicate through friendly contact and fellowship their interest to those who are lacking in spiritual initiative. Our Lord said to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen the brethren." Our motto for this triennium is "Through world evangelism to world fellowship in Christ." The first application of this principle should be to indifferent brethren. The warning to Timothy, "If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel," applies not only to the supplying of material needs. It has equal reference to our obligation to members of the household of faith. The first duty of a member of the body of Christ is to obey His command, "Feed My sheep." Not only is this a Christian duty but it is a prerequisite to success in presenting Christ to the world as its Saviour. A Church with half of its members lukewarm will not be even half effective in winning the world for Christ. Let us then each year begin our effort of world evangelism by striving to enlist the wholehearted loyal cooperation of every member of the congregation.

I have said above that our first concern should be to have every member a worshipper and a worker. Worship means fellowship with God through His Son, Jesus Christ. In this fellowship we not only experience a great happiness and a surprising development of our own spiritual and moral life, but also we find springing up within ourselves a strong impulse to work. The purpose of this work is to bring others into that same fellowship with Christ which has meant so much to us. Christ called His disciples that they might be with Him and that He might send them forth. Freely ye have received, freely give. That love of Christ which draws us to Him in fellowship enters into our hearts and sends us forth to lead others to Him.

Our human fellowships are often exclusive. The stronger the bond that holds a group together the weaker becomes the inclination to seek fellowship with those outside the group. The feeling of community among members of a race seems almost to engender a feeling of prejudice towards other races. Group aloofness, group selfishness and group prejudice are the great obstacles to the realization of our hope for world unity, world peace, and world fellowship. Love finds its satisfaction in fellowship, but our human love seems unable to extend itself to those outside of our human relationships. God's love knows no such limits. Christ sought our fellowship not because we were lovable in ourselves. God commended His love to us while we were yet sinners. If you love those who love you, said Christ, what reward have you? Even the heathen do that. The great value of God's love shed abroad in our hearts through fellowship with the Holy Spirit, is that it enables us to love the unlovable, to seek their fellowship, to bring them to Christ in the assurance that He can make them lovable.

OUR OBJECTIVE for this triennium is "Through world evangelism to world fellowship in Christ" with special emphasis this year on international fellowship and racial understanding. Differences of nationality and race are two of the greatest obstacles to world peace and world unity because the spirit of fellowship finds it difficult to extend itself beyond racial and national boundaries. Let us then study this problem in close fellowship with Christ. Let us seek from Him such a strengthening of our spirit of fellowship that it will penetrate all barriers. Such study under Christ as our teacher will develop an attitude, a public opinion in the Church which will spur it on to real world evangelism. It will also enable our country to take its part in formulating and carrying out plans for world peace and world unity.

Study to be really effective must be accompanied by clinical practice. There may be no opportunity to try our hand at solving international or racial problems in our own community. Yet there are doubtless in your community many who are outside of the fellowship of any Church. There are those in whom the Christian community has shown little interest. There are those with whom we have had secular contacts but for whose spiritual welfare we have little concern. There are others with whom we have had no contact at all toward whom we have been simply indifferent. There may also be those from whom because of some prejudice, some difference of social or economic status we have purposely held ourselves aloof.

It is such people as these that give to each one of us an opportunity for participating in this effort of world evangelism. Evangelism is a big word. Many people shy away from the possibility of taking any personal part in it. However the first step in evangelism is to make friendly contacts. Christ was called the friend of sinners and it was through this friendship that He drew them to Him and finally was able to help them. He depends upon us to make friendly contacts with those who are out of the fellowship of the Church. It is in this atmosphere of friendliness that the witness of our lives to Christ will draw men's attention to Him. We may not have the gift of speaking to others about religion, but if our lives are Christian and if we have a strong desire to lead people to Christ we can bring them into contact with someone who can follow up the evangelistic opportunity that our friendliness has opened up. A simple act of kindness may be the means of making someone recognize our witness to the invisible but ever-present Christ.

LET US ALWAYS REMEMBER that every single human being is a purchased possession of Christ. They are the other sheep of whom He spoke, not yet in the fold, but bought by Him with a price and marked with His brand, the sign of the Cross. Whatever may be their actual condition, however worthless or hopeless they may seem to be, Christ by His death has assured the possibility of their redemption. He asks us to win their confidence and lead them into

Post-War Planning

The progress of the War towards ultimate victory for the Allied Nations, is the all engaging topic of conversation. But paralleling this topic, is another that is attracting the serious attention of many groups —post-war planning. Those of us who remember World War I, recall that planning for the aftermath of that conflict, was largely left until the peace had been signed. We believe it is a hopeful sign that groups representing every phase of man's life, are now actively engaged in planning approaches to the problems that will inevitably arise in the political, economic, and religious fields. We believe also that this manifest interest in post-war planning, is evidence that the human race as a whole has made some little progress in the right direction of seeking the common good for even the least of our brethren.

Along this line, we would like to suggest that our own Church do a little thinking about post-war planning. We are concerned with the efficient operation of our whole mission program. The effective operation of that program begins of course with the individual congregation. We believe that "Forward in Service" has been a step in the right direction. It has been helpful because it has not attempted to set up a new program, but has challenged us to use more effectively the tools we have in hand. Granting that there have been weak spots in the broad program, it is our sincere conviction that this Church of ours has made progress since the 1940 General Convention when the "Forward in Service" program was inaugurated.

We feel that another step should be taken that will strengthen the whole work of the Church. We begin by calling attention to the fact, that with the organization of the first Every Member Canvass in 1919, and the formation of the National Council, a certain homogenity was given to our church that had been lacking in the years prior. We do not believe that it can be denied that the mission program of the Church was immeasurably aided by this step. Therefore we believe that the time has come for General Convention to survey, through a proper commission, our entire diocesan set-up. Very honestly we have in mind the combining of some dioceses that apparently have no reason to be, in this day of rapid and easy communication. To be very specific we feel that we have too many bishops with too small jurisdictions. Just by way of illustration, we looked at the figures as given in the Living Church Annual of 1944, for four dioceses. Deducting the non-parochial clergy from the active clergy as listed, these four dioceses averaged fourteen active clergy. Mind you, these are not missionary districts—they are all independent doceses. In fact there are some missionary districts who have more active clergy and whose budgets are larger than some of these small independent dioceses. We believe a careful study should be made of this state of affairs. In bygone days due to the difficulties of travel it was perhaps necessary to cut off a certain section of a large diocese and form a new one. That day is past. For the effective operation of the Church's mission program we believe General Convention should study this situation carefully. A Bishop with only fourteen active clergy under his jurisdiction we believe is an unnecessary charge. It is true that often these Bishops help with the confirmations in a nearby large diocese. But this fact does not alter the over-all picture.

Just one other illustration. The English Church, in the British Isles, has ninety-seven bishops. We have approximately one hundred and fifty. Their communicant strength is more than ten times what ours is reported to be. This should make us think.

We therefore urge that steps be taken now to bring this matter before the General Convention of 1946. We, too, need some post-war planning.

Four Hundredth Anniversary of the Litany in English

Four hundred years ago this coming St. Luke's Day (October 18th) the Litany was first sung in English, in St. Paul's, London. We quote from Writhesley's Chronicle (1544): "The 18th of October being St. Luke's day and Sunday, Paul's choir sang the processional in English by the King's injunction which shall be sung in every parish church in England every Sunday and every festival day and none other."

The background for this injunction is the statement made in G. G. Perry's History of the Church of England from which we quote:

"On June 11, 1544, the king's letters were directed to the archbishop, in which, adverting to the miserable state of Christendom, distracted by wars and troubles, he signifies his desire to have 'general processions in all cities, towns churches, and parishes,' said and sung with due reverence and devotion; and because hitherto the people had paid but little attention to these processions, inasmuch as they did not understand the language, inasmuch as they did not underhad therefore sent certain suffrages in "our native English tongue', 'to be openly used continually in all churches, villages and parishes of your diocese.'

"The English litany thus sent to Cranmer had been in fact translated and prepared by himself at the king's direction. In sending it to the king the archbishop writes: 'According to your Highness's commandment, I have translated into the English tongue certain processions to be used on festival days, if after

"HOLD YOURSELF TOGETHER"

By RICHARD R. BEASLEY

PERSONAL INTEGRATION or interior unity is something on which we have always to be working. We often hear the expression "he has gone all to pieces." When we hear that we know what it means. Here is some one, let us say, who is disappointed in love and starts drinking and—goes all to pieces. Or here is some one who lets down the moral bars and goes in for immorality and—goes all to pieces. Or, here is some one who has had a loss or bereavement and, unable to meet it, goes all to pieces.

These, of course, are extreme forms of this common weakness. But it is true of all of us in greater or lesser degree. "I go all to pieces when I hear that music," some one says. Or, "I can't seem to get organized"—many a college student makes that confession. Or, "I am not able to pull myself together"—says a third person. It is the same theme with variations. H. G. Wells makes a character in one of his novels say "I'm not a man; I'm a mob." Who hasn't felt that way? Hesketh Pearson in his life of Bernard Shaw tells of an experience that came to Shaw which as he puts it "formed a mob of appetites into an army of purposes and principles."

What is the common characteristic of all these examples of going to pieces? We are like the proverbial rider who jumped on his horse and rode off in all directions. What are the noticeable features when our lives seem to unravel like a string and get at loose ends?

One thing, of course, is that inner control goes. There is nothing to hold the reins; there is no restraint. We go in any direction, willy nilly. We are like the car without a driver at the wheel, careening down the street. When we go all to pieces it is because control goes and discipline and restraint.

WHEN WE GO TO PIECES it is because too we are unstable. We have nothing to stand on to keep our balance. Everything slips from under us. We walk in the sand and not on a rock. We lose our footing. We are tossed here and there by any passing whim or mood. We are unstable.

What else happens when we go to pieces? We are demoralized. We are like a regiment of soldiers without an officer to lead them, with an artillery barrage come over the hill at them and the bombs crashing down from the skies on them. Order and plan go and retreat starts. We lose a sense of permanent values when we go to pieces. We are de-moralized; emptied of moral guidances and directions.

So we are thinking about something fundamental to us all. And when we say "Hold Yourself Together"—this would seem to be counsel we all want to heed.

What helps us do that? How can we hold ourselves together? What can help us do this when it is easier to go to pieces?

First, we must have something to do. Idleness creates as much mental sickness as any one thing. Man is one animal that cannot stand company with no one but himself without disintegrating. Every thing becomes magnified as we stir it over and over in our mind. We must keep ourselves busy. Walter Lippman commented recently on the British people during the air bombardment of London. How could they come through with such courage? Why is not there more mental breakdown with all they have had to go through? One thing, he said, is that everybody had a job to do—old and young, men, women and children. There were no drones in that beehive. Every one was caught up in a common task and no one could afford not to do his part in it. They were too busy to think about themselves and feel sorry for themselves. Much we can learn from that observation. We must keep busy.

What else can help us hold ourselves together. We must be freed from a festering evil. We are by nature moral creatures and to violate the moral code breaks us to pieces. Stanley Jones is entirely right: "We do not break the moral law; we are broken on it." Norman Peale, the New York minister, tells of a man who came to see him. He was at loose ends; he could not keep long at his job; he couldn't rest or sleep. All the beauty had gone out of life. As he listened to this man talking, Dr. Peale got a clue and then asked this question: "Have you done anything morally wrong?" The man flushed and denied it. Then he said, "Yes, I have." Slowly he told his story, haltingly; then he poured out his confession in a torrent of words. And as he talked it was like opening a boil—evil long pent up came out and purified him and released him and made him free again. That was what was wrong with him. He did not need psychological treatment so much. He needed religious confession and the realization of the healing forgiveness of God.

MORE THAN ONE PERSON is going to pieces—worry, mental sickness, nervous breakdown—who is fighting the best side of his nature and gives in to what is wrong and destructive. The soul is like a battleground. Strong forces of good and evil are battling there and some times it is just not strong enough to withstand that battle and it goes down, broken. So often we treat the symptom and not the cause. So often "it's the soul that needs treatment" (as Winfred Rhodes observes). Have you done something morally wrong? That may be why you go to pieces.

What else can help us hold ourselves together. We must have a steadying loyalty. We must be drawn out of ourselves. George Palmer, the professor at Harvard, read a book once and it gave him something he had never had before—"the luxury of loyalty." It is a luxury; aye, a necessity. Every minister can echo this testimony: There was once a man who faced a crisis in his life; his job lost and his name impugned and a rank and brutal injustice done to him. He could have gone to pieces if he had been made of softer material. But he had a wife and children to strive for. That and his religion and his faith in himself kept him strong and true and set him on the path again. That is what a loyalty can do! Dr. Slattery, former rector of Grace Church in New York once wrote a beautiful prayer for a married couple. One recalls these words: "Lord, grant us each to rise to the other's best." What an aspiration for marriage! If we all did that daily we would not be having all the marriage distress that is coming out of this war. "Rise to the other's best." That is what a loyalty can do. And after the war, and the men come home—that will be at a time of testing greater than these war years. They have had a powerful loyalty to drive them forward. When war ends that loyalty will end. They will have to get a loyalty equally strong. If not, they will go to pieces. That too is what a loyalty can do.

BUT IF WE STOPPED THERE, we would overlook the best and most important thing of all that helps us hold ourselves together. That is religion. We must get a vital, gripping religious faith. But how rare that is. One does not mean formalism. One does not mean knowing all the liturgical motions, or going to church, even—however vital that is. Nor is it doing church work. We mean what is behind all that. We mean a religious faith that literally guides and directs our life.

Religion comes from the word that means "bind." One sees a picture of a stack of rods tied together by a rope. Thus bound together they are strong. How true that is of our religion: it binds us to our best self; it binds us to each other; it binds us to God—anchored, integrated, secure!

A man died from excessive drinking. Two years before he and his wife had come into the Church. For several months all went well. A new life had begun because he had got hold of a new strength—the strength of God. Said his wife to the minister: "During that time he stopped drinking." But it didn't last long. Soon he slipped away from the Church—too lazy to make the effort—away from the Church's guidance and restraints and challenges. Religion had made that difference just in that short time. Then he went back to his weakness—and it killed him.

Religion, then, more than anything else can enable us to hold ourselves together. It all comes to a focus in this paraphrase by Moffatt of a verse in St. Paul's epistles (a good text!): "In Christ all things hold together." That is what millions of others have found: In Christ all things hold together. Hold together morally; hold intellectually—and don't go to pieces; hold together emotionally; hold together socially—and don't go to pieces. He is that golden thread holding our disordered lives, broken loyalties, scattered purposes—together!

THE YEARS THE LOCUSTS HAVE EATEN

shalt love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself. . . . Love your enemies, and do good to them which despitefully use you. . . . As ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise. . . . Follow Me. . . . Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you.

For all these thousands of years man has been making his own rules—and they don't work. What they have brought to the world is ever recurring misery, jealousies, depressions, wars. Up to this point the pessimist seems right—man, taken as a whole, is bad; he spoils his good earth with his arrogant man-made rules. But that is not the whole story for one should make a distinction between the general and the particular. And the particular is that man on the spiritual level is the salt of the earth, the crest and crown of all created things (as we know them), and Christ is the master of his fate and Christ the captain of his soul. He tries to live by divine principles rather than man-made rules. And the more Christians there are to follow the principles and put them into effect in our economic, social and political as well as religious life, the sooner the world will really start to become the kind of a world you want it to be. Therein lies the cure for our sick world. No other cure is profound enough to heal its wounds.

So here is the promise: thus said the Lord, Follow My principles . . . and I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten.

the fellowship of the fold in order that He may make this potential redemption actual.

Shall we not resolve then that no sheep shall be left outside because of our negligence, our failure to represent to them the friendliness of Christ. The Chief Shepherd alone can heal, the clergy and the well instructed may be needed to preach and to teach, but even the humblest of us can show that friendliness which is the necessary first step of evangelism and without which those other sheep of Christ may never be led into His fold.

I pray that God's blessing may rest upon you, your rector, and your congregation.

May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of God and the fellowship of the Holy Ghost be with you all both now and evermore.

H. St. George Tucker,
Presiding Bishop.

September 1, 1944.

due correction and amendment your Highness shall think it is convenient; in which translation, forasmuch as many of the processions in Latin were but barren as me seemed, and little fruitful, I was constrained to use more than the liberty of translation, for in some processions I have altered divers words, in some I have added part, in some I have taken away; some I have left out whole, either because the matter appeared to me little to the purpose, or because the days be not with us festival days; and some processions I have added whole, because I thought I had better matter for the purpose than was the procession in Latin.' "

The Church of England celebrated this significant event on June 11th last. It is our suggestion that parish clergy use the Litany on Sunday, October 16th, and call their congregation's attention to the four hundredth anniversary of the singing of the Litany in English.

Surely in these days of tension and distress, the value of the Litany in worship is more than ever evident.

We would call your attention to the letter to the Editor, written by the Historiographer of the Diocese of Virginia. We endorse the plan Dr. Brydon has suggested and commend it to our Bishops and clergy.

THE BIRD IN THE BUSH

Refuting the oft-quoted but sadly mistaken adage: "A bird in the hand is worth two in the bush."

My wide-open window at dawn of the day
Brings wonderful music from over the way;
As morning's first glimmer calls forth from the birds
A free, happy choral of "songs without words";
And my own spirit leaps as the melodies gush
From the musical throat of a bird in the bush.

Glad hymns of rejoicing the winged artist sings;
With rapturous carols the wide woodland rings;
My eager ears avidly strain for each note
Exultantly poured from the jubilant throat
Of bobolink, oriole, robin or thrush,
Whichever the bird that may sing in the bush.

I covet that bird and by aid of a net
I make it a captive but quickly regret,
For it struggles and cries and I cannot withstand
The piteous "cheep" of the bird in my hand;
Unwilling its longing for freedom to crush,
I set it free gladly to fly to its bush.

Once more from the thicket the carol is heard
That comes from the throat of a free, happy bird;
Again I rejoice as the whole woodland rings
With the glorious song that the winged artist sings;
That silly old adage I'd evermore hush
For the bird that's worth most is the bird in the bush.

BUDDY SEES OWL BABIES CROSS A BRIDGE

Buddy Sandusky sits in the swinging chair, on the front lawn, to watch the big, round, full moon sail up the sky. To him, when it first came up, it was as big as a tub and golden yellow. Now it is as big as a dinner plate and shines like silver. It makes the yard as bright as day. Buddy can even see across the street.

A little while ago the moon was hiding behind a little tree; Buddy thought it was playing hide and seek with him. Now it has climbed above the trees. It is passing behind a long, bare, oak limb, which from across the street reaches over to a maple tree in Mr. Smith's yard.

"That long limb makes a bridge," says Buddy to Mother, who sits near by. "An owl could walk across that bridge."

"So it could," says Mother.

Buddy sniffs loudly. "That lovely smell is four o'clocks," he says.

Mother says, "It truly is."

Buddy listens with sharp ears to the night noises; he thinks maybe he will hear an owl.

"There's a truck crossing the bridge," he says. "Hear it rumble?"

"Listen, Buddy!" exclaims Mother.

"Wee-ee-ee-ee-ee!" comes the cry of Father Owl from the oak tree across the street.

"Ee-ee-ee-ee-ee!" Mother Owl answers from the maple tree.

Buddy wriggles with excitement. "Oh, Mother, maybe we shall have a chance to see them."

"I hope we shall."

The two parent owls flit from their trees. They perch near the middle of the long bare branch. Buddy can see them turn their heads to each other. He thinks they are whispering together.

Now they are flitting into the shadow of the oak leaves. He is sorry to see them go, for he thinks they may not come back.

Next, Father Owl slips out from the leaves. Buddy sees him very plainly, stepping slowly sidewise on the bare limb. A tiny ball of something is moving along beside him.

"Oh, Mother! A baby owl! Oh, what fun!" Buddy whispers, while he wriggles with joy.

The baby owl slides along, an inch at a time, until he is several feet from the oak tree. Buddy blinks fast, for suddenly four more tiny feathered balls come sidling along on the limb, with Mother Owl stepping proudly along behind them. Buddy is glad the street is narrow and the moon so bright.

The parent owls fly back and forth. They hustle the baby owls to the middle of the limb. Then Father Owl perches on the oak tree side, Mother Owl on the maple. Buddy is thinking: "Here is an Owl family: it has five children and two parents."

Father Owl pushes his babies gently along the limb one way; Mother Owl shoos them back the other. The babies begin to sidle back and forth without being pushed. One makes a little hop all by himself. The others make little hops.

All this time they have been gradually moving farther from the oak tree where the nest is, and now they are getting quite close to the maple tree, for Mother Owl has stopped shooing them back. And soon, while Buddy watches, one baby owl disappears among the maple leaves. Then, he rubs his eyes—all the babies are gone!

Mother and Father Owl fly to the middle of the long, bare limb and sit close to each other. They make soft sounds. Buddy thinks they are saying to each other, "Our owl babies did very well tonight!"

Buddy takes one last look at the parent owls sitting on the limb which was a bridge by which the baby owls left their nest to begin to learn to fly.

He says, "Thank you, bright Moon, for the lovely light you gave, so Mother and I could see the Owl family. Good night, beautiful Moon."

And Buddy goes into the house to his bed, leaving the silvery moon still sailing up the sky!—Edith Brandis, in Nat. Kindergarten Asso. Release.

DOWN ON TRUMPET STREET

William Allen Ward

Tiny and Tot
Down on Trumpet Street
Laughed and raced
On nimble feet.

Then came Dimple
And Freckle, too,
And O what trumpets
Those children blew!

Not far away
Was Silent Street
Where never were heard
Little children's feet,

And did you know
There never was laughter—
For no children raced
As others came after.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

Meeting Held On Unity

Meeting of Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity

A meeting of the Joint Commission on Approaches to Unity was held at the College of Preachers, September 12th, 13th and 14th. The Commission consists at present of five bishops, six presbyters and six laymen, no successor having yet been appointed to succeed Bishop Gardiner. Of the seventeen members, sixteen were present, one clergyman having been detained on the Pacific Coast.

In his opening statement the Chairman summed up the tasks of the Commission under three heads: to consolidate and improve the fraternal relations between the Episcopal and Eastern Orthodox Churches; to keep in touch with the Lutheran, Methodist and Reformed Episcopal Churches, with all of whom there have already been meetings; to study very carefully all matters pertaining to the negotiations with the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., to continue conversations with its representatives in the attempt to formulate an adequate plan of union, and to do as much as possible to increase the mutual understanding and cooperation which is so necessary if any union is to be genuinely organic. He laid great emphasis on the Ecumenical Movement and the Episcopal Church's participation therein, urging that in all negotiations this wider movement should be kept in mind so that every plan of union between two churches should be devised in such fashion as to make it possible for other bodies to adhere to it subsequentlly.

The document Basic Principles, referred to the Commission by General Convention, was studied sentence by sentence with the aid of several special memoranda prepared for the Commission by leading theologians, and in the light of reports of various committees on specific topics. Many proposals for the clarification, expansion and improvement of the document were examined, without definitive action being taken on any of them.

A committee of five was appointed to canvass with a similar group of the Presbyterian Department of Church Cooperation and Unity these suggestions and other matters. Another meeting was set for April 26, 27, and 28, 1945.

PROFESSOR ADELAIDE CASE CONDUCTS ROUNDTABLE

Petersburg, Va.—"I make these four wishes for you in your work during the coming year," said Professor Adelaide Case, Ph. D., professor of Christian Education at Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, Massachusetts, at the close of an evening roundtable discussion with the church school staff of Saint Paul's Church, Petersburg, Virginia, Sunday, September 17, 1944.

"I wish for you the happiness of joint enterprise—with one another, with your pupils, and with the parents of your children.

"My second wish is that each of you will be blessed with at least one new abiding friendship, either with a child or with a parent.

"I also wish for you the stimulus, surprise and difficulty of being asked stumping questions by the young. This will deepen your religious life immeasurably.

"My final wish is that as a result of your work this year you may gain a new outlook on children's worship and a deeper realization of God's relation to them. God can be very real to them, and through them to us, giving us a new vision of the meaning of the Church and her job in the world."

Earlier in the evening the discussion had been based on questions raised by Dr. Case: What was your most satisfying experience during the last session? What effect has the war had on your pupils? What do you hope to accomplish this year? What evidence of Christian initiative did your pupils show last year?

At the eleven o'clock service on that day the teaching staff had stood before the chancel rail in the presence of the congregation and entire church school and rededicated themselves to their job.

The closing event of this annual Church School weekend which marked the beginning of the winter session of St. Paul's Church School was a dinner Monday evening honoring the teaching staff to which some of the parents and patrons of the school were invited. The Rev. Carter H. Harrison, rector of St. John's Church, Hampton, Va., was the speaker.

Using Isaiah's words "and the mirage shall become a pool" as his springboard, Mr. Harrison was both inspiring and humorous as he told the teachers that their job was "to turn the values of the mirages of disillusioning ideals into pools of living water through the grasp of Christian living and truth their pupils gained through them."

CHURCH PLANS SERVICES AFTER VICTORY

New York, N. Y.—Episcopal Church plans for observance of the day when Germany gives up the war, have been completed. The first step was the making of an electrical transcription for use by radio stations throughout the country. The recording has a prayer by the Presiding Bishop, a short address by the Rt. Rev. Oliver J. Hart, Bishop of Pennsylvania, and music by a double quartette of male voices. Orders have been received from many parts of the country, indicating that the transcription will be broadcast by a very considerable number of radio stations.

In addition a brief prayer service entitled "Vision After Victory" has been printed for church-wide distribution. It contains prayers, thanksgivings, a Litany, an Act of Penitence, an Act of Dedication, and a number of optional prayers referring to various situations arising from the war.

Laymen Hold Conference

Comprehensive Program Adopted by Laymen

Richmond, Va.—Laymen of the Third Province adopted a comprehensive program of work at their conference in Richmond September 9 and 10. About 25 men attended, and heard addresses on Laymen's Work by Bishop Frederick Goodwin of Virginia, Dr. Churchill Gibson, the Rev. James Carman, National Council Field Officer, and the Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, Executive Director of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work. Similar conferences are to be held in all the other Provinces.

The group urged dioceses to create a diocesan "chain of action" beginning with the various bishops and including a diocesan committee on laymen's work which would embrace all or any existing diocesan men's group. The Chain of Action depends upon enlisting a parish keyman in every parish and mission.

Recommendations made by the men included: Some sort of celebration on George Washington's Birthday or the nearest Sunday thereto; participation in the Jamestown Pilgrimage when it can be resumed after the war; Fall Mass Meeting for Men; Visitation by area committees to missions in each area.

Other recommendations were that every parish shall observe the Advent Corporate Communion. A Corporate Gift may be received at the discretion of the diocesan bishop in each area. Such a gift could be used for a diocesan Chaplain's Fund, for the Army and Navy Commission, or in new diocesan missionary work, the group suggested.

Parishes are urged to set a goal of 20 per cent increase in men's attendance at church, and men are urged to make an earnest effort to bring someone nearer to Christ through his church each week.

Contact or Hospitality Committees are provided for, to welcome worshippers at church, to seek out newcomers and to call on absentees. Monthly Communion Breakfast Clubs are suggested; also Teaching Missions, the plan of Confirmation Sponsors, and the development of lay readers to do missionary work in unchurched areas. Schools for lay readers were recommended.

The group believed that laymen should promote the use of Forward—day by day, see that churches have a literature rack properly filled and cared for; enlist returning veterans as church school teachers; work for proper financing of church schools through the parish budget; and for strengthening of religion in the home.

Study groups are to be formed, using Forward in Service and other literature. A Lenten School of Religion on the Doctrine of God is planned, and efforts are to be made to increase the extension of Church magazines.

Dioceses should provide conference and camp facilities for youth, the group believed. And just before the close of the Conference, a period was devoted to study of the Church's place in planning for returning service personnel and other postwar problems.

Edwin S. Hyde, Provincial Committeeman of the Presiding Bishop's Committee on Laymen's Work, presided.

MARINES FINANCE EDUCATION OF NATIVES

Somewhere in the Gilbert Islands (Delayed)—Voluntary contributions by a group of United States Marines, stationed on this Central Pacific atoll with a Fourth Marine Air Wing unit, are being used to educate numerous natives at a missionary school.

The natives, selected by their elders, are sent to another Gilbertese island, for a year's training. At the completion of the course, they return to this atoll and instruct their fellow-villagers ers.

A year ago, the natives were unaware there was such a military organization as the Marines. At that time, a Jap garrison force ruled this atoll.

Then came Tarawa. The Nipponese lost their strangehold on these islands. Other American successes quickly followed and subsequently a Marine assault force landed on this atoll.

Since their arrival, the Marines have had amicable relations with the natives. Many of the Gilbertese have been employed on American installations and they have proved to be honest, friendly, and sincere.

A group of Leathernecks, discussing means to assist the natives at an informal meeting conducted by Navy Chaplain Lieutenant Harold A. MacNeill, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, and Waltham, Massachusetts, offered several suggestions.

"Why not send some of them to the training school," one suggested. "It won't be a heavy expense and we ought to be able to meet it." His thought was readily accepted and plans were formulated.

"From a missionary who has spent many years on these islands, we learned a native could be provided with board, transportation, and a year's education for $20," Chaplain MacNeill said.

"The boys started a little fund and it has grown until it now totals more than $200. Six natives have already been delegated to attend the school and we have a lengthy list of applicants. The school is officially known as the 'London Missionary Society Training Institute.' It is located at Peru, some distance from here. The natives call the institute 'Rongo Rongo,' which literally means 'Report of Going Out of Good News.' This loosely is their translation of the Gospel.

"Reverend and Mrs. George Eastman, who have done missionary work in these islands for the past 30 years, direct the institute. Since the outbreak of the war, Reverend Mr. Eastman has been designated a chaplain in the British Navy and the society's 200-ton inter-island ship, the 'John Williams V,' has been commissioned a vessel in His Majesty's Navy."

Chaplain MacNeill further explained the John Williams V carries medical and religious supplies to the society's scattered missions in the Central Pacific.

Future in Holy Land

Knottiest Problem in Middle East Settlement

New York—The Ven. Charles T. Bridgeman of Jerusalem, now home on his first holiday since before the war, comments on conditions and the future outlook in the Holy Land.

"An armistice will bring the Middle East, and Palestine in particular, back into the news, because one of the knottiest problems will be the settlement of the Middle East on a firm foundation for future progress. The possibility that peace in the world at large may be the signal for a resumption of prewar conflicts in the Middle East has to be considered.

"Jerusalem and Palestine in the past five years of war have at times been very near the front lines of the world conflict, especially when Iraq flared up in a pro-Nazi revolt, again when the Vichy sympathizers had to be cleared out of Syria and the Lebanon, and finally when Rommel's threat to Egypt brought yet greater danger to the country. Today the progress of the actual fighting has moved further away and the Middle East has become a relatively quiet backwater. But throughout the period Palestine has been an important training base and a source of war production, which has kept the country teeming with troops of every nation and color, and has employed the local population, both Jewish and Arab, in producing military and civilian necessities.

"The task of the Christian Church becomes daily more critical. Racial, national and religious conflicts of the Holy Land and the Middle East cry out for such a solution as that which the Gospel of our Lord alone can give. The stake of the Anglican Communion in the Christian work of the Holy Land and the Middle East is one of which we may be proud. The century-old work has been maintained throughout the war period. Despite curtailment of staff and the loss of the inspiring leadership of the sixth Bishop, Dr. George Francis Graham Brown, who was killed in an automobile accident in the autumn of 1942, it has been possible to keep up every branch of work and to initiate certain new ones for which the time was ripe.

"Now under the experienced guidance of Dr. Weston Henry Stewart, the seventh Bishop, every phase of the work is making preparations for the intensified postwar tasks. He has reorganized the Bishopric into three instead of two archdeaconries and laid plans for more intensive work in the three major fields of work amongst fellow-Christians, the Moslems and the Jews. The re-staffing of the Bishopric with qualified experts in the fields of evangelism, education and medicine is one of the imperative necessities as many of the senior members of staff are due for retirement.

"My own journey home to visit my family, whom I had not seen since they were marooned in America by the outbreak of the war in 1939, and to consult with Church authorities here, must necessarily be brief. I welcome the opportunity to tell our people how much help they have been to the work in the Holy Land by the remarkably generous support they have given to the Good Friday Offering. At a time when it is essential to stress our Lord's blessed Gospel, in the land which God willed should be above all the witness to His Son's incarnation, the Church in the Holy Land has been given the means for going forward and planning for the future.

"The opportunities of the postwar years are great. The educated interest, the prayers and the financial support of the Church in America as in other parts of the Anglican Communion are needed to help make Palestine the Christian country which God willed it should be: one in which, because it is dominated by Christian principles, the interests of all peoples may be conserved."

MOTION PICTURE NOW READY PORTRAYING NEED FOR SUPPORT

New York, N. Y.—Representatives of various religious bodies, the Church and secular press, and others interested in visual education, joined officers of the National Council at a preview of the new motion picture, "We, too, Receive," produced by Cathedral Films of Hollywood, for the Council's Department of Promotion. The film is a 16mm sound picture, keyed to the theme of this year's Every Member Canvass, and portraying one imperative reason for wholehearted support of the Church's Mission in these days of war. The film is to be shown throughout the Church, a large number of the dioceses having already placed their orders for prints.

Robert D. Jordan, author of the film story, explained that the picture is based on facts, showing as it does the rescue by Christian natives of a wounded Yankee airman shot down in the Southwest Pacific by the Japanese. The film opens and closes showing the airman's family at breakfast reading a letter from him covering the incident disclosed by the film. The action takes place in a jungle where 100 years ago the natives were cannibals. Rescue of the wounded American fighter is effected through the finding by a Christian native of a letter drifting down stream.

CLERGY CONFERENCE

Washington, D. C.—Inaugurating the work of the clergy in their parishes and throughout the Diocese for the coming Fall and Winter, a Conference was held at the College of Preachers, Monday, September 18, under the direction of the Bishop. In an address to the Clergy in Bethlehem Chapel Bishop Dun used as his theme the phrase "Servant of God," showing its Scripture use and defining the meaning associated with it in the life of a Clergyman of today. In defining the different aspects the Bishop spoke of the Servant of God as a Minister, as a Prophet, as a Priest and as a Shepherd, all taking their inspiration from what the Bishop termed "The Inwardness of Priesthood," which got its meaning from the sacrifice of Christ.

Each address disclosed the grasp of the speaker upon the elemental truths of the Christian faith as illustrated from the background of the deep personal devotion of the undertaking of the work that makes its strongest demands upon the aspirations of the human soul.

His auditors, the full body of the Washington Clergy, were moved by the clarity of expression and oppositiveness

CHAPLAIN WRITES OF LIFE AT THE FRONT

Boston, Mass.—From somewhere in France Chaplain Morris F. Arnold, formerly rector of St. John's Church, Saugus, Mass., has written the Army and Navy Commission expressing his appreciation "for all the Commission is doing for us in the service." He assures Bishop Sherrill, Commission Chairman, that "We are doing our best to live up to what you expect of us and to be worthy of your help."

Chaplain Arnold tells of his arrival in France with a unit engaged in building airfields. His letter continues:

"The people everywhere have welcomed us, sincerely, deeply, and from their hearts. It is a pathetic sight to see the French standing smiling in front of their ruined homes, waving and wishing us well. Some of the youngsters even toss flowers as we pass. There were others who sympathized with the Germans, particularly wives and girl friends in their teens and twenties, but most of these moved out with the Germans.

"Sunday I had four services, one in a field with the hood of my jeep for an altar, one in a forest in which severe fighting had taken place, one in a tent along the front lines where I had to shout parts of the service in order to be heard above the roar, and where big men came out from the Communion with tears in their eyes, and the final service in the evening in a big stable, with my altar set up in a stall. The place reminded me constantly of the manger our Lord was born in, for even the ducks and pigs and chickens were there, though the horses and cows were out in the pasture.

"So life goes on. There is little in the way of what might be called spectacular. For those deeds performed by ordinary human beings, which, if lifted out of the mud and romanticized considerably, would be heroic, pass as everyday occurrences. The common attitude is still one of buckling down to do a dirty job as well as possible, and few seek glory, or even see glory about them. Newspaper stories of 'feats' performed always seem hollow and trumped up to the men who are actually involved in such things. Few who deserve real credit ever get it, nor do they mind not getting it, as long as the war is speeded up by their efforts. It's a healthy spirit in a way, for it is almost complete humility. But in another way it seems from an attitude of resignation which bodes no good for the future, unless these men can have some new, real stimulation when they get home. I'm afraid that their long term of service is going to influence most of them to sit down and let the rest of the world go by.

"So there is a tremendous challenge for a Church with a vital message and a vital job to be done."

ARMY AND NAVY COMMISSION PRAISED

Boston, Mass.—"One day a soldier brought into the aid station told me he was an Episcopalian," writes a Chaplain from a battle area, to the Army and ..avy Commission. "After we had prayer together and I had anointed him, he pulled out of his pocket a copy of the 'Prayer Book for Soldiers and Sailors.' It was dirty, soaking wet with perspiration and blood-stained. His rector had sent it to him and he was as proud as could be of the book.

"The Commission did a fine job in putting out that Prayer Book. I have carried twenty copies all through my two combat periods and have used them for services often.

"So often we receive compliments from home that I feel the Commission itself should receive occasional praise and thanks. Your spiritual and material assistance to us Chaplains leaves nothing to be desired. Also I appreciate your notes in acknowledgment of these reports. That you should make time to write them means a great deal to us all."

BOOK NOTES

By the Faculty of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Edited by Randolph Crump Miller.

THE CHRISTIAN WAY IN A MODERN WORLD. By W. Norman Pittenger. Cloister Press. $2.50.

The layman who wants a brief statement of what he can believe in the modern world, in terms of the central tradition of Anglicanism, will find this Religious Book Club selection indispensable. Written with college graduates in mind, this book will appeal to all intelligent adults. The central clue to understanding the Christian religion is the Incarnation (the person of Jesus Christ), and this theme runs througohut the chapters. God, Jesus Christ, the Holy Ghost, the Trinity, the Church, Sin and Forgiveness, the Sacraments, Eternal Life, the relation of Christianity to other religions, and the application of our Christian faith to individual and social problems—all these things are discussed with a surprising ability to get at the heart of the matter.

The problems that bother many Churchmen, such as the saying of the creeds, the virgin birth, the resurrection, miracles, modern cults, and the missionary enterprise—are clarified in terms of what might be caleld a "libertl Catholicism."

This is an ideal book for study groups. The author has provided suggested topics for discussion, books for further reading, and an index. Discussion of such a book will be primarily constructive, for there is little in the book with which the average Episcopalian would disagree. The problems are there, and they need to be solved if we are to live as Christians.

THIS YEAR OF OUR LORD. By Andrew W. Blackwood. Westminister Press. $2.00.

Professor Blackwood knows how to preach, and these sermons for special occasions are particularly good. With a wealth of illustration, with clear outlines, and with spiritual insight, he makes the Gospel speak to our time. There are some sermons on the Church year, including one for each night of Holy Week; and there are sermons for Mother's Day, Children's Day, Public School Day, Labor Sunday, Vacation Time, and as a fitting closing sermon Bible Sunday. This book can be commended wholeheatedly for lay-readers, for spiritual guidance, and for homiletical reference.

THE BROTHER. By Dorothy Clarke Wilson. Westminster Press. $2.50.

This novel deserves to be a best seller. It is a good historical, religious novel of the life of James, the brother of Jesus. Of course, Jesus becomes the central character through the eyes of James. The opposition of James to his brother's strange and puzzling career; James' strong adherence to the Jewish law; the final conversion of James after the resurrection and his courage in the fact of opposition, are made dramatically and dynamically clear. A mild love story helps to carry the story. Buy it, read it, and pass it on to your friends, jjust as you did with THE ROBE.

THE UNIVERSITY AND THE MODERN WORLD. By Arnold S. Nash. The Macmillan Co., New York. $2.50.

Here is an exceedingly interesting book on the education has been cast into a frame of reference that is purely scientific and as a consequence has striven to present each particular field of knowledge as completely autonomous, that is, to be pursued in and of itself without presuppositions, to seek knowledge for its won sake. This would be bad enough, he argues, if the attempt had been successful, but as a matter of fact it has unconsciously absorbed presuppositions which have been but the reflections of the currently dominant theories of the generation, political, economic and social, most of which have been colored by a liberalism and an optimistic view of man that is greatly to be regretted. But modern scientific education is essentially purposeless, and can therefore only breed confusion worse confounded. It is not education for life. His thesis is not that the educational process should not be scientific in its methodology, but that since proper education must be for life it must be undertaken with the purpose of eliciting values, personal and social.

This attempt to create values can best be obtained by deliberately adopting a religious presupposition, preferably the Jewish-Christian tradition, as the background of university education since it demonstrably possesses the truth for living in the bosom of which all truth as revealed by scientific study can alone have value. Knowledge in isolation from a cosmic point of view (whose purpose is to enlarge life and enrich the human personality), is not only fruitles but dangerous. The Marxian and Fascist presuppositions have proven both inadequate and devastating.

Few will disagree with the author that the true educational task of the university is not the pursuit of knowledge for its own sake, but it would seem that the author's premise that the modern American and English university has been wholly unaware of the necessity for relating knowledge to life could stand a little more proof. This is not to urge that our education has been religiously motivated. It has been secular but not without a sense of values. The author's remedy for the situation as he sees it is put forth tentatively, and it would seem that a new orientation of education in this direction were desirable. But two problems present themselves to his contention that education to fulfill its purpose must have the Christian philosophy for its presupposition. One is the problem of reconciling freedom and presupposition, and the other is the evident fact that most of those who do the teaching in the modern universities lack Christian convictions.

The book is excellent in its provocativeness, and in its thorough documentation. The author's thesis is of wide interest and is clearly and rather brilliantly developed. What more could one want in a good book?

HOW TO READ AND ENJOY THE BIBLE. By Maurice Clarke. Cloister. $1.00.

This is a workbook, to be used by high school or adult classes or at home, for a modern, informative, and thoroughly enjoyable approach to the Bible. Dr. Clarke knows his educational techniques and he is up to date in his Biblical scholarship. He provides the student with plenty of tools and he relies on the best authorities. As the student goes through the workbook, he follows along with selected portions of the Bible. There are chapters on What Is the Bible?, The Modern Approach to the Bible, Modern Editions of the Bible, The Spirit of Bible Reading, Knowing the Beauty Spots, Reading Individual Books, Knowing Its Characters, Tracing the Development of Its Great Ideas, Poetry and Oratory, Glimpses Into the Apocryphal Books, Some Parables of Jesus. There are some hints for working out the answers to various questions. All kinds of study groups will be grateful for this enjoyable book.

THE VITALITY OF THE CHRISTIAN TRADITION. By George F. Thomas. New York, Harper, 1944. xi, 358 pp. $3.00.

In thirteen chapters, by eight fellows of the National Council on Religion in Higher Education, this book offers a brilliant review of the history of Christian thought, followed by several intensely interesting estimates of the relation of Christianity to our day. Some unevenness is inevitable in a symposium, but especially notable contributions have been made by Jefferson, Muilenburg, White, Outler and Van Dusen, on "The Christian Tradition and Contemporary Science," "The Faith of Ancient Israel," "The Significance of Medival Christianity," "The Reformation and Classical Protestantism," and "The Nineteenth Century and Today." Some of these are positively thrilling.

It is most unfortunate that a book of such importance, and covering so wide a field, should have been allowed to appear without an index. In other respects, however, it is excellently edited, and Professor Thomas' own papers, on "Christianity and Democracy" and "Christianity and Modern Philosophy," are refreshing and thought-provoking.

VIRGINIA WAR FUND

Virginians this autumn will begin to raise by voluntary subscription more than $3,500,000 to finance agencies of the National War Fund and of local community chests. The work begins about September 15 and with the exception of campaigns in Norfolk and Portsmouth, will be completed by November 11, when the Sixth War Loan is planned. The Campaigns, conducted in every city and county in Virginia, will be a modern miracle of organization and of American ingenuity to do a big job at a minimum of expense.

The largest individual organization in this group will be the Virginia War Fund, Inc. It will raise for the twenty-two agencies of the National War Fund approximately $1,900,000, without the use of a single paid executive, and within thirty days after the close of the campaign it will consist only of one clerical worker. Other members are the community chests of Virginia, agencies that depend entirely on volunteers for their fund solicitation. Last year almost without exception they received from the public the full measure of their budgets and the shortages were negligible and oversubscriptions numerous.

The National War Fund came into being to curb the number of appeals that are being made on the public. The State Department before the War found many relief agencies springing up, some of which it was strongly suspected might be of doubtful status. The government through the State Department instituted a policy of licensing these agencies, and the President of the United States named a committee that influenced all of those dealing with a single country to unite for fund raising purposes. Thus many agencies dealing with China became a part of United China Relief, and so on, until today instead of having hundreds of component parts, the National War Fund, in which all their appeals have finally been united, consists of twenty-two of them. It is estimated that these agencies annually extend support to more than 60,000,000 people.

Through a budget committee the National War Fund weighs the individual requests of the various agencies throughout the year and makes such appropriations as the situation may require. Thus USO, if it should underestimate its needs for the year, could obtain financial assistance from the National War Fund for just needs, without any deficit or supplementary campaign for funds. And should a need for funds fail to arise, the sum requested by any agency would remain intact in the general coffers against some other urgent need.

Through the institution of the National War Fund men and women throughout the nation are protected by agreement from being solicited by any of the scores of agencies getting their money from the War Fund. Thus instead of having hundreds of campaigns for funds annually, Virginians unite behind their community funds, or through local War Fund committees where community funds do not exist, and in a few days meet all requirements on them. Only a few agencies that consider their personalities essential of preservation, or that have unique fund raising plans, have maintained their individual status.

In Virginia the National War Fund effort has been the personal concern of Governor Colgate W. Darden, who instigated the organization of the Virginia War Fund, Inc., and although carrying the title of honorary president, is the motivating power behind the institution. John Stewart Bryan, of Richmond, has been the Virginia representative on the Board of the National War Fund from its inception and has been active in its affairs in Virginia.

This year the organization has as its executive the treasurer of Virginia, W. Tayloe Murphy, who has been named president of the organization, succeeding Homer L. Ferguson of Newport News, who resigned this spring. Mr. Murphy's staff consists entirely of volunteers, "borrowed" for the execution of the task of statewide organization. Nine regional chairmen are a part of the organization, each bearing the title of vice-president. They are George P. DeHardit, Gloucester; Charles B. Godwin, Jr., Suffolk; Edmund T. DeJarnette, Ashland; Garland Gray, Waverly; W. R. Broaddus, Martinsville; N. W. Kelley, Roanoke; E. E. Keister, Strasburg; Thomas L. Farrar, Charlottesuaville, and C. S. Carter, Bristol.

The campaign period this year will be from October 5 through November 1, but some campaigns will run longer and the Norfolk and Portsmouth efforts will be in February. Several other campaigns may be held at times more convenient for the efforts during the winter months.

Virginians have made an inspired record in their War Fund appeals in the past. Doubtless their use of this system of raising money wholesale will result in an extension of the community fund movements in the state in the future.

ORDINATIONS

Deacon

Rolla P. Currie, Vestryman of the Church of St. Stephen and the Incarnation, Washington, was ordained deacon Sunday, September 17, at eleven o'clock in the Church of St. Stephen by the Rt. Rev. Angus Dun, Bishop of Washington.

Mr. Currie's father, the Rev. William T. Currie, was at the time of his death, rector of St. Paul's Church, Grand Forks, N. Dakota, and his grandfather, the Rev. John Snyder, was a Methodist minister. Mr. Currie for several years has been in charge of the Editorial Office of the Bureau of Entomology and Plant Quarantine of the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Before that he was connected with the U. S. Division of Insects, U. S. National Museum. His work took him as far afield as Liberia and West Africa as well as the Western part of the United States and Canada.

Mr. Currie has long been active in the Church's work, as officer and teacher of Church Sunday School, as Lay Reader and for several years as Secretary of the Church School Teacher's Institute of the Diocese and also as Junior Warden of St. Stephen's and the Incarnation. Having retired from his work with the Government, completed his studies for the Ministry, his Ordination is to that of Perpetual Deacon. Taking part in the services were the Rev. Flint Kellogg, Rector of the Parish; Canon T. O. Wedel, Ward of the College of Preachers, and Rev. Edward Slater Dunlap, Exec Secretary of the Diocese of Was

NEW YEAR'S DAY

On New Year's Day, a happy thought
'Tis ours to give as Hope relives,
Assuring every sin-stained heart,
"Be of good courage. God FORGIVES."

Of all the greetings we can give
Our friends when opens a new year,
What can a lonely heart relieve
More than the whisper, "GOD IS NEAR"?

The salutations we most use
Are "How are you?" and "How d'ye do?"
A better message you might choose
Reminding gently, "GOD LOVES YOU".

What shall we tell a burdened soul
To lift his heart all care above,
And make the wounded spirit whole?
Make haste to tell him, "GOD IS LOVE".

—P. F. Hall.

LAUNCH OUT INTO TH...

Upon the threshold of the year
We stand with confidence.
Unknown the deep that stretches far, ...E DEEP
Or what may come from thence.
Unknown the road!
Untried the load!
Pray, why this confidence?

A weary world in throes of pain:—
"My peace I leave," He said.
The clouds of war have settled down;
While bombs crash round my head.
A weary world,
Where bombs are hurled!
It is not peace, but dread!

Our priceless treasures shattered are!—
"Let down your nets, and find."
Gone are our culture, progress, art:—
The pride of all mankind!
Our treasures burned;
Our culture ...
What is there left to find?

"We've toiled all night," and naught is left.
"Launch out into the deep."
The deep is full of deadly mines,
Which ghastly harvest reap!—
Our efforts vain:
No fruit but pain!
Why launch into the deep?

Yet, on the threshold of the year
We stand with confidence.
His Peace is not what we call peace:
Nor Treasures things of sense.
What we thought loss,
It was but dross.
God is our confidence.

HAVEN . . .

By J. W. KENNEDY

ONE OF THE FINE things about the gas rationing is the share-the-ride fellowship one enjoys frequently on the way to work. One gets to know neighbors and makes many new acquaintances and friends. In my case the conversation inevitably turns toward Church and religion when I introduce myself as a parson. Not long ago I rode downtown with a man I had heard of but had never met before. He lives in my neighborhood. We have mutual friends. From his remarks I gathered he was both intensely interested and actively engaged in civic affairs, and, of course, completely emersed in his work, a very important and demanding job in these war days. The conversation arrived at last to the point of Church attendance and the fairly inevitable confession of status along this line. He admitted without reluctance that he had not been inside the Church as a regular attendant since he was twenty-one or twenty-two years old. Something happened then to break the spell, and it has not yet been restored. From his standpoint outside the fellowship he judged the Church by a few items of remembrance which blocked both the desire for and the contact with the real article. He was not antagonistic—just indifferent, and without the slightest outward feeling of need for what the Church had to offer. He was both neighbor and very good friend of one person. His impression of a clergyman or two was good; and one, a former classmate, is now a bishop whom he admires. His objections, the barriers to his thinking squarely and fairly along religious lines, were not too many and not at all serious enough to cast off from the Church and drift for twenty years or so like a floating island, anchored nowhere.

He said the Church had compromised. Suppose on some questions in some times under the leadership of some men she has compromised; still, we cannot say the Church, which is the Body of Christ, must be killed because of a sore finger which will get well. Einstein discovered differently when the mad game of Hitler began in Germany. It was the Church, not the universities and the great news journals, that stood uncompromisingly for the truth. Look at Europe and the Far East for what the Church is doing under its present trial by fire. Oh yes, some of its members and even its clergy have compromised, but these are not the living members of Christ's body. He will have to examine the healthy places of the Church's life or suspend his right to judge.

LIKEWISE he said certain of the clergy he had known were just good fellows and not leaders into deep spiritual waters. He did not say how many, but undoubtedly just a few when contrasted with the many. His sampling has not been very generous and his judgment of the clergy rests unchanged upon the basis of a few experiences. He was inconsistent here because he admitted the high type of some clergy and admired them; but he had not allowed them to clear up his doubts and make him aware of his needs. The clergy as a whole are the finest and highest types of American manhood.

He also said he could not say the Apostle's Creed conscientiously. He was not specific about the parts he could not say—perhaps the sections concerning the descent into hell, born of a virgin, communion of saints, and resurrection of the body. He had never really sought to understand what the true meaning was behind the rather archaic and confusing terminology. I'll wager he could say this creed, which comes close to meaning the same as the Apostle's creed.

"I believe in God, the Father of all:

Church Historian Disappointed in Cairo Statement

FULL RECOGNITION of China in the councils of the United Nations is a positive and admirable feature of the Cairo communique but from a standpoint of a just and durable peace in the Far East the communique is "extremely disappointing," said Dr. Kenneth Scott Latourette, Christian historian and well known authority on the Far East, in a statement today.

Dr. Latourette, a member of the Committee of Direction of the Commission on a Just and Durable Peace of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, described as a "measure required by justice" the proposal to return Manchuria, Formosa and the Pescadores to China; asserted that Korean independence is "overdue" and cited the "justice" of refusing to permit Japan to retain control of islands seized in the last war or mandated islands she is using for military operations.

In appraising the "disappointing" aspects of the first communique of the American, British and Chinese governments, Dr. Latourette, expressing his personal views in Post War World, the Commission's bimonthly publication, cited the Guiding Christian Principles adopted by the Commission. The third principle states that "it is contrary to moral order that nations in their dealings with one another shall be motivated by a spirit of revenge and retaliation. Such attitudes will lead, as they always have led, to renewed conflict.

"The disposition of territory proposed in the communique will require so drastic an adjustment in the economy of Japan, as to threaten the livelihood of her people. Without some assurance that the powers are prepared to grant the Japanese people opportunity to make possible a legitimate livelihood the implication is that a complete and permanent crippling of the Japanese nation is contemplated.

WE BELIEVE this attitude violates the basic moral principles of a just and durable peace. In failing to take cognizance of the economic situation in which Japan will be left by this reduction in her empire, the Cairo communique falls short of the position of the Atlantic charter which assures all states 'victors as well as vanquished, of access, on equal terms, to the trade and raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity.'"

Dr. Latourette said that the failure in the communique to hold out any hope to the Japanese people seems to be a concession to the spirit of vengeance and that far from encouraging moderate elements in Japan it will further solidify the masses of the people behind their military leaders and thus make certain a "serious and prolonged" struggle.

In this connection he cited the Commission's Guiding Principle forbidding a spirit of vengeance and retaliation and the pronouncement by the International Round Table of Christian Leaders at Princeton last July that the victorious powers "should shape their policy toward Japan so as to encourage the emergence within Japan of liberal and moderate elements disposed to cooperate in international arrangements of security."

Noting that the communique is confined to stating the purposes of the three Allies toward Japan, Dr. Latourette said that it does not deal with such matters as the possible restoration of Hongkong to China, the possible independence, however remote, of the Japanese-occupied territories in the East Indies and Southeast Asia or the future disposition of Pacific Islands which are to be stripped from Japan.

DUE TO THESE omissions," he added, "the communique falls far short of stating the basic prerequisites for a just and durable peace in the Far East. Hongkong is as Chinese historically and in population as Formosa and Manchuria. The Far East, equally with Europe, requires the operation of an international organization such as was proposed by the Moscow Declaration."

Dr. Latourette said that the promises of Japan to some of the Far Eastern peoples who have been subjected to white supremacy will make it difficult for the United Nations to win their cooperation unless assurances are given that the purpose of the Fourth Pillar of Peace will be realized.

The Commission's Fourth Pillar states: "The peace must proclaim the goal of autonomy for subject peoples and it must establish international organization to assure and supervise the realization of that end."

The Far Eastern authority said that with respect to the future disposition of the Pacific Islands to be stripped from Japan "it is to be hoped that the assurance of the three great powers that they have 'no thought of territorial expansion' will be scrupulously followed in substance as well as in form."

"It is ardently to be desired," he concluded, "that the three governments responsible for the communique will take early steps to speak about these matters and to allay fears which will be increasingly aroused if silence is prolonged."

A FIGHT FOR THINGS OF THE SPIRIT

QUITE FAIRLY, the war in which we are engaged has been distinguished from other wars, in that it is essentially a fight for things of the spirit, a battle for freedom, justice, and a way of life. We are reminded this week of a spiritual warfare in which all men are, of necessity, engaged, by virtue of their very being. In every man "the flesh lusteth against the spirit," there are strivings within and without and man's adversary, the spirit of evil, is always active with his cunning assaults. Man's problem is always how to withstand and to stand, how, overcoming all things, to endure. Being engaged in a spiritual fight, he needs spiritual weapons. It is the claim of Christianity that the necessary weapons are made available to the Christian warrior; he has at his command the whole armoury of God. Primarily is truth, as revealed by Him who is the Truth; the truth about God and man's relationship to Him. The truth about God's redeeming and sustaining love; the truth about life's values and the heart's true treasure. He has available a will, equipped by faith and trust in God's purposes and promises. In a special place, the Apostle Paul names as one of man's chief weapons the Word of God, primarily revealed in the Book. If today we lament a decline in spiritual apperception and many losses in this spiritual warfare, how much of that decline and loss can be traced to a neglect of or half-hearted regard for the Word of God? The whole armoury is available; it is ours to use it. If we will and do, victory is assured.—Editorial in The Record (English).

How May We "Feed" on Jesus

By THOMAS F. OPIE

POSSIBLY THE MOST widely observed ceremony in the world is the Blessed Sacrament of the Lord's Supper—called also Holy Communion, the Eucharist, the Mass, the Holy Supper, etc. Can a liberal, intelligent mind get an approach to this sacrament at all in keeping with scientific thought—or any intelligent view of reality? I unhesitatingly answer, yes.

Apparently two great modern branches of the Church have given up the idea that this can be done, and have abandoned the sacrament—in its outward forms. Considering the bickerings and the superstitions and the misunderstandings that have arisen in this connection, there is little wonder that the Christian Scientists and the Society of Friends or Quakers have nothing in their formularies which calls for the elements and the forms—the "incidents" and the "accidents" of this holy ceremony.

Let us look at some of the views held. Transubstantiation, or "change of form and substance", is the view apparently held by the Roman Catholics and by many, if not most, of the Anglo-Catholics. The belief that at the prayer of consecration the "bread" and the "wine" actually "turn into" something they were not—into the actual (real!) body and blood of Jesus. One of our own clergy of the Anglo-Catholic group referred to the Christmas Eucharist in these words, "On our altars, in the Holy Sacrament of the Mass, Christ is 'born anew' ". Another writes me that the "change" is a subtle alteration of form which cannot be detected—such, for example, as the change in a piece of steel—when this steel is "rubbed with a lode-stone"! But, with what, pray, does one "rub" the elements, in order to achieve this piece of material magic? I ask it with deep reverence—and not in a facetious vein.

ONE OF THE Anglo-Catholic bishops is asked, "At what moment in the service" does this amazing—this "undetectable"—indeed, this "imagined" change take place? After a bit of quibble, the good diocesan replied, "No one can tell at just what moment in the ceremony the change takes place". But he held that a "change" does take place—a change which, if you please, cannot possibly be detected! But why assume such a change? Why try to hypnotize oneself into the idea that there is "change"?

The Episcopal church does not hold such a view—and apparently does not feel that we have to hypnotize ourselves into this fallacy. It is "only by faith" that we receive the "body of Christ", says this church. The elements are taken and eaten only after a "heavenly" and a "spiritual" manner. "Transubstantiation" is "repugnant" to the teaching of the Bible—and "overthroweth the nature of a Sacrament"—and is the cause of "many superstitions," etc. Too, the elements are not to be "carried around"—not to be "reserved"—not to be "lifted up"—and not to be "worshipped". (These are statements briefed from the formularies of the Episcopal church. See Article Twenty-eight in particular).

"Consubstantiation" is, I believe, the position held by many Lutherans and possibly others. It is as if you took a piece of metal and placed it in the flames until it was red hot. The heat, it is maintained, does not alter the nature and quality of the metal—but simply penetrates it. The "magnet" idea is also based on this premise. Just why the "quibble" should be invoked I am not in a position to say.

"Symbolism," it seems to me, is the most tenable—as it seems also the most helpful, the least obnoxious and the least repellent view one may hold with regard to this blessed sacrament. When Jesus instituted this ceremony I do not think that He had in mind anything subtle or inexplicable—and I am sure He would not be likely to intend to baffle the simple minds of the simple peasant folk who were His first followers. He was simply not that kind of a Person!—not "mysterious"—not "mystifying"—not "inexplicable"; but always straight-forward, direct, plain—utterly simple.

BUT DID NOT JESUS say, "This is my Body"?—"this is my blood". Yes, and He said, "I am the door". He said, "I am the vine". He said, "I am the Good Shepherd".. What kind of a "door" is Jesus? What kind of a "vine" is Jesus? What kind of a "shepherd"? He said also, "Ye are the salt of the earth". No, it will not do! If you can prove to me that Jesus meant that He was some sort of actual "vine"—some sort of real "door"—and that His followers are in truth actual "salt"—then I will revamp my views on all this—and concede that He actually, literally and not in a "figure", meant that what He held in His hand was, in very truth and reality, His actual body and His actual blood—though both His body and His blood stood before the disciples, in complete parts to the last degree of a cell and a protoplasm! Jesus spoke in a "figure", using the accustomed manner of speech peculiar to the Orient. Kindergartners and well-meaning quibblers to the contrary notwithstanding.

But how am I to "feed" on Jesus?—if the idea of actual body and blood does not obtain? Well, I shall gladly tell you how I do it! Here is Johnny, who wants to be like his father, whom he adores. He "feeds" on Dad! He copies out his actions, his speech, and his ways. He decides that he wants to be like his Dad. He wants to be a lawyer, as his Dad is—or a farmer, or a minister or a doctor. So he unconsciously feeds on his father—but not really, actually! No—only figuratively—by a symbol—in an image. In imagination—by pure faith, if you please! Is that real? To me it is infinitely more real than the other! No son could become like his father by eating his flesh! But a boy who really adores his father and wants to become like him, studies out his father, watches him at work—in the home—in all his ways and manners. And before you know it, the lad is almost a perfect reproduction of the father! Like father—like son! But you might as well expect a boy to become "as a fish" by eating fish—as to expect him to become as Jesus—by feeding on His body and blood!

A Christian looks at Jesus. Jesus is his pattern, his copy, his example. He wants to be like that! How shall he set about it? He studies Jesus. He thinks Jesus. He does the things he thinks Jesus would want him to do. He says the things he thinks Jesus would like him to say. He "feeds" on Jesus!—in a figure!—on His blessed character, on His love, on His pure pureness, on His sweet goodness. In the Blessed Sacrament he feeds his soul on Jesusness—on Godness, as he finds it in a "spiritual"—a "heavenly" manner, not in mere crumbs and corpuscles. This is not superstition, but sound religious psychology.

"Analyses of Moscow Declarations in the Light of The Six Pillars of Peace"

By JOHN FOSTER DULLES

OUR FIRST AND BASIC PROPOSITION was that there should be established "the political framework for a continuing collaboration of the United Nations" and that "such collaboration should as quickly as possible be universal."

The Moscow Declaration pledges that "united action . . . will be continued for the organization and maintenance of peace and security" and recognizes "the necessity of establishing, at the earliest practicable date, a general international organization, based on the principle of the sovereign equality of all peace-loving States, and open to membership by all such States."

The phrase "peace-loving States" might, of course, cover an intent to postpone indefinitely membership by States which are now our enemies; or it may mean to defer such membership only until their peoples have installed governments genuinely disposed to cooperate with others for peace with justice. If the latter is intended, then the Moscow Declaration conforms in all substantial respects with our first and basic Proposition (First Pillar).

Our Commission pointed out that "the degree of collaboration can properly be related to the degree of interdependence" and that "Europe particularly illustrates the need for regional collaboration." The Moscow Declarations recognize this by establishing a "European Advisory Commission" and by pointing out that the peoples of Austria and of neighboring states are faced by "similar problems" and suggesting that they should seek together "political and economic security."

II.

Our Second Pillar advocated "bringing within the scope of international agreement those economic and financial acts of national governments which have widespread international repercussions."

This was not specifically dealt with by the Moscow Declarations. However, Mr. Eden stated to Parliament (November 11, 1943) that these economic matters were discussed with recognition that, after security, they "constitute the most important field in which the lot of man can be improved and that the three foreign ministers "found ourselves in agreement on the program for handling these vast problems, on many of which the work already has begun." That reference is doubtless to the plans for an institution to stabilize currencies and to the now established United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration.

III.

Our Third Pillar advocated permanent machinery "to adapt the treaty structure of the world to changing underlying conditions."

This was not specifically dealt with by the Moscow Declaration. It would presumably be the ultimate responsibility of the "general international organization" which was proposed. By implication the Moscow decisions recognized that political order, if it is to promote peace, must be flexible. The European Advisory Commission which was established illustrates the kind of expert standing body that is needed to study and advise on the need for adapting, from time to time, the political order of Europe to changing underlying conditions. It was designed, Mr. Eden says, to enable us "to look ahead." If such a body is made a permanent part of the "general international organization" and if similar expert standing bodies are set up in relation to other areas, then good progress will have been made in creating machinery for detecting and curing future maladjustments before they develop consequences that menace the world.

IV.

Our Fourth Pillar contemplated international organization to promote the achievement of autonomy as the goal of colonial administration. On this topic the Moscow Declarations are silent, perhaps because the agenda seems to have been confined to maters relevant to Europe.

V.

Our Fifth Pillar contemplated the establishment of "procedures for controlling military establishments everywhere."

The Moscow Declaration contemplates a "general agreement with respect to the regulation of armaments in the post-war period."

The difference between the two statements is principally the difference, if any, between "control" and "regulation." Our Commission used the word "control" as having two aspects: one negative, namely, to prevent military establishments "which have no valid reason for existence except to enable their possessors to be a law unto themselves; the other positive, namely, "to bring such military establishments as remain into the affirmative service of international order." "Regulate" seems more to emphasize the negative aspect of control, but this is not necessarily so, and it may be that the Moscow Declaration contemplates all that is envisaged by our Fifth Pillar.

VI.

Our Sixth Pillar provided that "the peace must establish in principle, and seek to achieve in practice, the right of individuals everywhere to religious and intellectual liberty."

The Moscow Declarations do not proclaim any general bill of rights, but do deal with the matter in relation to Italy. It is said "freedom of speech, of religious worship, of political belief, of press and of public meeting shall be restored in full measure to the Italian people." This assertion implies acceptance in principle of the right of individuals everywhere to religious and intellectual liberty and constitutes a concrete step to achieve that in practice.

Conclusion

We can properly characterize the Moscow Declarations as being a notable step toward realizing international order as envisaged by our Six Pillars of Peace. They mark a great development from the Atlantic Charter, which proposed no international institutions and which contained no reference to religious and in-

"Watchman Tell Us"

John Bowing's great hymn, "Watchman, Tell Us of the Night", comes quickly to mind as one thinks of the approaching New Year. Most thinking people can tell the watchman something about the night. We know that there are millions of our brethren who have known nothing but darkness for better than five years now. A poignant ache passes through the heart as one thinks of the thousands of children whose childish laughter has been chilled by the darkness of blackouts. Of these same children who have lived all their lives under the terror of crashing bombs. Children who have never known what it is to see grown-ups live in peace with one another. One wonders what their generation will be like.

We know that the night has brought the horror of total global war. We know that it means loved ones are far from home, facing constant danger on a hundred battle fronts.

We know that the night has brought economic distress; social unrest; the cringing enslavement of millions. We know that the night has brought a terror unknown in the history of mankind.

All of this in spite of our boasting of a civilization that prided itself in its material achievements. We then have the temerity to call it a Christian civilization. We are learning painfully that only a veneer, and a very thin veneer, of the Christian spirit covered our material civilization. Perhaps that was our great error, and the night has illuminated it for us. Our pride in things and our disregard for the men made in the image of God. All these things the night has made clear for us.

But "Watchman, tell us of the night", what are its signs of better things? Are there no great promises wrapped up in all its darkness? As Christians we know that the watchman will answer yes to these questions. For as Christians we are children of Hope. As Christians we must be realists and recognize quite frankly that being hopeful is not an easy task as one has recently written:

"Faith in the ultimate destiny of man as a child of God is difficult to implement in political action. Our forces are divided between those who expect a new earth in our lifetime and those who accept the discipline of the long purposes of God. The Christian hope which we both hold is too grand to be politically effective and too small to be of avail." (Rhoda E. McCulloch.)

This is a stern and realistic statement. As we face the New Year we find ourselves still in the night of engendered hatreds. The way out is not all clear. We know that there is rough sailing ahead. Dangerous shoals abound. But as Christians we know that Light has come into this world that no man-made night can ever put out. For it is the Light of God's love for His children everywhere. The New Year may take us one step further along the road that will lead to the building of a new world order. It will not do it unless in our own lives we manifest our belief in the eternal glory of the beaming star of God's love.

Surely the hallowed prayer that will be on the lips of all this New Year's Day is, God, may this year bring Peace. But may we as Christians work now to see that the peace that comes will be a peace bearing some semblance of the good will that God shares with all men.

We know the night. May we train ourselves to learn something of the day. The day that brings God's message of Love. That is "the promised day of Israel". And God's promises will not fail—but we must do our part.

Bishop-Elect Dun

We feel that congratulations are in order both to the Diocese of Washington and to Dean Dun, of the Episcopal Theological Seminary. A very fine and important diocese is to be congratulated on electing a man of great talent as its leader. A true scholar with liberal outlook is to be congratulated upon being called to the high office of Bishop of Washington.

The Diocese of Washington has naturally grown with the rapid expansion that has taken place in the District of Columbia during the past few years. We imagine that with the close of the war, there will be some shrinkage in population. But Washington as the seat of Government will continue to be an important city. The Church has an opportunity to bear real witness to their Lord in the capital city. The magnificent Cathedral, through the vision of the late Bishop Freeman, has won a place in the city's life.

With the many opportunities for real mission work, with excellent equipment with which to work, we are certain that Bishop-elect Angus Dun will bring to the Diocese of Washington the inspiration of real leadership. He demonstrated his ability to think clearly, and to speak forcefully when he presented the majority report of the Commission on Approaches to Unity at the last General Convention. His speech was one of the highlights of the House of Deputies. The keynote of his address was a breadth of vision and a sympathetic understanding of the viewpoint of those with whom he disagreed. Under his leadership we expect great things from the Diocese of Washington in the years that lie ahead.

May God's rich blessings be upon Angus Dun as he assumes the leadership of the Diocese of Washington.

$50,000 Offered for Post-War Employment Plan

THE ESTABLISHMENT of a series of awards totaling $50,000 for the best plans to stimulate post-war employment in the United States was announced December 1 at a luncheon in the Waldorf Astoria attended by more than one hundred prominent industrialists, labor leaders, economists, and government officials. The announcement was made by George V. Denny, Jr., moderator of America's Town Meeting of the Air, who will supervise the project.

A board of four distinguished judges will consider the entries in the competition. On the board are Dr. Clarence Dykstra, president of the University of Wisconsin; Dr. Wesley C. Mitchell, professor of economics at Columbia University; Dr. Beardsley Ruml, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

Entries will be judged solely on the basis of the practical contribution they offer to post-war employment and not on literary merit. A first prize of $25,000 in war bonds (purchase price) will be paid for the best plan. There will be a second award of $10,000 in bonds, and fifteen $1,000 awards. Any citizen of the United States, including members of the armed services, is entitled to enter the competition.

THE AWARDS were made possible through a grant from the Pabst Brewing Company in celebration of its 100th anniversary, and are to be known as the Pabst Post-War Employment Awards. Judging of the entries is independent of the company, and all administrative details will be handled by the Pabst Post-War Employment Awards Committee of 551 Fifth Avenue, New York City. Members of the faculty of the economics department of Columbia University will assist the judges in supervising the preliminary judging of the expected thousands of manuscripts. Responsible Government officials and agencies concerned with post-war problems will receive copies of the winning plans, later to be distributed to the public in booklet form.

Competition for the awards will start immediately and close February 7, 1944. Announcement of the winners will be made on April 12th, or as soon thereafter as judging can be completed. Each plan must be stated in 2,000 words or less, although entrants in the competition are permitted to send supporting data. Manuscripts must be written in English, on one side of the paper, and preferably by typewriter. Illegible offerings will not be considered, and each manuscript must bear the entrant's signature, home address, and occupation. In the event of a winning entry, submitted jointly by more than one person, the amount of the prize will be divided equally among the collaborators.

If two entries are tied for an award each will receive the full amount of the award. Entries must be mailed and postmarked not later than midnight of February 7, 1944, and regardless of postmark must be received not later than March 27, 1944. The Pabst Post-war Awards Committee and the sponsoring company state that they will not be responsible for entries that are delayed, damaged, undelivered or lost. The board of judges have also reserved the right to require any entrant to furnish proof of authorship of a submitted plan.

A DIVERSITY of social and economic opinion is reflected in the board of judges. Dr. Beardsley Ruml, exponent of the famous Ruml plan for pay-as-you-go income taxes, is an outstanding figure in economics and the social sciences. He earned degrees in science at Dartmouth and in philosophy at the University of Chicago. Dr. Ruml served as assistant to the president of the Carnegie Corporation and as director, for many years, of the Laura Spelman Fund of New York, and is at present a member of the board of trustees of that organization. He has also been dean of the Social Science division and professor of education at the University of Chicago. At present Dr. Ruml is advisor to the National Resources Planning Board, chairman of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, and treasurer of R. H. Macy and Company.

Dr. Wesley Clair Mitchell, professor of economics for the last twenty years at Columbia University, is best known for his work on business cycles. He took degrees at the University of Chicago, the University of Hale, and at Venice, Oxford, Columbia, and Harvard. He is an outstanding authority on economics and the social sciences, and has served as professor at several leading American universities and at Oxford University. During the last war, Dr. Mitchell functioned as chief of the price section of President Wilson's War Industries Board, and was awarded the gold medal of the National Institute of Social Sciences. In that period he rendered outstanding service as director of research of the National Bureau of Economic Research. Later, during the depression years, Dr. Mitchell acted as chairman of the President's Research Committee on Social Trends, as a member of the National Planning Board and Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works. He is the author of many works on economics and social trends, notably, "Business Cycles" and "Business Cycles, the Problem and Its Setting."

Mr. A. F. Whitney is the son of an Iowa minister who rose from the ranks to head the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. Beginning his career as a railroad news agent, he labored subsequently as brakeman for four leading roads. He became chairman of the grievance committee of the union forty years ago, climbed successively to the vice-presidency and the presidency. Mr. Whitney has led the Brotherhood and been its most outspoken figure for the last fifteen years. He served as a delegate to the Inter-American Conference for the Maintenance of Peace in Argentina in 1936 and as a member of the Committee on Unemployment census a year later. Mr. Whitney is the author of a book, "Main Street—not Wall Street", and has contributed articles to "Common Sense" and other magazines of opinion.

Dr. Clarence A. Dykstra, president of the University of Wisconsin, is one of the country's leading educators. He was the first national director of Selective Service, but retired from the post more than a year ago to devote his time to the University of Wisconsin. Dr. Dykstra has taken degrees in eight colleges and universities, has served as economics professor in four others. His lengthy list of public services includes: City Manager of Cincinnati, three years; a member of the advisory board, National Emergency Public Works Administration; Ohio State Advisory Commit-

A Message to the Churches of America

By WILLIAM GREEN,
President of the American Federation of Labor

THIS IS A TIME when all those concerned with the wellbeing of the people of our Nation should make earnest efforts to strengthen the spiritual ideals of our entire community.

Many of the ideals for which some ten millions of our sons and daughters are enrolled in the Armed Services to defend against foreign aggression are ideals which are sorely lacking right here at home. Christian civilization is based primarily on the freedom and responsibility of the individual conscience. The sanction of law is the self-discipline of the community which delegates authority to some and responsibility to all. Respect for the rights of others is a mandate of good citizenship.

Over a period of years, however, the glamor of wealth, the power of privilege, the vice of prejudice, the success of self-seeking, the abuse of statutory law, and the denial of community responsibility have all combined to distort the image of good citizenship in our land.

War strips away with savage hands the superficial vices of combatants and assays the true worth of the individuals and the community. Today, after two years of war, America and Americans can see the victory ahead, and with profound and grateful humility join in saying that the heart of the Nation is sound. The essential test of our manhood has been and is being made, and the triumph is clearest where the test is hardest. In the ordeal of battle, the unselfish heroism proves the brotherhood of our citizen soldiers.

We cannot afford to let those ideals revealed anew on the fire of battle tarnish or dim when the fire is extinguished. A way must be found to keep the ideals so constant and clear that no excuse can again be found for rekindling anew the fires of war.

That is why I believe it so important now to ask the Churches of America to lead the way to a lasting peace and an enduring revival of the democratic spirit of Christian civilization.

DEMOCRACY must be made to work. It must be made a reality in the social life of neighborhood and nation. The dignity of the common man and the self-discipline of plain people demand that our free way of life must be fashioned to express the will and serve the needs of the people themselves.

The defeat of our enemies will prove that the apparent efficiency of dictatorship fails to serve the needs of the people and the consent of the governed comes clearly only out of participation in all of the basic processes.

The American Federation of Labor represents a bulwark in the process of democracy in the economic life of working people. Joined with the representatives of organized industry, with the government as arbitrator, the American Federation of Labor provides the basis of the economic democracy which our nation needs to shape the pattern of social justice in the years ahead.

Progress toward the goal, so desperately needed to prevent an overburdened political machinery from resorting anew to the error of dictatorship, can come only by an awakening of our people to the acuteness of the need and the soundness of the procedure.

The Churches of our Nation, which know so well the need for a functioning faith in the functioning of democracy, and which serve the spiritual needs of working people and employers alike can furnish the forum where the pattern of economic democracy can be expounded without the partisanship of special interest.

If we practice the brotherhood of Christianity we can go far toward avoiding strife at home and abroad. We shall succeed if we will remember that spiritual values arise from the unselfish devotion of man to mankind. The cry "Am I my brother's keeper?" must ring forever in the Christian conscience and it can be answered only in the spirit of service, which will be truly in keeping with the higher destinies of mankind.

"ANALYSES OF MOSCOW DECLARATIONS IN THE LIGHT OF THE SIX PILLARS OF PEACE"

tellectual freedom. There still remain major omissions to which we have referred, notably the omission to deal with colonial or economic matters. There are ambiguities, as in such a phrase, as "peace-loving nations." But the positive aspects of the Moscow Declaration are sound, rejecting as they do any attempt to base world order merely on the military alliance of a few. The Declarations do recognize a special interim responsibility on Great Britain, the U. S. S. R., China and the U. S. for "joint action on behalf of the community of nations." But, as said in our "Long-Range Peace Objectives" September 18, 1941 "the end of the present war will find an overwhelming concentration of power in one or two nations. That power will be a reality the implications of which we cannot avoid. Our task will be to make it a beneficent reality. That requires that we use our power, not to perpetuate itself, but to create, support and eventually give way to international institutions drawing their vitality from the whole family of nations." That appears to be the spirit and objective of the Moscow Decisions.

The Christian forces of this country can be grateful that their government has cooperated with the governments of Great Britain, Russia and China to make a sound beginning for world order. We can legitimately feel that we have done much to create here a public opinion that has made this possible. We must not, however, be complacent or relax our efforts. The Moscow Declarations go only part of the way. Even then they are still words. To move from words into functioning institutions infused with the spirit of Christian fellowship remains a political and spiritual task of immense proportions.

HAVEN

And in Jesus Christ, Revealer of God and Saviour of men:

And in the Spirit of Holiness, which is the Spirit of God and of Jesus.

By which Spirit man is made divine:

I acknowledge the communion of all faithful people in beauty, goodness and truth:

And I believe in the forgiveness of sins,

The glory of righteousness,

The victory of love, and the Life Eternal."

I wonder what his real reason is for his attitude. I should like the privilege of knowing. May he become the man who wants to know instead of the man who doesn't care. I offer the following prescription to be taken until a cure is effected:

Go to Church each Sunday—try churches and denominations until one strikes you as the one.

Read carefully the little book just out by C. S. Lewis, The Case for Christianity. (He is also the author of The Screwtape Letters.)

Tune in "Haven" each morning and keep in contact with this attempt to make the Christian religion more vital and available, full of new sights and insights.

When you find a clergyman you feel you can trust, open up and talk things out.

WHEN CHRISTMAS COMES

When Christmas lights are twinkling,
And carols fill the air,
And the gladness of the season
Dispels the mood of care—
When the Yule-tide spirit pulses
Through the tingling atmosphere,
And the smiles of friendly faces
Warm our hearts with Christmas cheer—
Let us think of Him who loved us,
And taught our hearts to love,
That the life of men on earth
Might be like that above.

When we see the little children
Gathered 'round the Christmas tree,
Their eyes agleam with laughter
And their voices full of glee—
When we fill their hands with presents,
And send them out to play,
While we go to share our bounty
With some less fortunate than they—
Let us think of Him who nestled
In a bed of fragrant hay,
And lived and loved and suffered
That we might find the Way.

When we greet our friends and loved ones
With cordial word and nod,
For the priceless boon of friendship
Let us give our thanks to God.
And to Him who came to be
The Perfect Friend and true,
At this season of His coming,
Let us pledge our hearts anew.
May the love of Christ constrain us
To walk with Him forever,
In a happy, trustful comradeship,
That time nor death can sever!

—Henry Wade DuBose.

CHRISTMAS EVE

Quiet rules the stanchioned rows
Where the cattle stand and doze;
Safely housed the gentle sheep
Huddled in their woolly sleep;
Not a dove in shadowed cote
Makes a single cooing note;
The big brown mare within her stall
Stirs her bed-straw not at all;
Sheep and cattle, doves and mare
Are still as if they were not there;
Blest is the Eve when long ago
The dumb beasts saw the Christ Star's glow!

—J. M. Dowlin, in Our Dumb Animals.

A SONG OF CHRISTMAS

A pallet of straw
That shines like gold,
But cold is the night,
Cold, O cold.

"Hush, my little One,
Angels' wings
Shall keep Thee warm,"
His mother sings.

Shines silver bright,
For Thee my Jesus,
This night . . . this night."

—Stanley Stokes.

STAR OF THE EAST

Star of the East, that long ago
Brought wise men on their way
Where, angels singing to and fro,
The Child of Bethlehem lay—
Above that Syrian hill afar
Thou shinest out tonight, O Star!

Star of the East, the night were drear,
But for the tender grace
That with thy glory comes to cheer
Earth's loneliest, darkest place;
For by that charity we see
Where there is hope for all—and me.

Star of the East! show us the way
In wisdom undefiled
To seek that manger out and lay
Our gifts before the Child—
To bring our hearts and offer them
Unto our King in Bethlehem!

LEONARD AND RUTHIE'S TWINKLE TREE

PART II

Kathleen Hay

The small dog, with his small, stubby tail, moved towards the back door, looking back at Pussy White all the time.

Pussy White gave a faint "meow" as she left the nice warm fire behind, but all the same she followed Fido out on the back porch and down . . . down . . . down the dark, snow covered white steps that led into the garden below.

"Me-ow . . . it's freezing cold outside," the small puss complained, half wishing that Ruthie would awaken and put on her warm coat and bring her back, as she would do if she only knew.

"Never mind that," said Fido, "we can keep warm in our fur coats, and you're so clever about climbing that you can choose a tree that has a plenty of green branches to hold the shiny, twinkly lights, and I'm just sure Ruthie will hang an extra supply of Christmas turkey on the tree for you . . . tomorrow!"

Pussy White gave a contented little purr as they trotted off in the dusk.

"Here we are where the trees are thickest, and we did not get in front of even one car. Now we can begin to look."

"Oh!" exclaimed Pussy White. "Isn't that a twinkle tree, the very kind they want over there?"

"I knew your bright eyes would find one in a hurry; now, Miss Pussy, climb it quickly and tell me if the branches are thick enough to hold all the gifts."

Pussy White obligingly climbed higher and higher, and then a queer thing happened. Two men came along and stopped right under the tree that Pussy had just climbed!

"Here is the very kind of tree marked with those shiny candles so we'd know the special kind the boy and girl want. Take the axe and cut it down quickly."

"Bow . . . wow . . . Bow . . . WOW!" and Fido dashed back and forth, barking furiously.

"Well, if that isn't funny; there is the little pet dog that belongs to the children, out here in the snow."

Whack . . . whack, and the axe of the woodsman cut deeper into the bark of the tree, while poor Fido kept up a

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF THE NEWS

BISHOP MANNING'S CHRISTMAS MESSAGE

New York, N. Y.—As Bishop Manning was unable to be present at the Christmas Services, the following Christmas Message from the Bishop was read from the Altar of the Cathedral at the Midnight Christmas Service. The Message was included in the broadcast of the service given from 8 minutes past midnight to 12:30 over the Blue Network.

The Bishop's Message

To all of you who are gathered in this Cathedral, and to those everywhere who are joining in the Midnight Christmas Eucharist, and to the absent members of your families wherever they may be;

To all the people of our whole land, and to those now listening over the radio and sharing in the hymns and the worship;

To those all over the world of every Race and Nation who are suffering the Cruelties, the Wrongs, and the Terrors of this War;

And especially to the Men and Women of our Armed Forces who are giving themselves for us and for their fellow-men:

May this Christmas bring new Faith and Hope, new certainty of Victory for Right and Freedom, new assurance that after this conflict is ended there shall be a true fulfillment of the promise that Christmas brings, the promise that, by the power of Christ, this shall be a World of Justice, Peace, and Good-Will, for all men everywhere.

WILLIAM T. MANNING,
Bishop of New York.

FAREWELL RECEPTION TENDERED ARCHDEACON AND MRS. HAGGER

Detroit, Mich.—A farewell reception for the Ven. Leonard P. Hagger, Archdeacon of the Diocese of Michigan, and Mrs. Hagger, was held at St. Andrew's Church, Detroit, on the evening of Tuesday, December 21, attended by many representatives of the Mission Field and the organizations with which the Archdeacon worked most closely during his fifteen years in this position—the Woman's Auxiliary, Girls' Friendly Society, Detroit Clericus, Diocesan Altar Guild, Daughters of the King—and members of the Department of Missions, Bishop's Committees of the Diocese, and the Executive Council.

Chairman of the committee which arranged the reception was the Rev. Lawrence E. Midworth, rector of the Church of the Epiphany, representing the Detroit Clericus, and included in its membership were Mr. John C. Spaulding, president of the newly formed Episcopal Laymen's Club; Mrs. M. S. Marr, president of the Woman's Auxiliary, and the Rev. Gordon Matthews, executive secretary of the diocese. In the reception line were the Rt. Rev. Frank W. Creighton, D. D., bishop of the diocese, and Mrs. Creighton; Mr. and Mrs. Marr; the Rev. William C. Hamm, president of the Detroit Clericus, and Mrs. Hamm, and Archdeacon and Mrs. Hagger.

During the evening, Bishop Creighton presented a pair of lamps, the gift of the diocese, to Archdeacon and Mrs. Haggar, and also representatives of Ephphatha Mission for the deaf presented a resolution of appreciation, and gave Archdeacon Hagger a book.

Archdeacon Hagger becomes rector of St. Paul's Church, Chillicothe, Ohio, on January 1. He completed twenty years in the Diocese of Michigan last fall, the first five of which were spent as rector of St. Jude's Church in Fenton.

BISHOP-ELECT BOYNTON CONSECRATION JAN. 2.

New York, N. Y.—Presiding Bishop Tucker announces that he has appointed the Rt. Rev. Charles B. Colmore to act for him as chief consecrator at the consecration of Bishop Coadjutor-elect Charles F. Boynton, in St. John's Cathedral, San Juan, Puerto Rico, on January 2, 1944, at 10:00 A. M.

Mr. Boynton will serve under Bishop Colmore in Puerto Rico until his retirement and then, as Coadjutor, will succeed him.

Co-consecrators will be the Rt. Rev. B. F. P. Ivins of Milwaukee, and the Rt. Rev. W. J. Gardner of New Jersey. Bishop Gardner will also be the preacher. Mr. Boynton will be presented by Bishop Ivins, and, it is hoped, Bishop George Hand of Antigua, B. W. I.

The Rev. John E. Levo of Fredericksted, St. Croix, V. I., and the Rev. Lorenzo Alvarez of Mayaguez have been invited to act as the attending presbyters, and the Rev. Esteban Reus Garcia of Ponce has been invited to read the Litany. The Rev. Antonio Villafane will be deputy Registrar.

EIGHT AFRICAN PRIESTS ORDAINED

New York, N. Y.—Eight African priests recently ordained for the diocese of Northern Rhodesia have strengthened the staff in that large diocese of 300,000 square miles. The regional African chief was ill and could not attend the service, to which hundreds of people came from miles around, but he sent his council and also sent a young ox as a gift. Among the men were the first two Tonga Africans to be ordained. All the new clergy will be working among people of their own tribes. The young bishop, not yet thirty-five, is Robert Selby Taylor. Northern Rhodesia is one of the four dioceses supported by the English Universities Mission to Central Africa.

PROMINENT CHURCHMAN INAUGURATED AS COLLEGE PRESIDENT

Waupun, Wis.—On the seventh of December Dr. Clark George Kuebler, prominent layman of the Diocese of Chicago, was inaugurated as seventh president of Ripon College, Ripon, Wisconsin. Ripon was founded by Congregationalists and has usually been under the control of that denomination. Most of the previous presidents have been Congregational ministers.

Dr. Kuebler has been widely known as an active layman in the diocese, and a member of St. Luke's Parish, Evanston, Ill. For the past several years he has been a professor in classical languages at Northwestern University. He has been a deputy to General Convention, and is widely known as a speaker on religious as well as educational subjects. He is a master in the sort of apologetic which makes a strong appeal to lay folk, especially to young people. His inaugural address was an eloquent address along these lines.

Some ninety universities, colleges and seminaries were represented in the academic procession, as well as about thirty of the national learned societies. Over 100 clergymen were in the procession also, of whom about 70% were Episcopalians. Several bishops of the Church were in attendance also, including the Bishops of Fond du Lac, Milwaukee, Chicago, Western Michigan, Northern Indiana, and Indianapolis. Some of these had parts in the inaugural ceremonies.

46% of Men in Small Parish Off to War

Waupun, Wis.—When the Vicar of Trinity Mission reads the names of men that are on the parish honor roll, and offers the prayers of the Church for their well being, he calls the roll of 46% of the male communicant list and 21% of the entire parish list. There are only 94 communicant members in the parish, including children who have been confirmed. Twenty men are in the armed forces of the nation, distributed throughout practically all branches of the service, and scattered from India to North Africa.

SEAMEN'S INSTITUTE ISSUES "THE MAINSTAY"

Newport, R. I.—The Seamen's Church Institute, the Rev. Roy W. Magoun, superintendent and chaplain, has issued its attractive December booklet, The Mainstay. The Newport S. C. I. always shares its Christmas with Newport in Monmouthshire, England, and is doing so this year, too. Chaplain Magoun says that three big words in our wartime vocabulary should be Sacrifice, Service, and SALVAGE. Waste nothing! The Mainstay relates that one sailor boy in a hospital bed, after listening to the praises of New York City sung by a loyal New Yorker, replied that his little town down in Georgia has something that New York City never can have. "What's that?" asked the visitor. And the sailor boy replied, "My home".

COMMEMORATE BLESSINGS BY GIVING

Montclair, N. J.—The Church School at St. Luke's celebrated Thanksgiving Day with a special service of Hymns, Bible story, Psalms, and Prayers.

In thanksgiving for the Blessings commemorated on that day, the school decided to send the Offering to the Presiding Bishop's Fund for World Relief. The substantial sum sent will aid in relieving suffering in many parts of the world.

DIOCESE OF WASHINGTON

Institute on Christian Community Service, December, 1943

Washington, D. C.—Challenging the Church to "put more spiritual power" into its social work, the Hon. Charles P. Taft addressed an institute on Christian Community Service conducted by the Department of Christian Social Relations of the Diocese of Washington held at the Church of the Epiphany on December 10. The institute was given emphasis by the current program of Forward in Service, for which the Rev. Charles W. Sheerin is diocesan chairman, and by the fact that the developments discussed during the day are in line with the expressed wishes of the Bishop-elect of Washington, the Very Rev. Angus Dun. The Rev. Almon R. Pepper, one of the leaders in the movement, spoke to the clergy on their responsibilities and opportunities in the social problems of today.

Discussions were given point by the presence of the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, dean of the Graduate School of Applied Religion in Cincinnati, who recently submitted reports of two studies which he had made in September of the Episcopal City Missions and the Institutions in the diocese. For the first time members of the boards of the institutions met together to discuss their common problems and the standards by which they should be guided in their work. The reports themselves provide a sound basis for hoped-for cooperative effort and advance in the field of community service.

Plans for a broadened and enlarged program for Episcopal City Missions were presented by the Rev. Peyton R. Williams, chairman of the Department of Christian Social Relations. Mr. Williams pointed out that with the recent approval of the Diocesan Convention, an executive director for City Missions will be secured who will have responsibility for giving leadership in the diocese in the fields of Christian service, Christian action and Christian education. City Missions has pioneered and been for twenty-five years active in providing the Church's ministrations to persons in penal institutions and hospitals in the District of Columbia. Today not only must there be an expansion of this work, but efforts must be made to bring the Church into more active participation in meeting the social needs of the community, in developing sympathetic understanding of the rights of minorities, and giving intelligent leadership in solving our growing social problems.

Faced with an unprecedented demand for personal counselling amongst the young women who have migrated to Washington to do war work, the Department has planned to bring to the diocese a case worker under the supervision of the Church Mission of Help. Miss Edith Balmford, Secretary of the National Council of the Church Mission of Help, spoke at the institute on the "Christian Approach to the Needs of the Individual".

The urgency of interfaith cooperation in Washington to implement the social ideals of the Church in the National Capitol were cogently stressed by the Rev. Francis McPeek, of the Washington Federation of Churches. He scored the Episcopal Church on its too frequent failures in this line.

SOUND OF OLDEST BELL IN U. S. AND LANGUAGE OF CHRIST HIGHLIGHT XMAS PROGRAM

New York—The sound of the oldest bell in the United States and the almost extinct language which Jesus Christ spoke, were heard on the air for the first time, were highlights in NBC's celebration of the Yuletide Season this year. The programs had been arranged by Dr. Max Jordan, head of NBC's Religious Broadcasts.

The bell of San Miguel, which was brought from Mexico City to Santa Fe, New Mexico, during the 17th Century, was cast in Spain August 9, 1356, as an offering to St. Joseph, with a plea that the Saint help the Spaniards drive out the Moors. Today it is considered too valuable a relic to hang in a tower and is kept in the auditorium of San Miguel Church in Santa Fe. The bell is four inches thick and weighs 760 pounds.

Its ancient mellow tones rang in Christmas Day on the "Montezuma Seminary Choir" program Christmas Eve at 12:05 A. M., EWT.

A unique feature, the reading of the story of the Nativity from the Gospel of St. Luke in Aramaic, the language of Jesus Christ, was heard on NBC's "The Message of Christmas" on Christmas Day. His Beatitude Eshai Mar Shimun XXIII, Patriarch of the Church of the East and the Assyrians, read the Gospel in Aramaic against a background of music by a choir of Syrian children.

NAVAJO INDIANS HIGHLY SUPERSTITIOUS

New York—"Can you imagine," writes a western Churchman interested in work among the Navajos, "one of our well favored and 'successful' city clergy asking his wife to help him bury—and I mean personally pick-and-shovel bury—a little dead Indian who had been deserted by his terror-stricken parents?"

He refers to a recent melancholy adventure of the Rev. Ralph Channon, now at San Juan Mission, Farmington, New Mexico. The non-Christian Navajos are still governed to a high degree by their ancient dread of death and their utter terror of touching a dead body. When anyone dies in one of their homes, the house is either destroyed or deserted. A person known or believed to be dying is placed outdoors, and later some one is called to bury the dead.

Mr. Channon was sent for one night to attend to a child who had died. The body was lying outdoors. The parents had carried the boy there, built a bonfire and watched until he died. Then they left and sent word to Mr. Channon. He and his wife took the body to the mission cemetery, secured two grave diggers, and the four of them interred the body.

Bishop J. M. Stoney, writing of this, adds that one of the sure evidences that religion is real to the Christian Navajos is their willingness to bury their own dead. With sixty-five Navajos, mostly babies, baptized within a year, and twenty-two Navajos confirmed, the situation, though difficult, is far from discouraging. Bishop Stoney reports that he knows how much more could be done if personnel and money were adequate. Mr. Channon, for instance, has no car, and the Navajos are widely scattered over the huge reservation. He hopes for a station wagon which, besides getting him around, can double as bus to bring children to Church school and ambulance for the hospital.

From the Spiritual Issues of the War

THE REBUILDING OF OUR BOMBED CITIES PROVOST OF COVENTRY'S ADDRESS TO CITIZENS OF PLYMOUTH

The Provost of Coventry, the Very Rev. R. T. Howard, speaking at a civic lunch during Plymouth's Religion and Life Week on October 22, 1943, took as his subject, "The Spiritual Foundations of Our New Cities". His address throws light on the constructive and creative thought which is being given by Christian leaders to the problems and opportunities created by the partial devastation of British cities.

The Provost said: 'The first thing I wish to do is to bring the greetings of the Mayor of Coventry (representing the people of Coventry) to you, the leading citizens of Plymouth. There certainly is a very close bond of sympathy uniting our two cities, both of them historic centers of English life, beautiful, prosperous, beloved, and then devastated by enemy action. I don't know which city got it worse! At first we in Coventry were proud to be top of the poll, but little by little we saw Plymouth draw level and even surpass us in extent of damage! There has been a wealth of sympathy in Coventry for the sufferings of your great and beautiful city and its people, because—well, we know.

"But now in these days there is another bond that joins us together, our common forward-looking vision of the new city which it will be ours to build. You are going to build a new Plymouth, and we a new Coventry. Not only a new civic center, but new streets and areas. It is an unparalleled opportunity which any generation of citizens might be proud to be given. In Coventry we have already gone a good long way in our city planning; the nature and position of the new buildings which will form our civic center have been thought out, a model of the center of the whole city is being made and will soon be on view. You also are on the verge of a similar situation.

"We cannot overestimate the importance of building our cities on right lines, because the lines on which we now lay them down—even allowing for future change and development—may last for many centuries to come.

The Purpose of Cities

"I begin by presenting you with that question which is far and away the most important one to be asked when city planning is in view—What is to be the purpose of the city you are going to build? For cities, in their form and structure, express the purpose for which they have been built. For nearly a thousand years there have been towns and cities in England. They have expressed the purpose for which city builders have thought that a city ought to be built. Once upon a time they were walled cities, built for the purpose of safety from marauding bands or armies of foreigners; then they grew into palatial and broad-avenued cities for the glory and display of victorious princes and their armies marching in procession; then in the last 150 years they have become huge conglomerate masses of factories, docks and streets and business houses and suburbs built for the purpose of industrial progress and efficiency and profit and commerce. And what cities they have been! Grand in many ways—London, Liverpool, Manchester, Plymouth, Coventry; but in other ways so bad, as we all have to admit: smoke-laden, ugly, drab, congested, slum-infested, poverty-stricken, unhealthy, uncultural, unsociable, unspiritual. No wonder we cry with eagerness for a new Coventry, a new Plymouth. In so far as they were bad, they were bad because the purpose for which they were built was not the true, the right, the best purpose for which cities can and ought to be built. What is that purpose to be? The true purpose of a city is that it should be a city for people to live in. It is for the full, rich, personal life of every individual, at every level of his existence, of all ranks and all ages; and also for the rich social life of the community, which is made up of the many individuals and groups of persons within the city. The new City of Coventry and the new City of Plymouth must be for that. Any other purpose must be subservient to that main purpose: the good life of all the persons in the city.

The Physical Side

"Let me elaborate this a little. It must be a good healthy, physical life, for the body is the basis of the good life. God took a human body and lived embodied in it. So there must everywhere in our new city be plenty of space and air, indoors and out of doors, good sanitation and water supply for the humblest citizen. Workers must not have to exhaust their energies in long journeys to and from their work. Factories must be grouped away from dwelling houses, yet near enough to be easily reached.

"It means good recreational life; facilities for games for the whole body of citizens, and the city never so big that a citizen can't walk out into the green-belted depths of the country outside and back again in an afternoon.

"The good life means good cultural life: schools and colleges, of course, for all the young as long as they are young, and schools for adults—for in a proper city the cultural life of the people will grow and develop all through life until old age. Thus the people will know what true beauty is, and naturally demand that everything in their city should be beautiful.

"The good life means good family life: there will be such homes for all the people so that they can have the children they need, and bring them up with due regard to health and work and play and leisure time. The city must be so planned that the chief citizens may be content to make their homes within their city instead of being compelled to escape from its sordidness far into the country.

Development of Community Feeling

"The good life means a good social life. The city will be carefully planned so that smaller portions of it (say, each group of 10,000 people) may develop a close-knit neighborliness and sense of community feeling, with a full equipment of community buildings and rooms. The average city dweller of today has not yet even dreamed of the happiness of city community life, because our cities have not been built to make it possible. In our new cities we must never again segregate the people into areas all of one wage group, but thoroughly mix up the homes of all grades.

The Ultimate Purpose

"Finally, the city must be planned for the eternal life of every citizen. For that is the end and object of all life here upon earth, that in and through his daily life—all of it—a man may learn to have fellowship with God, His eternal Master and Father and Saviour and Lord. That, of course, means that our churches must stand at the center of every neighborhood-unit, calling and gathering the people to the communal worship of God. It means that factories should have their places of worship, where daily work is hallowed to the honor and glory of the Eternal. It means perhaps that in every street, perhaps within a hundred yards of every house, there should be a little oratory into which the people of that tiny neighborhood can easily drop for prayer and quiet which is so easily denied us in our homes. And nothing that happens in man's ordinary activities must make it difficult or impossible, as it so often is now, to live the spiritual life which is his true nature.

"These are just indications of that good life which it is the basis and primary purpose of every city to develop. Utopia? No. I protest that if it was possible for men to plan engines of destruction, based on every invention of modern science, in order to make your city and my city actually a city of death, then it is possible to use the same science to make our cities cities of the good life—if we will that it shall be so.

"We must deliberately seek to apply to our cities of stone and brick and cement, our cities made up of factory, house and civic building, that which applies to the City of God in Heaven the archetype of all earthly cities, 'God is in the midst of her'.

"If we can do this, the new Coventry and the new Plymouth may each be worthy to be called a City of God on earth."

THE ROSE WINDOW OF NOTRE DAME

A Masterpiece of Beauty and Color

The beautiful rose window of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, a work of infinite beauty and splendor, is perhaps the masterpiece of all art glass windows. Built in the Thirteenth Century, it stands today unsurpassed in beauty and excellence of workmanship. If a world-wide search were made for a monumental material approaching the beauty of the assembled colors of the famous Rose Window, such material would be found in

WINNSBORO BLUE GRANITE

"The Silk of the Trade"

It is found, also, that the beautiful colors of Winnsboro Blue Granite come from the various crystals it contains, which are identical in substance to many of the finest of precious stones and jewels of the order of the amethyst and moonstone. When the surface of this granite,—which is a composite of these actual precious stone crystals,—is highly polished, all the scintillating beauty and color of these jewels become visible.

Winnsboro Blue Granite is most lasting because it is composed of the most durable minerals known. It is superbly beautiful because it is made up of the substance of precious stones and gems. Inscriptions on it are clearly legible because of the marked contrast between cut and polished surfaces. Like other high quality materials there are many inferior substitutes which resemble this granite on first appearance, but do not possess its durable qualities and lasting beauty.

MARRIAGE

The marriage of Miss Margaret I. Marston, daughter of Mr. Everett L. Marston of Portsmouth, N. H., to the Rev. Dr. Arthur M. Sherman, took place in the Church of the Epiphany, New York City, at noon on December 28, in the presence of the immediate families.

The ceremony was performed by the rector of the Church, the Rev. John W. Suter, D. D., assisted by the Rev. O. Worth May of Farmville, Va., son-in-law of Dr. Sherman. The marriage service was followed by a celebration of the Holy Communion, the Rev. C. Avery Mason, S. T. D., being the celebrant.

The Rev. Eric M. Tasman, rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, South Orange, N. J., was best man, and the bride's sister, Miss Caroline Marston, was maid of honor. The wedding breakfast was served at the New York Wellesley Club.

Mrs. Sherman has been executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary of the Episcopal Church, at national Church headquarters, and she will continue in that work. Dr. Sherman recently retired as executivxe secretary of Forward in Service, Episcopal Church advance movement, and joins the clergy staff of Grace Church, New York City.

ceaseless barking, as he ran up and down frantically.

"Where was poor little Pussy White, and what would she do?" and Fido's stubby tail seemed to grow stiff, and his heart too cold with fear to keep on trying to stop the men . . . then . . . CRASH . . . CRASH! and down came the tree, pussy cat and all!

Clinging to a branch that stood high above the ground, and not hurt at all, was Pussy White, while Fido stood under the limb and gave little yelps of joy and congratulations.

The woodsmen gave a laugh, as one of them reached up and took pussy gently down, and placed her beside Fido.

"Well, it just looks as though this small pair was also on the search for a Christmas twinkle tree, and tomorrow we shall tell the youngsters that their pets are plucky enough and smart enough, too, to deserve medals!"

They turned then and dragged the tree toward a wagon nearby to take it on to the big house.

Pussy White and Fido went trotting contentedly across the snowy forest, and back up . . . up . . . UP the frozen back stair that led to Leonard and Ruthie's warm, cozy room.

Pussy White curled up in a small ball, the picture of comfort and joy once again. Fido, too, settled down on the rug in front of the glowing fire.

"Master Leonard and Miss Ruthie are fast asleep" said the little doggie with his small tail moving back and forth happily, "and I'm sure they will have the prettiest twinkle tree that ever was in this room!"

"Happy Christmas," purred Pussy White, too happy for any more conversation just then, "let's join them in Dreamland until tomorrow morning."

"Good night, Pussy White . . . and sweet dreams," Fido replied good naturedly.

And they both went to sleep.

THOUGHTS FOR THE THOUGHTFUL

"Mastery of the physical world is perilous without the discipline of the human spirit."

All sunshine makes a desert.
—Arab saying.

Now the year begins anew;
Let us make it good and true,
Give ourselves to God today—
Never take the gift away!

You cannot understand man without God. You cannot understand God without Christ. —Sherwood Eddy.

Under the high white winter stars
The old path still is bright;
Though we have wandered and missed the way
Let us go back tonight.
—Sel.

True humanness and true freedom are present only when man knows and acknowledges his complete dependence on God. —Emil Brunner.

"Christ Himself is the self-communication of God, He Himself is God's visitation to men, God's coming near, God's coming to us, Immanuel."

What is there in the book of the law so clear to each man as that written in his heart? What sacrifice equals the self-denials which loving men and women make for one another? And what altar can be compared with the heart of a good man, on which God Himself accepts the sacrifice?
—Tolstoi.

Nature is the art of God.
—Sir Thomas Browne.

Education is the offspring of the Church from the day the Founder took a child and set him in the midst.
—A. W. Swan.

Let us at all costs avoid the temptation to make of our Christmas worship a withdrawal from the stress and sorrow of life into a realm of unreal beauty. It was into the real world that Christ came, and He comes to us, not to snatch us away by some miracle from the conflict of life, but to give us His peace in our hearts, whereby we may be calmly steadfast while the conflict rages, and be able to bring to the torn world the healing of that peace.
—Archbishop of Canterbury.
